And knowledge upon the part of a mortgagee that his mortgagor was trying to magnify his liabilities, and that he wanted him to take a mortgage for a sum so large that if his creditors should record it as an honest security his lands would be effectively put beyond their reach, makes it his duty to inquire as to the mortgagor's object and purpose, a failure to perform which would invalidate the conveyance. Holt v. Creamer, 34 N. J. Eq. 181 (1881).

And that a creditor, who, knowing the insolvency of his debtor, takes from him a deed of trust to secure the entire amount of his debt, without disclosing the fact that he is indebted to the grantor on another transaction not noticed in his deed, furnishes a strong circumstance for the establishment of his participation in the fraud of a grantor; but if the mortgaged property was insufficient to pay or secure the debt by an amount exceeding the amount of the creditor's indebtedness to the grantor, or if there were other debts and liabilities not provided for exceeding the creditor's indebtedness, this would be sufficient to rebut the presumption of fraud. Alabama L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Pettway, 24 Ala. 544 (1854).

1. Security for present and future advances.

Assignments of personal property by a debtor in insolvent circumstances who has stopped payment to secure a particular creditor for existing claims and engagements, as well as for future advances and responsibilities, will be deemed valid if made bona fide, and there is no reason to doubt the honesty and fairness of the transaction. Hendricks v. Robinson, 2 Johns. Ch. 283 (1817).

A creditor may extend further credit to his debtor though he is largely indebted at the time, and may take security therefor by a mortgage on the debtor's stock in trade, in preference to other creditors, where he acts with the bona fide intention of securing himself. Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367 (1892).

But when a creditor taking security knows that there are other creditors who may be delayed or hindered in the collection of their debts, or has knowledge of facts or circumstances calculated to put him on inquiry and thus charge him with notice, the arrangement he makes must not go beyond securing his own demand. Howell v. Carden, 89 Ala. 100 (1892).

And a creditor cannot enter into a fraudulent between the parties to said conveyance that the said grantees therein, to wit, Rice, Stix, & Co., Pratt, Simmons, & Co., and the Clark Shoe Company, or their agent or agents, were to sell the goods therein conveyed for the purpose of raising money out of which to pay their debts, and to pay the other debts mentioned in the conveyance, and, in pursuance of said agreement, possession of said goods was delivered to their agents, then the effect of said conveyance would be an assignment and void, notwithstanding the fact that scheme to hold his debtor up as deserving of credit, and thus enable him to purchase goods of other creditors for the purpose of taking security on them, knowing that they are not paid for. Ferris v. McQueen, supra.

And here also it would appear that mere notice or knowledge of the debtor's circumstances and intent is sufficient to make the creditor a participant in his designs.

Thus, when a mortgagee takes a mortgage with knowledge of a fraudulent intent upon the part of the mortgagor, the transaction is not bona fide and is invalid as to creditors, although a full and valuable consideration was given. Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557, 75 Am. Dec. 234 (1859).

And a vendee or mortgagee need not do any act in furtherance of a fraudulent design of the vendor or mortgagor in order to render him a participant in the fraud, other than the taking of the fraudulent conveyance with knowledge or notice direct or constructive that the conveyance is a prohibited one and is made with a fraudulent intent. Kansas Moline Plow Co. v. Sherman, 3 Okla. 204 (1895).

So, a mortgage made by an insolvent debtor to secure $4,500 of indebtedness and $1,000 advanced by the mortgagee at the time and with knowledge of the insolvency of the debtor, is fraudulent and void as to other creditors. Wallis v. Adoue, 76 Tex. 118 (1890).

And a creditor who takes a chattel mortgage and an assignment of accounts from his debtor upon his stock of goods, consisting of his whole property worth from $15,000 to $17,000, exclusive of the book accounts, to secure an indebtedness of from $1,200 to $2,000 and an advance of cash of $8,000, knowing that the debtor was insolvent and that his creditors were pushing him, is not a bona fide purchaser within the protection of the statute of frauds. Herrmann v. McKinney, 47 Fed. Rep. 758 (1891).

So, a deed of trust given by a debtor of all his property and the crops he would raise for the two following years, to one who knew of his embarrassed financial condition, to secure a note for $4,000 when he only owed $19 or $20, and the grantee advanced $400 and the property exclusive of the crops was worth over $1,800, will be presumed to have been fraudulent with the participation of the mortgagee, and the burden of proof will rest upon him to explain the facts and overcome such presumption. Henry v. Harrell, 57 Ark. 569 (1893).

And a mortgage given by a debtor to his creditor for $800 where the indebtedness to be secured was $400 and interest, the creditor having agreed to advance $100 more, which he never did, shows a participation by the mortgagee in the fraudulent intent of the mortgagor, where he knew that the mortgagor was in failing circumstances at the time he took the mortgage. Bussard v. Bullitt (Iowa) 64 N. W. 658 (1895).

And a transaction by which a creditor, with knowledge that his debtor must fail unless he received the relief asked for, lent him $2,000 and took a transfer of mortgages for the payment of that sum, and also $4,000 due on account of previous transactions, is not vitiated as to that part which is fair and legal by the incorporation of the two claims, but will stand as security for the $4,000, but will be set aside as to creditors as to the $2,000. Brown v. Kenner, 3 Mart. (La.) 270 (1814).

So, a mortgage for a larger amount than was loaned thereon, given with a view of covering future loans, is not conclusive evidence of fraud, but is open to explanation as to the good or bad faith of the parties. Allen v. Fuget, 42 Kan. 672 (1890).

And mortgages given, not only to secure an existing indebtedness, but providing also for security for advances and for overdrafts which might thereafter be made, are not thereby rendered fraudulent and void as to creditors where the mortgagor was at the time in active business, although it may subsequently turn out that he was in fact unable to pay his debts. Sabin v. Columbia River Lumber & F. Co. 25 Or. 15 (1893).

And a mortgage obtained by a creditor from a failing debtor to secure his indebtedness will not be deemed to have been made for the purpose of hindering and delaying other creditors because given upon the promise of the creditor that he would furnish him other goods to the amount of $700. Rouse v. Frank, 14 Ga. 623 (1890).

So, in Butts v. Peacock, 28 Wis. 359 (1868), the question whether a chattel mortgage for a greater amount than was due, though designed to secure future advances, is void as against creditors where such design does not appear on its face, was raised but not decided.

j. Inclusion of simulated debts.

A conveyance collusively made between a debtor and a creditor, professedly to secure an indebtedness which did not exist, is void as to other creditors, though it covers and includes a real indebtedness less than that named in the conveyance. Cordes v. Straszer, 8 Mo. App. 61 (1879).

And unless a deed of trust made by a debtor to his creditor is a sham which was never intended to be enforced, other creditors can vacate it by showing that the secured debts are simulated. Surget v. Boyd, 57 Miss. 485 (1879).

Thus, a deed made for the purpose of indemnifying a security against a responsibility created as a pretense for making the deed and with the purpose to thereby secure to the debtor the use of the property, is fraudulent and void as against creditors. Leadman v. Harris, 3 Dev. L. 144 (1881).

And a deed executed by a debtor unable to pay his debts to a grantee who knew of his insolvency, on the pretense that he was indebted to the estate of the grantee's deceased husband, with the intent of reserving the property conveyed from the grantor's creditors, is fraudulent and void. Walcott v. Almy, 6 McLean, 23 (1853).

And a mortgage purporting to secure a debt a part of which is simulated by the mortgagor with intent to prevent a levy on the property of his creditors and accepted by the mortgagee with knowledge of such intent, is fraudulent and void as against such creditors. Hall v. Heydon, 41 Ala. 252 (1867).

So, proof that a part of the consideration for a transfer was made up of a false and pretended debt for board and washing which was wholly fictitious, and which the parties to the transaction falsely concocted to make up a full and fair consideration therefor, is sufficient to establish a fraudulent intent on the part of the grantee which will invalidate the conveyance. Baldwin v. Short, 125 N. Y. 553 (1891).

And the surrender by a father of a bond and mortgage against his son for cancellation for accounts claimed by the son against the father, the

it purported to be a bill of sale on its face."

The plaintiffs excepted to the giving of each of said instructions.

There were a verdict and a judgment for the defendants. The plaintiffs filed a motion for a new trial, took a bill of exceptions, and appealed to this court.

greater portion of which, if existing at all, were prior to the execution of the claim, is fraudulent as against the father's creditors. First Nat. Bank v. Cummins, 38 N. J. Eq. 191 (1884).

And the purchase of lands for which a deed is taken in the name of the grantee's infant daughter, who has no means to pay any part of the purchase money, after which the grantee gets his daughter to unite with him in a deed to a third person for a simulated consideration, who takes with full knowledge of all the circumstances and in aid of his design to defraud creditors, establishes a bold case of fraud. Biddinger v. Willand, 67 Md. 359 (1887).

And a conveyance by a husband directly to his wife in consideration of a valid debt due her is fraudulent and void as to existing creditors of the husband where the consideration was much less than the value of the property and in order to bring it up to the required amount they added to said valid debt other indebtedness of the husband to the wife, having no existence in fact, and where the wife participated in the attempt to sustain the conveyance it will not be permitted to stand as security for the valid portion of the consideration. Webb v. Ingham, 29 W. Va. 389 (1887).

So, in Eureka Iron & S. Works v. Bresnahan, 66 Mich. 489 (1887), a fictitious debt included in a mortgage intended as a mere cover was spoken of and treated as rendering the transaction fraudulent as against creditors.

But a transfer in payment of a valid and subsisting debt cannot be revoked on the charge of simulation where it was really intended to pass title to the property and the creditor acknowledged full payment. Pochelu v. Catonnet, 40 La. Ann. 327 (1888).

And including in a mortgage a debt to become due from the mortgagor at a future day does not render the mortgage fraudulent. Carpenter v. Muren, 42 Barb. 300 (1864).

And a mortgage given by a debtor to a creditor to secure a bona fide debt, which also provides for the satisfaction of a simulated debt claimed to be owing another person after the satisfaction of the first, is not void as to the original, genuine creditor where he did not participate in the fraud of the mortgagor. Anderson v. Hooks, 9 Ala. 704 (1846).

And a conveyance by insolvents to their mother is not rendered fraudulent as to the former's creditors because the consideration in the deed includes some money expended for property belonging to the mother where the bona fide indebtedness from the insolvents without such land is more than the value of the property conveyed. Troy Fertilizer Co. v. Norman (Ala.) 18 So. 201 (1895).

So, a bill of sale taken by a creditor from a failing debtor, of articles of personal property which were scattered, with the agreement that he was to collect the property and pay his expenses out of the proceeds besides paying his debt and dividing the surplus among the consenting creditors, entered into in good faith, is not a fraudulent conveyance which will be set aside on application of other creditors. Ewing v. Runkle, 20 Ill. 448 (1858).

Whether the consideration of the assignment be real or fictitious, and whether there have been an actual delivery and acceptance of the goods, are questions for the jury. Kinnear v. White, 2 Kerr (N. B.) 235.

31 L. R. A.

Messrs. George W. Murphy and Rose, Hemingway, & Rose, for appellants:

When property is turned over at a reasonable price in payment of a just debt, fraud cannot be predicated of the transaction no matter what the motives of the parties may be.

Covanhoven v. Hart, 21 Pa. 495, 60 Am. Dec.

See also, as to conveyances and mortgages including fictitious debts, infra, VI., Participation by one of several beneficiaries.

k. Reservation of benefits.

The mere reservation of benefits to the grantor in a transfer of property to pay or secure a debt does not show a fraudulent intent participated in by the grantee or mortgagee which will invalidate the transaction as against creditors.

Thus, a bill of sale of all the grantor's then existing and after-acquired property by way of mortgage to secure an existing debt and future advances is not void under the statute 13 Eliz. chap. 5, unless it is made as a mere cloak for retaining a benefit to the grantor. Re Games, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 314, 40 L. T. N. S. 789, 27 Week. Rep. 744 (1879).

And an assignment by an insolvent debtor of a chose in action to certain of his creditors for the purpose of securing their demands, reserving the surplus to himself, is not invalid where there is no extrinsic evidence of an intent to defraud other creditors. Leitch v. Hollister, 4 N. Y. 211 (1850).

To render a mortgage void by reason of some benefit resulting to the mortgagor, such benefit must have been given for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors. Whitson v. Griggs, 39 Kan. 211 (1888).

A creditor may receive property from his debtor for the purpose of securing his own demands, but if he goes beyond this and secures a benefit to the creditor, knowing him to be insolvent however, he violates both the letter and the spirit of the statute, and his conveyance will be set aside. Crawford v. Kirksey, 55 Ala. 282, 28 Am. Rep. 704 (1876).

And a sale by a debtor to a creditor in payment of a debt is invalid where it provides for and secures a secret benefit to the debtor, the creditor knowing his circumstances or being chargeable with knowledge thereof. Seamen v. Nolen, 68 Ala. 463 (1880).

And the same rule applies where a benefit is secured to the debtor to the knowledge of the creditor beyond that which the law without such agreement would secure him. McDowell v. Steele, 87 Ala. 493 (1888).

Thus, a reservation in a mortgage given by a debtor to a creditor in contemplation of insolvency of power to sell the partner's assets, accounting for the proceeds, will create a presumption of fraud which will shift the burden of proof to the creditor to explain the transaction, where he was aware of the contemplated insolvency. Tickner v. Wiswall, 9 Ala. 305 (1846).

And a conveyance by an insolvent debtor to a creditor of all his property in payment of a debt which was less than one fourth of the true value of such property and about one fourth of the price which a purchaser offered and stood ready to give, raises a violent presumption of a secret trust which will invalidate the conveyance in the absence of anything to rebut the presumption. Shelton v. Church, 38 Conn. 416 (1871).

So, a secret trust wilfully and knowingly created by the grantor and beneficiary for the purpose of concealing from the creditors of the grantor a portion of the debtor's property, and ultimately depriving them of any benefit to be derived therefrom, under cover of a conveyance to secure a bona fide indebtedness, is a fraud upon creditors

57; Christian v. Greenwood, 23 Ark. 264, 79 Am. Dec. 104; Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Carnes, 56 Ark. 417; Gist v. Barrow, 42 Ark. 525; Bump, Fraud. Conv. 3d ed. 189; Wait, Fraud. Conv. § 232; Hudgins v. Morrow, 47 Ark. 515; Daniel v. Vaccaro, 41 Ark. 325.

The inducements which may have led to the assignment are not to be inquired into. The law deals with the act of the party, and not with the secret springs which prompted it.

Bump, Fraud. Conv. 3d ed. 357; Wait, Fraud. Conv. § 841; Pike v. Bacon, 21 Me. 286, 88 Am. Dec. 259.

The fraud justifying an attachment is a vioand should be set aside. Roberts v. Barnes, 127 Mo. 406 (1895).

And the reservation of a life estate in such a conveyance is a fraud upon creditors. Berry v. Hass, 1 Ohio C. D. 48 (1898).

And an assignment by a debtor with the intention of not merely paying or securing a debt but of receiving a security and benefit to himself free from the claims of creditors, made to a creditor to whom he owes a debt considerably less than the value of the articles assigned, with the private understanding that he shall have the privilege of paying the debt within a reasonable time and of claiming the property, is fraudulent and void as against creditors. Humphries v. Freeman, 22 Tex. 45 (1858).

And the receipt of goods from a debtor by the agent of a creditor in payment of the claim under a secret understanding that the excess over the debts due to the grantor of the proceeds of the goods should be held for the debtor or that there should be a secret trust for his benefit, invalidates the transfer as against other creditors, although such preferred creditor may not have participated in the intent; as the agent's act in negotiating the transfer must be deemed in law to be his. Greenlee v. Blum, 50 Tex. 124 (1883).

So, an agreement by a mortgagor, made with intent to defraud creditors, with a purchaser at a sale under the mortgage, not to restate it but to hold the land in trust for the mortgagor and permit him to redeem it whenever his relations with his creditors would allow him to do so, is fraudulent and void as to creditors. Musselman v. Kent, 33 Ind. 452 (1870).

And a trust deed executed by a debtor on his property to secure a creditor, the creditor transferring one half of the property to a trustee for the benefit of the debtor's wife and children, which one half was secured by the trust deed, is tantamount to a reservation by the debtor himself of so much of his property for the use of his wife and children, and is fraudulent and void as against other creditors, though the debtor refused to secure any part of the creditor's debt unless the creditor would make such transfer to his wife and children. Kissam v. Edmonston, 1 Ired. Eq. 180 (1840).

But a creditor making a valid purchase from his debtor has the right to give or sell the goods purchased to the debtor's wife. Bamberger, B. & Co. v. Schoofield, 160 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 374 (1895).

And the mere fact that a debtor knows when he confesses judgment to a bona fide creditor that the creditor intends to settle the larger portion of the debt on the debtor's family, will not make the confession fraudulent as against other creditors. Cureton v. Doby, 10 Rich. Eq. 411, 73 Am. Dec. 96 (1858).

And a sale by a debtor to his creditor at a fair price in satisfaction of a debt will not be held fraudulent though made under the belief that the property would be set over to the use of the debtor's family. Young v. Stallings, 5 B. Mon. 307 (1845).

And such a conveyance, made pursuant to a voluntary proposition by the creditor that he would convey the land to the debtor's wife, who was his daughter, as a gift or advancement, is not fraudulent as to other creditors of the grantor. Smith v. Riggs, 56 Iowa, 488 (1881).

In Smith v. Riggs, supra, Kissam v. Edmonston, 13 L. R. A.

supra, was distinguished on the ground that in that case the debtor insisted against the protest of the grantor that one half of the amount due should be secured to his wife and children.

So, such a conveyance is valid though the creditor knew that it would delay or defeat his other creditors, and though immediately afterwards the creditor conveyed the property by deed of gift to his debtor's wife, who was his daughter. Young v. Dumas, 39 Ala. 60 (1863).

And a conveyance by an insolvent to his father-in-law, who knew of his insolvency, of mortgaged property in satisfaction of the mortgages thereon, and the immediate reconveyance thereof by the father-in-law to the vendor's wife as a gift out of sympathy for her, is not fraudulent as against creditors. Rusie v. Jameson, 62 Iowa, 52 (1883).

And a deed made by an insolvent brother to his sister in satisfaction of an honest debt, without any agreement for reconveyance, and which was not induced by her promise to reconvey, is valid as against creditors of the brother, though the sister reconveyed to a trustee in trust for the wife and children of such brother a few days afterwards, and the brother expected that his wife and children would receive some donation from his sister. McPherson v. McPherson, 21 S. C. 281 (1883).

And a sale by a debtor in good faith of property to a creditor in payment of the latter's claim, is not fraudulent though there was an understanding between the agents of the parties that the property would be reconveyed when the vendee was fully paid. Cary-Halidy Lumber Co. v. Cain, 70 Miss. 628 (1898).

But a conveyance of real estate, absolute in terms but made for the purpose of securing a debt, with an understanding between the parties that the land is to be reconveyed upon the payment of the debt and interest, is fraudulent and void, not only against existing creditors of the grantor, but against those who become his creditors after its execution. Ladd v. Wiggin, 35 N. H. 421, 69 Am. Dec. 551 (1857).

That a trust or reservation in favor of the debtor may render a conveyance by him to his creditor in payment of his claim invalid as against other creditors, is also recognized in Howell v. Carden, 99 Ala. 100 (1892), and Edwards v. Dickson, 66 Tex. 613 (1896).

And the absence of any such trust or reservation is recognized as an element of the validity of such a transfer, in H. B. Claflin Co. v. Rodenberg, 101 Ala. 213 (1893); Heyer Bros. v. Bromberg Bros. 74 Ala. 634 (1893); Reynolds v. Wehnman (Tex.) 25 S. W. 38 (1894); Traders' Nat. Bank v. Day, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 569 (1894); Bullock v. Gordon, 4 Munt. 450 (1816).

So, secret trusts and reservations are also condemned, in Crawford v. Neal, 144 U. S. 585, 36 L. ed. 552 (1901); Currie v. Bowman, 25 Or. 304 (1894); La Belle Wagon Works v. Tidball, 69 Tex. 161 (1897); Hornthall v. Schoenfeld, 79 Ala. 109 (1885); Surget v. Boyd, 57 Miss. 485 (1879).

Commissions which a debtor is to receive on a stock of goods to be sold by him by agreement which he had transferred to his creditor in payment of a debt, and of which he was to retain possession for the purpose of selling them for the creditor, do not constitute a reservation of an interest in the property which will render the transaction fraudulent as against creditors. La Belle Wagon Works v. Tidball, supra.

lation of the statute of frauds of 18 Eliz. chap. 5. the statute of fraudulent conveyance which has been re-enacted as §§ 3373-3375, of Mansfield's (Ark.) Digest.

As long as the debtor keeps his property himself he is within his right. And to say that the plaintiffs could have committed a wrong by advising the debtor to do what he had the right to do is a contradiction in terms.

Erb v. Cole, 81 Ark. 556.

The fraud must lie in the transfer.

Bump, Fraud. Conv. 3d ed. 18.

Whether a mortgagee, who has taken a mortgage from his debtor as security, participated with him in an intention to have the mortgage serve the purpose of securing an unauthorized benefit, or of hindering, delaying, or defrauding other creditors, is a question of fact for the jury. Howell v. Carden, supra.

1. Taking conveyance fraudulent on its face.

The acceptance by a creditor of a conveyance by his debtor to pay or secure his claim containing provisions designed to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, would seem to amount to a participation in the debtor's fraud; at any rate such is the case where such provisions are brought to his notice.

Thus, the acceptance by a cestui que trust of the provisions of a deed of trust which is clearly fraudulent on its face is equivalent to notice of the fraud, and amounts to a participation therein. Livesay v. Beard, 22 W. Va. 585 (1883).

And the acceptance by an assignee or trustee of an assignment or trust deed, containing to his knowledge on its face one or more falsehoods on a material point, calculated to deceive and mislead creditors to their injury, renders him chargeable with notice of his grantor's fraudulent intent. Douglas Merchandise Co. v. Laird, 37 W. Va. 687 (1883).

And claiming a benefit under a trust deed, fraudulent on its face, by a person attempted to be secured thereby, renders him a participant in the fraud, and precludes him from receiving any benefit. Palmer v. Giles, 5 Jones, Eq. 75 (1850).

And in Klee v. Reitzenberger, 23 W. Va. 749 (1884), it was held that in the absence of any fraudulent purpose on the part of the vendee, or knowledge of such purpose on the part of the vendor, his right to the security taken cannot be affected unless the deed is fraudulent on its face.

So, a grantee in a fraudulent conveyance having notice of the fraudulent provision therein is not a bona fide purchaser, though his only motive was to secure payment of his own debt which was just, and such fraudulent provisions were forced upon him as the only means of obtaining payment. Garland v. Rives, 4 Rand. (Va.) 282, 15 Am. Dec. 756 (1826).

And if a creditor be privy to a fraudulent intent on the part of his debtor, and take a deed to secure his own debt with provisions to hinder and delay other creditors, the deed will be void, though his motive was to secure his own debt and the other provisions were forced upon him by the debtor as the only means of having the debt secured. Parr v. Saunders (Va.), 11 S. E. 979 (1880); Goshorn v. Snodgrass, 17 W. Va. 767 (1881).

The taking by a creditor of a chattel mortgage from his debtor as extra security, which mortgage could not be sustained under the laws of the state, however, does not show an intent to defraud which will invalidate a subsequent transfer to the creditor, but merely shows that he mistook as to the validity of the extra security. Buford v. Cook, 36 Fed. Rep. 21 (1888).

m. Retention of possession.

It is not here intended to treat generally the questions of the retention of possession under and of provisions therefor in deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances. The design in this subdivision is to consider such retention only so far as it may be deemed to furnish evidence of a fraudulent intent as against creditors participated in by the transferee.

The retention of possession by a debtor who has sold property to a creditor in payment of his claim would at least appear to be a badge of fraud to be considered in connection with other circumstances in determining the existence of a fraudulent intent participated in by the creditor.

Thus, a conveyance of chattels directly from a husband to his wife by a bill of sale which was delivered, followed by a mere constructive delivery of chattels, the husband continuing to use the property as his own, which was proved for registration in the night about the time the husband was sued by a creditor, is not presumed in law to be fraudulent, but upon the establishment of an indebtedness of the husband to his wife the question of fraud is one for the jury to be submitted with a caution to scrutinize the transaction closely owing to the relationship of the parties. State, Brown, v. Mitchell, 102 N. C. 347 (1886).

So, a conveyance by a debtor who, pending suit against him, had threatened to put his property out of his hands unless the plaintiff would settle for a certain sum, which she refused, made to his brother for a balance pretended to be due on a settlement of their partnership accounts, the land being worth several times the amount of such pretended balance, and the deed having been put on record, and verdict found against him in said suit, after which the grantor continued to manage the property and receive the profits as before,—will be deemed fraudulent and void as against the judgment creditor in such suit. Hamlin v. Wright, 26 Wis. 50 (1870).

And a transfer for a grossly inadequate price without taking security for the purpose named, giving unusual length of credit for the deferred payment, made in payment of an alleged indebtedness of a father to a son, both residing together as members of one family, the indebtedness and insolvency of the grantor being well known to the grantee, while suits were threatened and pending, made with secrecy and concealment, keeping the deed unacknowledged and unrecorded for over a year, the grantor remaining in possession as before the conveyance and cautioning the justice who took the acknowledgment to keep the matter private, make a prima facie case of fraud which will put upon the grantee the burden of repelling the conclusion that the grantor entertained a fraudulent design, fully known to and participated in by the grantee. Hickman v. Trout, 83 Va. 478 (1887).

And an assignment by a trader in embarrassed circumstances of substantially his whole property to a single creditor for an express consideration of the release of a debt then owing to the creditor of £3,271 when in fact only £1,370 was due, accompanied by his verbal agreement that he should undertake the payment of the assignor's debts, and followed by an agreement by the assignor to manage the business as a servant of the assignee at a weekly salary, after which the business was carried on in the name of the assignor as before, with nothing to show that he was not the real as well as the apparent owner, is void as against a trustee in bankruptcy as an act of bankruptcy, and as against the assignor's creditor under the statute 13 Eliz. chap. 5. Ex parte Chaplin, L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 319, 53 L. J. Ch. N. S. 732 (1884).

So, in Hempstead v. Johnston, 18 Ark. 123, 65 Am.

And a conveyance to be fraudulent must be calculated to assist in the perpetration of a fraud.

Hill v. Woodberry, 49 Fed. Rep. 138, 4 U. S. App. 69; Baer v. Rooks, 50 Fed. Rep. 898, 4 U. S. App. 403; Burrill, Assignm. § 351.

Dec. 458 (1856), the rule is said to be that such possession subsequent to the sale is prima facie evidence of fraud, and it has been held to be conclusive.

Thus, in Kirtland v. Snow, 20 Conn. 23 (1849), it was held that where a creditor neglects to take and retain possession of property purchased in payment of his claim, it is conclusive evidence of a trust which will render the transaction fraudulent and void as to other creditors.

So, the fact that a mortgagor of personal property is permitted to retain possession thereof and sell from the stock in the usual course of business raises a presumption of fraud as to creditors, and casts upon the mortgagee the burden of proving good faith, but will not per se render the mortgage void where it is not fraudulent on its face. Sherwin v. Gaghagen, 39 Neb. 238 (1894).

And the retention of possession of mortgaged property by the mortgagor for three years after the date of the mortgage, the mortgagor being insolvent and having no other attachable property, is a circumstance tending to show fraud, but is not conclusive evidence of it. North v. Crowell, 11 N. H. 251 (1840).

But retention of possession by a mortgagor or grantor in a deed of trust, is not per se fraudulent. It may or may not be fraudulent as to other creditors according to the circumstances of the case, but in order that the possession may be innocent, the deed should be recorded or notice of it brought home to the party before he has dealings with the mortgagor. Hilliard v. Cagle, 46 Miss. 309 (1872).

And the presumption of fraud arising from the absence of a change of possession of mortgaged property is not conclusive but may be entirely rebutted by proof of good faith and an absence of an intent to defraud. First Nat. Bank v. Lowrey Bros. 36 Neb. 290 (1893).

So, a mortgagee who establishes his good faith and the absence of any fraudulent intent need not also explain why there was not an immediate delivery of the property and an actual and continued change of possession. Ibid.

And the fact that mortgaged goods were not removed from the store, and that one of the mortgagors remained in the store apparently in charge or at least partly so, and that one of the mortgagors refused to secure other debts, either by turning over goods or by executing mortgages, and that goods were purchased of other creditors shortly before the execution of the mortgage, is not sufficient to overturn a finding that the mortgage was valid, where it was given to secure bona fide debts and the intent to defraud is denied. Grimes v. Farrington Bros. 19 Neb. 44 (1896).

But the rule that possession by the vendor subsequent to a sale is prima facie evidence of fraud does not apply to mortgages and deeds of trust where the grantor by the terms of the instrument is permitted to retain possession of the property until default of payment. Hempstead v. Johnston, 18 Ark. 123, 65 Am. Dec. 458 (1856).

And the possession of a husband and wife at the time of taking a mortgage from the wife upon property in her name will not charge the mortgagee with notice of fraud on the part of the mortgagor, or affect levies made upon the property as that of the husband subsequent to the conveyance to the wife. Shorten v. Drake, 38 Ohio St. 76 (1882).

And fraud will not be inferred in a deed of trust

Fraud does not consist in mere intention but in intention carried out by hurtful acts.

Wait, Fraud. Conv. § 3.

Even if Jones & Fulton had had the money to pay the plaintiffs, they would have had the right to take the goods in preference.

unless it postpones payment for an unreasonable length of time after maturity of debts secured by it, and provides that the grantor shall retain possession of the property until default of payment with a fraudulent intent to cover up the property for the use of the grantor. And a deed of trust made on the 8th of April to secure debts then due, allowing the debtor until the 1st of January following to pay such debts, and permitting the grantor to hold possession of the property until default, will not be held to be fraudulent and void as to creditors where it does not appear that the value of the property embraced in the deed exceeded the amount of the debt secured thereby. Hempstead v. Johnston, supra.

But a mortgage taken by a bona fide creditor who had notice of the insolvency of his debtor, including stock and provisions then on hand or which might afterwards at any time be on hand, postponing the law day nearly six years and leaving the possession in the meantime in the mortgagors, is fraudulent and void as to other creditors where the property greatly exceeds in value the amount of the debt. Wiley v. Knight, 27 Ala. 338 (1855).

And a mortgage executed by an insolvent or failing debtor to a creditor who has knowledge of his condition and whose debt does not bear interest, conveying the debtor's entire stock together with such other goods as he might from time to time purchase, fixing no law day but authorizing the mortgagee to sell at public or private sale on default, is fraudulent and void as against existing creditors. Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701 (1858).

And where a mortgage was given to a sister of the mortgagor's wife who lived in his family on the mortgaged premises, which was not recorded because the wife did not join, but was surrendered and a second executed upon the commencement of action against the mortgagor by his creditors without any adjustment of accounts, the wife joining, which was duly recorded, it is fraudulent and void as against creditors, where the mortgagor carried on the farming business in part in his own name, and acted according to his own wishes, rendering no account and claiming that the mortgage was given to protect his home from his other creditors, though it was given to secure a real indebtedness. Decker v. Wilson (N. J.) 15 Atl. 816 (1888).

And in Howell v. Carden, 99 Ala. 100 (1892), an unreasonable postponement of the collection of a judgment secured by mortgage, the mortgagee allowing the mortgagor to retain and use the property in the meantime, the property being perishable or of such a character as to be profitable in its use, was treated together with the fact that the mortgage covered substantially all of the debtor's property and more than enough to afford ample security and that the mortgagee knew of other creditors, as sufficient to invalidate the mortgage.

And an assignment by a debtor to a creditor under which the debtor was permitted to remain in possession, considered in connection with the fact that the instrument was withheld from record to prevent injury to the debtor's credit, there being nothing to show the change of ownership, was held sufficient to invalidate the transaction as against creditors, in Means v. Dowd, 128 U. S. 273, 32 L. ed. 429 (1888).

That a creditor who has taken possession of a stock of mortgaged goods under a mortgage given to him by the debtor permits the debtor to sell such property under a written contract as agent, however, does not necessarily or conclusively show a collusive understanding between them. Standard Implement Co. v. Parlin & O. Co. 51 Kan. 632 (1893).

There can be no assignment unless there is a conveyance to a trustee to raise a fund to pay debts, and here there is neither a trustee nor a fund to be raised.

Fecheimer v. Robertson, 53 Ark. 101; Riogan v. Wolf, 53 Ark. 538; Goodbar v. Locke, 56 Ark. 315; Costello v. Chamberlain, 36 Neb. 45.

And the creditor making a valid purchase of his debtor has the right to employ him as clerk to assist in winding up the business. Bamberger, B. & Co. v. Schoolfield, 160 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 374 (1895).

And the employment by a creditor of a debtor who has transferred to him his mill and residence in payment of a debt, to run the mill at a fixed commission per month and use of the residence, does not necessarily render the transaction fraudulent in fact. Crawford v. Neal, 144 U. S. 585, 36 L. ed. 552 (1891).

And the employment by a trustee in a trust deed under which he had taken possession absolutely, several days after its execution, of one of the grantors to assist in the sale of goods, which was not prearranged, and permission to one of such creditors to use a buggy and horses which were embraced in the conveyance, will not invalidate the deed as against creditors. Lewis v. Alexander (Tex.) 31 S. W. 414 (1895).

And the insertion in a deed of trust of a provision that the trustees shall employ the assignor at a fixed salary to help to dispose of the property conveyed does not render the deed void upon its face, but is evidence of a fraudulent intent which should be submitted to the jury. Frank v. Robinson, 96 N. C. 28 (1887).

So, the use by a mortgagor of a growing crop, of some of it, will not invalidate the mortgage as to other property or authorize an inference that such use was by virtue of a secret benefit reserved to the mortgagor, in the absence of anything to show that the mortgagees consented to or knew of such use. Pugh v. Harwell (Ala.) 18 So. 535 (1895).

And the sale thereof by a mortgagor does not affect the validity of the mortgage, in the absence of anything to show that the mortgagees had any knowledge that the mortgagor proposed to sell or was selling such property. Ibid.

And the use of a quantity necessary to secure the harvesting of the crop does not vitiate the mortgage though the mortgagee consented thereto. Ibid.

And the transfer of a small part of mortgaged property to a third person in payment of a debt, with the consent of the mortgagee, will not of itself render the mortgage fraudulent and void as against creditors, there being no agreement by which the mortgagor was to sell any part of the goods in the usual course of trade. Chicago Lumber Co. v. Fisher, 18 Neb. 334 (1885).

And an appropriation of moneys by a mortgagor under a security in the nature of a mortgage providing that the mortgagor was to act as the agent of the transferees in disposing of the goods and render weekly statements of accounts to his principals with remittances, does not render the transaction invalid as to creditors unless it is shown that such appropriation of the proceeds was with the knowledge or the consent of the mortgagee company or some member thereof. Havens v. Exstein, 31 N. Y. S. R. 43 (1890).

But a mortgage given with a tacit or express understanding between the parties that the mortgagor should be permitted to deal in the property for his own benefit, is fraudulent and void as to creditors, as it must be presumed one of the purposes, if not the main purpose, for giving it, was to cover up the mortgagor's property and thus hinder and delay his other creditors. Potts v. Hart, 99 N. Y. 168 (1885); Hedman v. Anderson, 6 Neb. 392 (1877).

And an agreement between a mortgagor and a mortgagee that the mortgagor may sell or dispose of any of the property mortgaged for his own benefit establishes conclusively that the mortgage was not given for the sole purpose of securing a debt to the mortgagee or of giving him any real interest in the property, but for the purpose of better enabling the mortgagor to enjoy the benefit thereof at the expense of his creditors. Russell v. Winne, 37 N. Y. 591, 97 Am. Dec. 755 (1868).

The reservation in a mortgage by the mortgagor of the right to sell the mortgaged property in the usual course of trade shows conclusively that it was intended as a shield and protection to the mortgagor, and operates as a fraud on the rights of the creditors of the mortgagor, and is therefore void though the mortgagee had taken possession of the property through his agents. Wells v. Langbein, 20 Fed. Rep. 183 (1884).

And the subsequent dealing by a mortgagor with mortgaged property with the knowledge and assent of the mortgagee is sufficient to warrant a finding of the existence of an arrangement that the mortgagee might sell and dispose of the property and apply the avails to his own use. Potts v. Hart, supra.

And it has been repeatedly held that a mortgage or a deed of trust providing that the grantors should be permitted to remain in possession of the property conveyed and use the same and enjoy the profits thereof entire and distinct, is fraudulent on its face. But these cases have been omitted as turning upon the question of validity of the instrument rather than upon that of the fraudulent participation of the mortgagee or grantee.

Whether a mortgage was taken by a creditor with a bona fide intent to protect himself or with intent to wrong or defraud others is a question for the jury where the evidence tends to show that there was some qualified and conditional understanding as to the possession of the mortgaged property. Crawford v. Nolan, 70 Iowa, 97 (1896).

And where a mortgage is lawful upon its face, and proves to have been given to secure a debt fairly and honestly owing by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and has been filed according to statute, indication of fraud arising from possession of the goods and the conduct of the parties respecting them must be determined by the jury. Gardner v. McEwen, 19 N. Y. 123 (1859).

So, where goods sold or mortgaged are left in the possession and under the control of the vendor or mortgagor, the statutory presumption of fraud arising therefrom may be rebutted by proof of good faith; and where there is evidence of good faith, as, for example, proof of consideration, the question of fraud is one of fact for the jury. Thompson v. Blanchard, 4 N. Y. 303 (1850).

And so is the good faith of a mortgage taken by a father from his son on his stock in trade for an amount which exceeds its value, leaving the son in possession and permitting him to sell goods in the ordinary course of business, where the son began business on money borrowed from his father shortly before, and there was no reason to suppose he had made money. King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597 (1880).

and thereby induces him to levy is a party to the trespass.

Davis v. Newkirk, 5 Denio, 94; Knight v. Nelson, 117 Mass. 459; Loejoy v. Murray, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 9, 18 L. ed. 131; Herring v. Hop-pock, 15 N. Y. 413; Cabell v. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. 81 Tex. 108; Wetzell v. Waters, 18 Mo. 396; Leshner v. Getman, 30 Minn. 329; Screws v. Watson, 48 Ala. 628; Luebbering v. Oberkoetter, 1 Mo. App. 393; Lewis v. Johns, 34 Cal. 629; 2 Freem. Executions, § 273, p. 892; 2 Brandt, Suretyship, § 490.

n. Failure to record.

The failure of a creditor to record a conveyance given him by his debtor, or to cause it to be recorded, is not as an independent and isolated fact sufficient evidence of a fraudulent intent. First Nat. Bank v. Jaffray, 41 Kan. 601 (1899); Stewart v. Hopkins, 30 Ohio St. 502 (1876).

And the withholding of a trust deed from record does not render it fraudulent per se as to third persons who without notice of it extend credit to the grantor. Day v. Goodbar, 69 Miss. 687 (1892).

But it is a matter for consideration in connection with the other facts of the case in determining the question as to whether or not it was fraudulent. Stewart v. Hopkins, and Day v. Goodbar, supra.

In Day v. Goodbar, supra, Gill v. Griffith, 2 Md. Ch. 270 (1848), infra, was distinguished upon the ground that it was decided under Maryland statutes so widely different from those of Mississippi that it is inapplicable there.

And Hilliard v. Cagle, 46 Miss. 309 (1872), infra, was criticised therein and spoken of as a case valuable only as showing a state of facts which led the court to the conclusion that the scheme there condemned was fraudulent as to subsequent creditors.

Thus, the failure of a nonresident grantee in an absolute conveyance intended as a mortgage, to record it, will not charge him with participating in a fraudulent intent entertained by the grantor, where he did not know that registration was necessary. Tryon v. Flournoy, 80 Ala. 321 (1885).

And the neglect of a creditor holding a mortgage to secure judgment notes to record the mortgage, and his failure to take prompt measures to collect the notes when due, or give notice to others dealing with the debtor when not asked to do so, is not evidence of fraud as against subsequent creditors. Field v. Ridgely, 116 Ill. 424 (1896).

So, the failure of a creditor to place a deed of trust given to secure an indebtedness due him on record will not invalidate the deed in the absence of anything to show that it was withheld from record in pursuance of an agreement or understanding with the debtor. Williams v. Simons, 70 Fed. Rep. 40 (1896).

And the withholding by a creditor of a conveyance made to him as security by his debtor from record with an honest belief that his indebtedness would be paid, and without any agreement or understanding with the debtor, does not render the conveyance fraudulent as to other creditors. First Nat. Bank v. Jaffray, 41 Kan. 601 (1899).

And the mere failure or neglect of a creditor to record a deed given for its security in November until the following March will not invalidate the transfer as against creditors, where there is nothing to show that the grantor knew of, requested, or desired such want of action on the part of the grantee. Burruss v. Trant, 88 Va. 900 (1892).

And an unrecorded mortgage, conveying not more than one third of the mortgagor's property, which after several renewals is at last recorded within the time allowed by the statute, is not void as against simple contract creditors whose debts were incurred in the meantime, unless it was withheld from record for the fraudulent purpose of upholding the credit of the debtor, or otherwise impeached by proof of actual or positive fraud upon the part of the mortgagee. Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, 87 Ala. 736 (1888).

In Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, supra, Blenderhassett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080 31 L. R. A.

(1882), infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the secured creditor not only knew of the debtor's insolvency, but actively concealed the mortgage by purposely withholding it from record and in the meantime representing the mortgaged debtor as having a large estate and unlimited credit for the fraudulent purpose of giving him a fictitious credit.

And Hilliard v. Cagle, 46 Miss. 309 (1872), infra, was criticised therein, the court saying that that case seems to have gone to the extent of creating an estoppel in favor of creditors generally without any actual fraud being imputed to the mortgagee in withholding his mortgage from registration, but that view is contrary to the spirit of the registration statute and does not seem to be based upon sound reasoning.

So, that a conveyance from a husband to his wife of all his property in payment of a bona fide indebtedness was made secretly after suit threatened, and not recorded until some time afterwards, and then only on the grantor advising it, and that there was no change of possession, the husband continuing to cultivate and enjoy the lands, does not render the conveyance invalid. Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191 (1876).

And an assignee for the benefit of creditors does not acquire a right by virtue of the assignment which is superior to a mortgage which had been left unrecorded but not by any collusion between the mortgagee and mortgagor or any design to enable the mortgagor to obtain a fictitious credit on the faith that the property covered by the mortgage was unencumbered, and no such right is given to the assignee by R. L. Pub. Stat. chap. 178, § 9, declaring that no mortgage of personal property shall be valid against any other person than the parties thereto, unless possession of the mortgaged property be delivered and retained by the mortgagee, or unless the said mortgage be recorded, as the assignee simply succeeds to the rights of the mortgagor. Wilson v. Esten, 14 R. I. 621 (1885).

And in Magovern v. Richard, 27 S. C. 272 (1886), a mortgage for a valuable consideration, not taken for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defeating creditors, was held valid though the mortgagor was insolvent and the mortgage embraced all of the debtor's visible property and was withheld from record by agreement for forty days.

But the failure of a chattel mortgagee to have a mortgage recorded for forty-three days, and to disclose its existence to other creditors when the financial condition of the debtor was being discussed, and a promise by him to the debtor that he would not disclose its existence to other creditors who were demanding payment or security for their claims, are strong evidence tending to show a fraudulent intent to hinder and delay creditors. Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, 46 Kan. 597 (1891).

And the failure of the grantee in a deed absolute on its face but intended as a mortgage, expressing a consideration of $85,000, given to secure an indebtedness of $44,000, to place it on record for more than a year after it was given, should be taken into consideration in the light of surrounding facts. In determining whether or not it was fraudulent as to the grantee, and is sufficient to show an intent to enable the mortgagor to keep up a credit to which he was not entitled, and obtain money from others whereby a fraud would be perpetrated upon them. Dobson v. Snider, 70 Fed. Rep. 10 (1895).

Messrs. E. W. Rector, C. V. Teague, and Wood & Henderson, for appellees:

The sale to appellants by Jones & Fulton was made with intent to cheat, hinder, or delay the creditors of Jones & Fulton, and is therefore void.

Courts necessarily allow great latitude in admitting evidence where fraud is the issue. Fraud may be inferred from the circumstances proved in the particular case.

Bigelow, Fr. p. 146; Dyer v. Taylor, 50 Ark. 319; Rea v. Missouri, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 532,

And a party cannot be permitted to take a bill of sale or mortgage of chattels for his own security, leaving the mortgagor in possession and ostensibly the owner, and at his request keep the public from a knowledge of its existence, withholding it from record for an indefinite period, renewing it periodically, and then place the last renewal on record to the prejudice of others whom the possession and ostensible ownership of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor had induced to confide in him. Gill v. Griffith, 2 Md. Ch. 270 (1848).

And a deed absolute on its face, duly acknowledged and recorded, reciting a consideration of $2,000 in cash paid, which was really a security for a past indebtedness of $400, and future advances in all to the amount of $2,000, the grantee giving at the same time to the grantor his obligation to reconvey the land upon the payment of the amount, with the understanding that the obligation to reconvey was not to be recorded or made known for the purpose of preventing injury to the credit of the grantor and to prevent his property from being attached, is fraudulent and void as to creditors. Ferguson v. Johnston, 36 Fed. Rep. 134 (1888).

So, delay by a mortgagee in filing a chattel mortgage at the request of the mortgagor and to prevent injury to his credit has been held to estop him from asserting such mortgage as against creditors who gave credit to the mortgagor after its execution upon the faith that his property was unencumbered, though the mortgagee had no actual intent to defraud. Standard Paper Co. v. Guenther, 67 Wis. 101 (1886); Sanger v. Guenther, 73 Wis. 356 (1889).

And an agreement between a grantor in a trust deed and the beneficiary that the deed is not to be recorded as provided by law so that it may not affect the financial standing of the grantor, is express evidence of a fraudulent intent, and this, in connection with representations that the credit of the grantor is good, when the parties must have known that it was doubtful, whereby the grantor is enabled to obtain large credit, is conclusive. Stock-Grower's Bank v. Newton, 13 Colo. 245 (1889).

And a mortgage executed by an insolvent mortgagor, covering his entire estate, to a creditor, who knows of his insolvency and who conceals the mortgage and withholds it from record for the purpose of giving the mortgagor a fictitious credit, and represents him as having a large estate and unlimited credit, by means of which he is enabled to contract other debts which he cannot pay, is fraudulent and void as to creditors. Blennerhassett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080 (1882).

And such a mortgage intended to prefer a creditor who has reasonable cause to believe the mortgagor to be insolvent and knows it to be made in fraud of the provisions of the bankruptcy act, and who for the purpose of evading that act conceals and withholds the mortgage from record for several months, is void under the bankruptcy act, though executed more than two months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the mortgagor. Ibid.

So, the withholding of mortgages from record pursuant to an agreement between the parties for the purpose of maintaining the credit of the mortgagor renders the transaction fraudulent as to other creditors, under Iowa Code, § 1923, making a sale or mortgaging of personal property of which the vendor or mortgagee retains possession invalid as to creditors unless recorded. Goll & F. 31 L. R. A.

Co. v. Miller, 87 Iowa, 426 (1893); Falker v. Linehan, 88 Iowa, 641 (1893); Liddle v. Allen, 90 Iowa, 738 (1894).

And deeds of trust which by agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee were to be withheld from record so that the mortgagor's credit should not be impaired by reason of their record, the mortgagor to notify the mortgagee in case of danger of insolvency or loss to have the deeds recorded, will be postponed or set aside by a court of equity as fraudulent as against creditors. Central Nat. Bank v. Doran, 109 Mo. 40 (1892).

And the same rule was applied to an absolute deed given as security, which was withheld from record for three years, in State Sav. Bank v. Buck, 123 Mo. 141 (1894).

And a mortgage thus made will not be allowed to prevail against a conveyance to trustees for the benefit of creditors generally. Hildeburn v. Brown, 17 B. Mon. 779 (1856).

So, a deed of trust made by a merchant largely indebted to his commission merchants, conveying all of his property for the security of such indebtedness and for any future indebtedness incurred, under the provisions of which he was to continue in possession and conduct the business as before, receiving advances and sending cotton to his factors in order to prevent injury to their credit, which was withheld from record pursuant to an agreement by the parties, is fraudulent and void as to subsequent creditors. Hilliard v. Cagle, 46 Miss. 300 (1872).

And that the parties kept an assignment secret and from record until a creditor was about to procure judgment, when it was recorded, and that the insolvent assignor was permitted for several months to continue in possession and control of the goods and to deal with them as his own, together with the fact that no change was made in the manner of conducting the business, and no sign was put up indicating any change of ownership, the same books having been kept by the same bookkeeper and entries made in the same manner as before the assignment, and the employment of the assignor by the assignee to conduct the business, sufficiently shows that the assignment was made to hinder and delay creditors. Means v. Dowd, 128 U. S. 273, 32 L. ed. 429 (1889).

Withholding a mortgage from record pursuant to an agreement with the mortgagor, however, is not of itself sufficient to justify a holding as matter of law that such mortgage is fraudulent and void as to creditors, but is a badge of fraud to be considered with all the other facts and circumstances attending the transaction. Hutchinson v. First Nat. Bank, 133 Ind. 271 (1882); Folsom v. Clemence, 111 Mass. 273 (1873).

And it is not invalidated thereby when such agreement to withhold was not made to deceive but in good faith, and credit was not given on the strength of the apparent title thereby shown. Banner v. Robinson (Tex.) 34 S. W. 355 (1896).

And a mortgage is not rendered invalid as to creditors on the ground of the participation of the mortgagee in the fraudulent intent of the mortgagor because the mortgagee refrained at the request of the mortgagor from placing it on record until after the mortgagor had become indebted to another person, such other indebtedness not being in the mind of either at the time of making the mortgage, and the mortgagee having no knowledge or suspicion of the mortgagor's insolvency. Flem-

21 L. ed. 707; Sparks v. Mack, 81 Ark. 666; Burch v. Smith, 15 Tex. 219, 65 Am. Dec. 154.

The creditor who buys property for the purpose of collecting his claim must act with good faith in the matter and must not take more of his debtor's property than is necessary to pay his claim at a fair price.

Christian v. Greenwood, 28 Ark. 258, 79 Am.

Dec. 104; Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 431; Sparks v. Mack, supra; Twyne's Case, 3 Coke, 81b; Pritchett v. Pollock, 82 Ala. 169; Carden v. Lane, 48 Ark. 219.

The creditors of Jones & Fulton, who were getting small pittances on their claims would be dissatisfied, and some of them would refuse to ratify the agreement. Hence the parties to ington Nat. Bank v. Jones, 50 N. J. Eq. 244 (1892).

In Flemington Nat. Bank v. Jones, supra, Blenerhassett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080 (1882), was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the mortgagor was hopelessly insolvent to the knowledge of the mortgagee, who kept the mortgage from record to enable the mortgagor to postpone open bankruptcy long enough to give the mortgage sufficient age to have preference under the bankruptcy law, representing in the meantime that the mortgagor was solvent, and actively aiding in bolstering his credit.

And Central Nat. Bank v. Doran, 109 Mo. 40 (1892), was distinguished therein upon the ground that the mortgagor in that case was engaged in a hazardous business and the mortgagee withheld the mortgage from record for the express purpose of giving the mortgagor a credit to which he was not entitled, and enable him to use it in making purchases on credit.

And Standard Paper Co. v. Guenther, 67 Wis. 101 (1886), was distinguished therein upon the ground that in that case the business was hazardous and the desperate condition of the mortgagor was known to the mortgagee, and the subsequent creditor relied upon the unencumbered condition of the debtor's property.

And Folsom v. Clemence, supra, and Stewart v. Hopkins, 20 Ohio St. 502 (1876), infra, XI., were distinguished therein upon the ground that the mortgagors were engaged in a hazardous business in which credit was needed, and in which creditors were likely to give credit on the strength of a large stock of goods not encumbered by any judgment or mortgage.

And Hilliard v. Cagle, 46 Miss. 309 (1872), was distinguished therein upon the ground that in that case the mortgage was kept from the record in order to enable the mortgagor to continue in business and to buy more cotton on credit.

And Hildeburn v. Brown, 17 B. Mon. 779 (1856), was distinguished therein upon the ground that it was decided under a statute making unrecorded conveyances void as against creditors.

c. Other circumstances and conditions tending to show participation.

The circumstances and conditions which tend to show participation are necessarily as various and varied as the facts which gave rise to the numerous cases on the subject. Such circumstances and conditions, however, have necessarily been made to appear in the previous subdivisions of this note so far as they fall within the classification there adopted, and it is the intent of this subdivision to consider only such matters tending to show, or which have been asserted as tending to show, participation as do not fall within that classification, and do not seem readily susceptible of classification.

A transfer by a debtor to a creditor will not be conclusively deemed fraudulent in character because it covers substantially all of the debtor's property. Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 36 Hun, 79 (1885); Bishop v. Stebbins, 41 Hun, 243 (1886).

And an intent on the part of a grantee to defraud or to concur in or to aid in carrying out or consummating a fraud on the part of a grantor, cannot be 31 L. R. A.

inferred from the fact that they received transfers of all the property of the grantor and must have known that his other creditors could not be paid. Auburn Exch. Bank v. Fitch, 48 Barb. 344 (1867).

It is a mere circumstance to be weighed among others in determining the intent and purpose of the party. Bishop v. Stebbins, supra.

But a sale of all the property of an insolvent debtor upon a long and unusual credit with intent to hinder and delay creditors, known to the purchaser, who aided in its accomplishment, is invalid though he intended finally to pay his entire indebtedness. Roberts v. Radcliff, 36 Kan. 502 (1886).

And a mortgage made by a father to his two sons in the night-time under suspicious circumstances, he at the same time transferring all of his lands and personal property to them, furnishes proper evidence on the question of fraud, but does not raise a conclusive legal inference thereof. Herkelrath v. Stookey, 63 Ill. 486 (1872).

So, proof of suspicious circumstances, such as great haste, consummating the sale by night, etc., does not necessarily show fraud, but may be explained away by evidence that the vendor owed the purchaser an honest debt, and that the agreed price was not greatly less than the value of the goods, and that no benefits were reserved. Hodges v. Coleman, 76 Ala. 103 (1884).

But the fact that a sale to a creditor in payment of his debt was made after business hours and without a written inventory does not necessarily imply bad faith or a design to defeat or defraud creditors. Davis v. McCarthy, 52 Kan. 116 (1893).

And fraud in fact in a deed of trust of a stock of goods given to secure certain creditors is not established by proof that other creditors were urging their claims and watching the mortgagor's movements, and that it was made hurriedly in the night and registered at an unusual hour, and that the grantor's wife and clerk without his knowledge took some of the goods out of the store after the deed was executed. Reeves v. John, 95 Tenn. 4 (1895).

Neither is participation by a creditor who purchases goods from an embarrassed debtor to pay a bona fide debt, in the fraudulent intent of the debtor, shown by proof that the debtor had other assets out of which he could have paid the creditor, and that the creditor knew it. Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425 (1896).

And a statement by a creditor who takes property from his debtor, that he did it to secure himself, is not sufficient to establish a fraudulent intent upon his part. Bank of Commerce v. Schlotfeldt, 40 Neb. 212 (1894).

But a mortgage is clearly void as against creditors of the mortgagor for fraud in fact where it is proved that both mortgagor and mortgagee had declared that it was made to protect the mortgagor's property against a debt due to the United States and against other debts. Farmers' Bank v. Douglass, 11 Smedes & M. 469 (1848).

So, a mortgage is not affected by statements made in good faith by the mortgagee to creditors of the mortgagor that the latter is doing a good business and will be able to meet his obligations, although the statements prove to be untrue, where there is nothing to show that they were not made in good faith, as they are mere opinions. Chafey v. Mathews, 104 Mich. 103, 27 L. R. A. 568 (1896).

said bill of sale, anticipating that that would occur, secretly provided for such contingency, and in so doing they committed a fraud upon the creditors of Jones & Fulton.

Sparks v. Mack, 81 Ark. 670; Burrill, Assigmn. 5th ed. p. 255; Lukins v. Aird, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 78, 18 L. ed. 750.

If the firm is insolvent at the time a transfer

And the mere false statement of the financial standing of a business firm by the president of a bank of the same community, to a party about to sell goods to it, does not show that there was at the time no honest indebtedness existing in favor of the bank against the business firm, or impeach the integrity of a subsequent conveyance by such firm to secure the bank. Stokes v. Burns (Mo.) 38 S. W. 460 (1895).

And the sending out by creditors to their collecting agents and attorneys a circular letter containing a memorandum stating that a debtor owed them $54.46, which simply included the amount then due on open account but did not include two promissory notes for the sum of over $1,900, is not sufficient to impeach the bona fides of a sale by the debtor to such creditor of his stock of goods for $2,000 which was credited to his indebtedness. Williams v. Simons, 70 Fed. Rep. 40 (1895).

So, a statement by a creditor to a falling debtor, that he could be closed up if he did not give him a mortgage upon all of his property, is not sufficient to show that the mortgage given pursuant to such statement was made to hinder and delay other creditors. Rouse v. Frank, 84 Ga. 623 (1890).

And a request by a banker who advances money to a customer for a chattel mortgage, as collateral, raises no inference of fraud which will invalidate a subsequent transfer of his property by the customer to the bank where his business was carried on in a careless and extravagant way, and the banker might well have anticipated the difficulties and embarrassments which subsequently befell him. Buford v. Cook, 36 Fed. Rep. 21 (1888).

And a sale by a debtor to a creditor will not be set aside as fraudulent as against other creditors, where the careless and extravagant way in which the debtor carried on his business sufficiently explains most of the suspicious circumstances. Ibid.

Nor will a conveyance by a debtor in failing circumstances of his property in trust to secure certain of his creditors, which is void, affect the validity of a subsequent sale to such creditors, made in good faith to pay an actual debt. Stewart v. Dunham, 115 U. S. 61, 29 L. ed. 329 (1885).

And a conveyance by an insolvent debtor in part payment or satisfaction of a prior indebtedness is not invalidated by a subsequent independent transaction on the same day whereby the debtor sells merchandise to satisfy the rest of the debt to the same vendee paying a small sum to the debtor to balance the account. Buford v. Shannon, 95 Ala. 205 (1891).

And where a sale by a debtor to a creditor is valid, the making of a general assignment by the debtor on the same day will not render it illegal. Bamberger, B. & Co. v. Schofield, 160 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 374 (1895).

But the fraudulent purpose of an insolvent debtor in secreting a part of his estate and executing a deed of trust upon his stock in trade to a bank, will be imputed to a second conveyance made at the same time to secure other creditors, where it is part and parcel of the entire transaction of which the primary purpose was to give priority to the bank, and there is no purpose that the creditors named in the second conveyance shall receive payment upon the debts thereby secured, and the prior deed if upheld would absorb the 31 L. R. A.

of the firm property to make such payment is made, it is fraudulent and void as to existing creditors of the firm.

Goodbar v. Cary, 16 Fed. Rep. 816; Rogers v. Batchelor, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 231, 9 L. ed. 1063; Koop v. Herron, 15 Neb. 73; Pritchett v. Pollock, supra; Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587; Menagh v. Whitwell, 52 N. Y. 146, 11 Am.

whole estate. Brister v. Moore (Miss.) 16 So. 596 (1895).

And a mortgagee who takes a mortgage from a debtor who had previously conveyed the same property in trust for creditors, which conveyance was fraudulent, cannot claim as an honest purchaser for a valuable consideration where he was aware of such previous conveyance, and though a judgment creditor, he cannot take such conveyance where he had not taken out execution on his judgments and levied on the land fraudulently conveyed. Fox v. Willis, 1 Mich. 321 (1852).

Nor does the fact that a mortgage held by a creditor against a failing debtor happens to be dated on Sunday, show that it was antedated for some fraudulent purpose as against creditors. Leake v. Anderson, 43 S. C. 448 (1895).

And an intent manifested by a father to defraud his creditor does not warrant the assumption that he furnished his son with the money with which he purchased a quantity of his father's property which was sold under execution,—especially where it appears that the son had or might have had independent means. Abney v. Kingsland, 10 Ala. 355, 44 Am. Dec. 491 (1846).

So, the voluntary execution of a chattel mortgage by a debtor to his creditor, which he sends to the registry of deeds for filing without the creditor's knowledge, does not necessarily or conclusively show any fraudulent collusion between them. Standard Implement Co. v. Parlin & O. Co., 51 Kan. 632 (1893).

And the neglect of a mortgagee to foreclose, as well as the expectation on the part of the mortgagor that he would not, does not show fraud as against creditors where the debt was an honest previously existing one, and the mortgage was given for no more than was justly due. Billings v. Billings, 31 Hun, 65 (1883).

And a short delay by a mortgagee in proceeding to enforce his mortgage after the lapse of the law days will not render an otherwise valid mortgage inoperative and void. Pugh v. Harwell (Ala.) 18 So. 535 (1895).

And a deed of trust given by a depositor to a bank, conveying $1,400 worth of property to secure a debt of $1,600 due the bank, exclusive of attorneys' fees, is not rendered invalid as to creditors by a provision in it for attorneys' fees to the amount of $300. Phillips v. Schoelkopf (Tex.) 29 S. W. 918 (1894). Affirmed in 29 S. W. 645 (1895).

Or by the bank permitting a depositor to withdraw $223 from deposit on the night the conveyance was made. Ibid.

Nor is a conveyance by a debtor in failing circumstances invalidated by the fact that some portion of the payment therefor consisted of outlawed obligations of the grantor; that fact, at most, could but be regarded as a circumstance which might arouse suspicion. Fraser v. Passage, 63 Mich. 551 (1896).

Nor does the fact that a part or the whole of a debt due from a husband to his wife was subject to the bar of the statute of limitations show that the debt was not bona fide or was fraudulent,—especially when the husband was possessed of large means. Leake v. Anderson, 43 S. C. 443 (1895).

So, a conveyance by a debtor to his creditor to secure a bona fide debt is good though the creditor

Rep. 683; Keith v. Fink, 47 Ill. 272; Knauth v. Bassett, 34 Barb. 31; Cox v. Platt, 32 Barb. 126; French v. Lovejoy, 12 N. H. 458; Burrill, Assignm. 5th ed. p. 307; Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. 571; Ransom v. Van Decenter, 41 Barb. 307.

The contract necessarily had the effect to hinder and delay creditors, and was therefore fraudulent and void.

2 Bigelow, Fr. 375.

The sale of the property to appellants was an assignment and void for failure to comply with the laws of the state.

Richmond v. Mississippi Mills, 52 Ark. 30, knew that the debtor had no other property with which to pay other debts, and that the debt was barred by the statute of limitations. Hale v. Stewart, 7 Hun, 501 (1876).

And an absolute and unconditional sale by a debtor to a creditor in payment of his claim is not invalidated by the fact that the creditor had made no inventory until after the sale and change of possession, and failed to execute a receipt or release to the debtor. Chamberlain v. Dorrance, 69 Ala. 40 (1881).

And a claim by a banker who started in business with a capital of $10,000, that he had advanced to a debtor, who afterwards transferred his property to him, the sum of $23,000 in six years, will not raise an inference of fraud which will invalidate the transfer where the business of the debtor was such that it is obvious that he must have somewhere obtained funds therefor. Buford v. Cook, 36 Fed. Rep. 21 (1888).

And the insolvency of a trustee in a trust deed of electrical goods, and his want of skill in the use and handling of such goods, would not invalidate the trust deed as against creditors, but may be looked to and taken into consideration by the jury for the purpose of determining with other facts and circumstances whether the purpose of the deed was to delay, hinder, and defraud creditors. Lewis v. Alexander (Tex.) 31 S. W. 414 (1895).

But the execution of a mortgage after the mortgagor has been sued, to one in his employment who had no means of subsistence other than his labor and who was the mortgagor's son-in-law, to secure wages partly due and partly to become due, which was falsely dated and of which the mortgagor remained in possession, are items of evidence to be considered by the jury upon the question of the bona fides of the conveyance. Perry v. Hardison, 99 N. C. 22 (1888).

So, an absolute conveyance intended only as security will be held to be fraudulent where the grantee or mortgagee conceals the nature of the conveyance and claims it to be absolute. Fuller v. Griffith (Iowa) 60 N. W. 247 (1894).

And an absolute conveyance for the purpose of securing a debt, with an understanding between the parties that the land is to be reconveyed upon payment of the debt, is void as against creditors. Smith v. Lowell, 6 N. H. 87 (1832).

And wards to whom an insolvent guardian had conveyed certain property in trust to satisfy an indebtedness, who attained their majority and settled with the guardian, accepting the property conveyed, pending an action by general creditors to set aside such conveyance, take subject to the rights of such creditors. Thomas v. Pyne, 55 Iowa, 348 (1880).

So, making loans at intervals during a period of six months, amounting to the sum of $2,888 without providing any more authenticated evidence than a pencil memorandum made by the lender which had the appearance of all the entries having been made at one time, furnishes sufficient evidence of a fraudulent combination to require the submission of the cause to the jury. Brinks v. Heise, 84 Pa. 251 (1877).

And proof that the president of a private corporation called a meeting of the board of directors, consisting of two members besides himself, and personally procured the attendance of the other two directors for the purpose of passing a resolution authorizing him as president to mortgage the property of the corporation to himself individually, which resolution was passed, one of the members voting in the negative and the other in the affirmative and the president deciding the tie, and that the mortgage executed pursuant thereto was intended to hinder and defraud a creditor of the company, is sufficient to invalidate the mortgage without further proof as to fraudulent intent or notice thereof on the part of the mortgagee. Burley v. Marsh, 11 Neb. 291 (1881).

IV. Participation by agent.

The ordinary rules of agency apply to render a principal liable for the participation of his authorized agent in taking a transfer from a debtor though he is himself innocent.

Thus, the conveyance by a husband of his interest in lands to a trustee, who conveys the same to the wife, for which she gives up a valid indebtedness against her husband, made on the part of the husband for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors, does not make her a purchaser in good faith, though she had no actual knowledge of his insolvency or intended fraud, where he acted as her agent in the matter which made his object, purpose, and intent hers. Trumbull v. Hewitt, 65 Conn. 80 (1894).

And a note and mortgage made by a debtor to the wife of another, with the intent, participated in by both, to defraud the mortgagor's creditors, but which was not known to the wife, is invalid as against creditors as her title rests on the acts of her husband, who acted as her agent, his knowledge being regarded as hers. Clark v. Fuller, 39 Conn. 238 (1872).

And the receipt of goods from a debtor by the agent of a creditor in payment of his claim under a secret understanding that the excess over the debt should be held for the debtor, or that there should be a secret trust for his benefit, invalidates the transfer as against other creditors, though the preferred creditor did not participate in the intent, as the agent's act must be deemed in law to be his. Greenleve v. Blum, 50 Tex. 124 (1883).

V. Participation as between trustees and beneficiaries.

Trustees and beneficiaries under a trust deed cannot hold with notice of the fraudulent intent of their grantor or of fraud rendering his title void, even in states where such trustees and beneficiaries occupy the position of purchaser for a valuable consideration. Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 33 L. ed. 606 (1890).

And in Virginia and West Virginia notice to trustees in a trust deed of a fraudulent intent upon the part of the grantor is notice to the beneficiaries, and the trustees are chargeable with a knowledge of all the facts that inquiry would have disclosed. Ibid.

And in Crow v. Beardsley, 68 Mo. 435 (1878), it was held that the participation either of the trustees or the beneficiaries in a deed of trust in fraud of the grantor is sufficient to defeat the deed as against creditors.

And the rule that notice to a trustee is notice to the cestui que trust applies to trustees under an ordinary mortgage made by a railroad company to secure the holders of bonds under it. Crumlish v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. 32 W. Va. 244 (1889).

4 L. R. A. 418; Costello v. Chamberlain, 36 Neb. 45; Atkins v. Scope, 38 Ark. 539.

Appellants had no cause of action against appellees on the bond.

There is no statute authorizing the sheriff to require an indemnity bond in attachment proceedings. If the sheriff was guilty of a tort in making the levy, and the court should hold that appellees, by signing said bond, are equally guilty with him, then the appellants might have sued appellees for the tort, but they have not seen proper to do so. They elected to sue

So, it has been held that when a conveyance is made in trust to a third party for the benefit of certain preferred creditors, it is immaterial whether an intent upon the part of the grantor to defraud his creditors was or was not known to either the trustee or the beneficiary. Simon v. Ash, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 202 (1892).

And that a deed of trust made to secure an antecedent debt is void if made with fraudulent intent by the grantor, though neither the trustee nor the cestui que trust participated in the fraudulent intent, and the fraud of the grantor is not apparent upon the face of the deed, the question of the existence of the fraud being one for the jury. Harney v. Pack, 4 Smedes & M. 229 (1845).

In West Virginia, however, a trustee in a deed of trust or assignment made to secure creditors is regarded as a purchaser for value, and in order to invalidate it notice of the grantor's fraudulent intent must in some way be brought home to him or to the creditors secured thereby. Douglas Merchandise Co. v. Laird, 37 W. Va. 667 (1893); Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 780 (1884).

And the prevailing rule would seem to be that a fraudulent intent upon the part of a grantor in a trust deed will not invalidate it as against creditors where the beneficiary thereunder did not know of or participate in such intent. Lewis v. Alexander (Tex.) 31 S. W. 414 (1896).

And that in order to avoid a deed of trust upon the ground of a fraudulent intent upon the part of the grantor, notice of such intent upon the part of the creditor for whose benefit it was made must be established. Sonnentheil v. Texas Guaranty & T. Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 945 (1895).

And that the guilty knowledge and participation of a trustee in a trust deed given for the benefit of certain creditors in the fraudulent intent of the grantor, will not affect the validity of the instrument as to claims of an innocent beneficiary. Solomon v. Wright, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 565 (1894); Kraus v. Haas, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 665 (1894); Byrne v. Becker, 42 Mo. 264 (1868).

In Solomon v. Wright, supra, Simon v. Ash, supra, was dissented from and disapproved of.

And in Kraus v. Haas, supra, Simon v. Ash, supra, was dissented from.

Thus, the beneficiaries in a trust deed are not to be considered in determining whether or not it was fraudulent to other creditors where it appears that one of them was otherwise secured and paid no attention to it, and that another, when notified, did not signify his intention to consent or dissent, but obtained judgment on his claim, and the others had such notice of the condition of affairs as charged them with knowledge of the intent with which the conveyance was made. W. W. Kendall Boot & S. Co. v. Johnston (Tex.) 24 S. W. 583 (1893).

And a mortgage given by a firm to one of the members thereof as nominal mortgagee to secure a note given by the firm to a bank which was made by the firm with intent to defraud its creditors, participated in by the nominal mortgagee, is not void in the hands of the bank in favor of subsequent attaching creditors. First Nat. Bank v. Ridenour, 46 Kan. 707 (1891).

So, it is not necessary that a trustee in a deed of trust should participate in the fraudulent intent with which the deed was made to render it invalid: his intent does not affect it. Eigenbrun v. Smith; 98 N. C. 207 (1887).

But notice to a trustee in a trust deed of the 31 L. R. A.

fraudulent intent with which the grantor executed it, is notice to the cestui que trust where he acted in the matter by agreement between the grantor and the cestui que trust. Pope v. Pope, 40 Miss. 516 (1866).

VI. Participation by one of several beneficiaries.

The rule has been laid down that the honest intent of one of two mortgagees will not sustain the mortgage where the other participated in the fraudulent intent of the mortgagor. Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135 (1876).

And it has been held that a trust deed made for the benefit of certain preferred creditors, reciting debts which are false and fictitious in whole or in part, is wholly void for fraud, though some of the debts are good, and it matters not whether the other creditors whose claims are good knew of the fact or not. Simon v. Ash, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 202 (1892).

And that a trust deed given by a debtor to a creditor, which includes several feigned notes is void in toto as against other creditors, though there were also bona fide debts included, and there was no evidence of any complicity in the fraud on the part of the trustee. Stone v. Marshall, 7 Jones, L. 300 (1859).

And in Seaman v. Nolen, 68 Ala. 463 (1880), it was held that a conveyance by a debtor to two creditors, one of whom had attempted to procure the conveyance to himself, using inducements and representations which tainted the transaction with fraud, joining with the other upon the debtor's refusal to sell, and both accepting a joint conveyance and being equal participants in the fruits of the transaction, is fraudulent and void as to creditors as to both grantees.

But the prevailing rule would seem to be that where a conveyance is made to satisfy the claims of several grantees or creditors, and the consideration for the purchase emanates from each, the conveyance is valid as to those grantees or creditors whose purchase was bona fide or supported by a valid consideration, although the title of other creditors or grantees may fail on account of some vice or fraud in their purchase. Hamilton Brown Shoe Co. v. Whitaker, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 380 (1893).

Thus, a beneficiary in a trust deed given to secure different claims, whose debt is valid and who acts merely for the purpose of securing his debt and not with any purpose to aid and assist the insolvent debtor to hinder, delay, and defraud other creditors, will be protected although fictitious debts are included in the deed of trust. Muse v. Chaney (Tex.) 30 S. W. 374 (1895).

And a chattel mortgage made by a debtor for the benefit of certain preferred creditors is not rendered invalid by the fact that one of the creditors was insolvent and his debt secured by the mortgage was fictitious, in the absence of evidence or knowledge or concurrence of the assignee or other creditors secured. Howell Bros. Shoe Co. v. Mars, 82 Tex. 493 (1891).

So, a deed of trust, given in part to secure fraudulent debts and in part, to secure bona fide debts, is not fraudulent and void in toto, where the creditors to whom the bona fide debts were due had no notice of any dishonest purpose on the part of the grantor. Billups v. Sears, 5 Gratt. 31, 50 Am. Dec. 105 (1848).

An honest creditor does not lose his security because the mortgage constituting it embraces a separate claim of a party who participated with appellees on contract and they are bound by their complaint.

Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, 558-564, and notes; Sumner v. Rogers, 90 Mo. 324; 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 194; Campbell v. Rotering, 42 Minn. 115; Thebaud v. National Cordage Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 567; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 413, and notes, p. 432.

the mortgagor in perpetrating a fraud of which he had no knowledge, where the claims of the mortgagees were distinct and divisible. Morgan v. Worden (Ind.) 32 N. E. 783 (1892).

And though some of the beneficiaries in a deed of trust for the benefit of several creditors may have had notice of a fraudulent intent on the part of the makers of the deed, if others accepted it without notice, they would be entitled to have it enforced for their own benefit notwithstanding any fraud with which the others were chargeable. Sonnentheil v. Texas Guaranty & T. Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 945 (1895).

And a mortgage securing a number of different creditors each acting for himself and knowing nothing of the claim or intention of the others or of the relation between the grantor and such others, is good as to the claim of an innocent purchaser who acted in good faith in obtaining security for an honest debt, though some of the other creditors had acted fraudulently. Rider v. Hunt, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 238 (1894).

In Rider v. Hunt, supra, the contrary ruling in Simon v. Ash, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 210 (1892), was disapproved.

Where some of the mortgagees in a mortgage given to secure several debts have guilty knowledge of, or participated in, a fraudulent intent entertained by the mortgagor, and others have not, the mortgage will be valid as to those who acted in good faith and invalid as to the others who did not. Kraus v. Haas, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 665 (1894).

So, in Kraus v. Haas, supra, Simon v. Ash, supra, was disapproved.

And Cox v. Miller, 54 Tex. 27 (1880), was criticized and disapproved therein, the court saying that that case cites a number of cases to sustain the proposition that the grantee will be affected by the fraud in a deed if he attempts to claim under it, though in fact he had no knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the grantor, but we find that every one of them are made to turn upon the good or bad faith of the grantee or mortgagee.

So, a creditor whose debt is secured by a deed of trust, and also by personal indorsement, is not affected by any fraud committed by any other creditor secured by said deed or even by the party whom he holds as an indorser upon his claim, when he had no notice of such fraud or reasonable cause to suspect it at the time of the execution of the deed. Sonnentheil v. Texas Guaranty & T. Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 945 (1895).

VII. Effect of other accompanying purposes besides that to defraud.

The invalidity of a transfer resulting from an intent to defraud creditors, participated in by the transferee, is not cured or affected by the fact that that intent was not the sole purpose of the parties making and taking it.

Thus, a mortgage need not have been executed simply or for the sole purpose of aiding the mortgagor in putting the property out of the reach of his other creditors in order to be fraudulent and void; it is sufficient if it was intended, in part at least, to shield the debtor from his other creditors, and to enable him to hold them at arm's length or to obtain compromises from them. Fink v. Alger, 8 Mo. App. 186 (1887).

Harrod, Special Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees contend that the judgment should be affirmed, without regard to whether there were errors committed against the appellants at the trial, because, as they claim, the suit instituted by the plaintiffs cannot be maintained under the law. They claim

And substantially the same ruling was made in Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425 (1895).

And a mortgage given and received for the purpose of keeping the mortgaged goods out of unfriendly hands, under which possession was not taken by the mortgagee, is fraudulent and void as against creditors, though given to secure a bona fide debt or actual advances of money. Goodhue v. Berrien, 2 Sandf. Ch. 630 (1845).

And a chattel mortgage contrived by the parties with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors of the mortgagor, or to protect his property from his other creditors, or to deceive his creditors as to the amount of his encumbrance, is void as to such creditors though the mortgagee accepted it to secure a just debt due him. Cordes v. Strasser, 8 Mo. App. 61 (1879).

See also, as to effect of fraudulent participation though conveyance is made to secure a just debt, supra, III. a.

Nor can a mortgage taken by a creditor from a debtor to secure the payment of his claim stand as against the mortgagor's creditors if it was any part of the purpose of the mortgagee taking it to secure thereby a benefit to the mortgagor involving the hindering, delaying, or defrauding of other creditors. Howell v. Carden, 99 Ala. 100 (1892).

So, a chattel mortgage executed in part to indemnify the mortgagee against a liability on a redelivery bond, is invalid where another and important object was to delay and defraud the creditors of the mortgagor which was participated in by all parties and cannot be separated to any extent. Winstead v. Hulme, 32 Kan. 568.

And a mortgage made with the double purpose of securing a bona fide debt from the mortgagor and of preventing creditors from attaching the property, is fraudulent as to creditors. Crowninshield v. Kirtledge, 7 Met. 520 (1844).

And a deed of trust reciting as its object that it was to secure certain creditors and indemnify them against certain liabilities, the debtor being then deeply insolvent and about to fail, is fraudulent and void as against creditors, where it appears that one of the objects the parties had in view was to secure the property against apprehended attachments and to prevent a sacrifice of the property, it being understood that the debtor should thereafter make a general assignment. Johnson v. Whitwell, 7 Pick. 71 (1828).

And a deed by a debtor to a creditor designed as security for the creditor's claim, in which the claim was used as a colorable consideration to enable the debtor to withhold his property from other creditors and to provide means for the debtor to continue to carry on his business, is fraudulent and void though one of the objects was to secure the payment of the creditor's claim. Constantine v. Twelves, 29 Ala. 607 (1857).

And one who purchases property at a sheriff's sale with money furnished by the execution debtor cannot hold the property as against creditors though it was made in part for the payment of a valid debt due an infant ward of the grantee. Tatum v. Hunter, 14 Ala. 557 (1848).

In Tatum v. Hunter, supra, Anderson v. Hooks, 9 Ala. 704 (1846), infra, VIII., was distinguished on the ground that in that case it did not appear that any person participated in the fraud but the grantor.

that the bond was personal to the sheriff, and that he alone can sue on it, and that he cannot sue until he has been damaged. It is also said that the statute makes no provisions for an indemnity bond in attachment cases; and it is further urged as a defense against the action of the plaintiffs that it is doubtful whether the defendants, by signing the bond, became participants in the trespass; and, if they did become so, it is claimed that they could only be sued in trespass, and not on the bond.

If this suit was by the sheriff against the defendants on the bond, it would be necessary for him to show how and in what respect he had been damaged; and in such a case it

A purpose to hinder and delay creditors on the part of a vendor, which was only contemplated as an incident, however, the real purpose and object of the transfer being to pay debts due to the parties named in the conveyance, will not invalidate the transfer, but if the intention to hinder and delay creditors influenced him in whole or in part as an object of making the deed it would be void. Simon v. Ash, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 202 (1892).

And representations by a creditor to his debtor that he wished security not so much for his own protection as to secure the property on which it was given from attachment by other creditors made for the purpose of obtaining a transfer of property to secure a debt, are not conclusive evidence of a fraudulent intent upon his part, but mere circumstances to be left to the jury. Reynolds v. Wilkins, 14 Me. 104 (1836).

VIII. Effect of relationship or intimacy of the parties.

What is here intended to be covered is the effect of relationship or intimacy as evidence or as raising an inference of participation by the creditor in the fraud of the debtor. Questions as to the general effect of relationship upon conveyance are omitted.

The relationship of the parties to a transfer is a fact for the jury where its good faith is impeached, though the transferee is a creditor. Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89 (1885).

And the facts that the mortgagor is a step-daughter of the mortgagees, and that they lived together as members of the one family, may be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the good faith of the transaction between them. Whitson v. Griffiths, 39 Kan. 211 (1888).

But knowledge of or participation in a fraud of a debtor in making a transfer of property to his creditor in payment of a debt, and knowledge of the debtor's financial straits, is not a necessary inference to be drawn from the extent or character of their intimacies and friendship, but is a proper subject for the consideration of the jury. Johnson v. Jones, 16 Colo. 138 (1891).

And that a debtor was in embarrassed circumstances and was related to his grantor, and that they lived contiguous to each other, will not warrant the inference that the creditor participated in a fraudulent intent of the debtor in making a conveyance to him in satisfaction of his claim. Anderson v. Hooks, 9 Ala. 704 (1846).

And the fact that a preferred creditor is the debtor's wife does not affect a sale and delivery of goods by him to her in satisfaction of an honest debt. Jewell v. Knight, 123 U. S. 426, 31 L. ed. 190 (1887).

And where a mortgage is given in good faith and for a valuable consideration, it is not invalidated by the fact that the mortgagee was a relative or friend of the mortgagor, where it was not given to defraud creditors and the execution of the mortgage was immediately followed by a delivery of possession of the mortgaged property. Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S. 631, 39 L. ed. 290 (1894).

But a transfer by a debtor of property which at a fair valuation is ample to satisfy all that he owes to pay a single creditor who is a near relative, casts the burden of proof as to the validity of the 31 L. R. A.

entire transaction upon the purchaser. Demarest v. Terhune, 18 N. J. Eq. 532 (1867).

And a conveyance by a father to a son whose business relations were very intimate, of property not exceeding in value the debts due the son and for which he was security, the son knowing of his father's insolvency at the time, and a deposit by the father in the name of the son, without his knowledge, of $2,300 at that time, which a few days thereafter was withdrawn at the father's request and returned to him, gives rise to a question of fact to the jury whether or not the son aided and assisted his father in placing his money and property beyond the reach of creditors for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding them. Hargadine v. Davis (Tex.), 26 S. W. 424 (1894).

Other cases will be found in the different sections of this note in which the conveyances were between relatives and intimate friends, but as they turned upon other questions, and as no effect was apparently given to that fact, they are not here included.

IX. Conveyances taken from a fraudulent grantee.

A transfer of property to pay a just debt due to the transferee, taken without any notice on his part or any fraud between his vendor and the person from whom such vendor purchases, is effectual to pass title to him as against creditors of the original vendor, no matter what fraud may have been perpetrated between such original vendor and his immediate vendee. Knox v. Hunt, 18 Mo. 174 (1853).

And a conveyance of goods to secure an advance made bona fide and without notice is good and passes title as against creditors of a former owner, though he had fraudulently transferred them to the person making such transfer. Morewood v. South Yorkshire R. & River Dun Co. 3 Hurlst. & N. 798, 28 L. J. Exch. 114 (1858).

So, a bona fide mortgagee from a husband and wife of lands to which the wife held title, which had been conveyed to her by her husband for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, will not be affected by the fraud. Shorten v. Drake, 38 Ohio St. 76 (1882); Sedgwick v. Place, 12 Blatchf. 163 (1874).

And a conveyance by one to another and by him to a third person pursuant to the direction of the first, does not show a conspiracy between them for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the first grantor where it does not appear that the first grantee knew that his grantor was owing any one but himself, and he conveyed to the second grantee to procure payment from him, and the second grantee had no knowledge of any debts owing by the original grantor except those which he paid to secure the conveyance as a part of the purchase price, and his object was to secure payment of a debt due him from the original grantor. Des Moines Ins. Co. v. Lent, 75 Iowa, 522 (1888).

So, the rights of a purchaser under a deed of trust valid on its face, but which is rendered fraudulent as to creditors by the dealings of the grantor under it, are not affected by such fraudulent conduct, and his title will prevail over a judgment against the grantor rendered subsequent to the execution of the deed. Baldwin v. Little, 64 Miss. 126 (1886).

And voluntary conveyances to a grantee are not might be necessary to determine whether the statute contemplates the indemnity bond mentioned, although it is questionable even in that case whether the defendants, having executed the bond under the circumstances, would be heard at all to contest its legality.

But there is no such case here, for this is not a suit on the bond, but a suit against the defendants to recover the value of the plaintiffs' goods, which it is claimed were taken to pay the debt of another, and for which taking it is alleged the defendants were responsible.

sufficient to put purchasers and mortgagees from such grantee upon inquiry as to whether such voluntary conveyances were fraudulent, as it is not to be inferred that the grantor was indebted or that he had not retained sufficient property to pay his debts if he had any. Yardley v. Torr, 67 Fed. Rep. 857 (1885).

So, a purchase of goods on credit by means of fraudulent representations of the purchaser is not ground for annulling a sale of the goods subsequently made to secure a debt for borrowed money due a person ignorant of such representations, where there was no collusion with the buyer to defraud other creditors. Jones v. Christian, 86 Va. 1017 (1890).

And an arrangement between a creditor and his debtor and one to whom his debtor had transferred property with intent to defraud creditors, by which the transferee conveyed a part of the property to the creditor in payment of his claim, made in good faith upon the part of the creditor, is valid as against other creditors, although the creditor taking the property knew of the fraudulent character of the transfer from the debtor to the original transferee. Butler v. White, 25 Minn. 432 (1879).

And a mortgagee who takes a mortgage from a fraudulent grantee, made at the request of a fraudulent grantor upon the property conveyed by the fraudulent conveyance, who is ignorant of the fraudulent character thereof, is protected as a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, although the conveyance may be set aside in an action brought by other creditors. Murphy v. Briggs, 89 N. Y. 446 (1882).

And mortgages given by a fraudulent grantee at the request of the fraudulent grantor upon the property fraudulently conveyed to secure debts of the grantor existing at the time of the conveyance to creditors who were ignorant of his pecuniary condition and ability and of his intent in making the conveyance, take precedence over the rights of creditors attacking the conveyance. Murphy v. Moore, 23 Hun. 95 (1880).

A conveyance made and received for the purpose of defrauding creditors of the grantor is good as between the parties to it, and will support a mortgage given by the grantee to a bona fide purchaser for a valid consideration, though the assignee in bankruptcy of the grantor can hold the grantee for the value of the property mortgaged. Brooks v. D'Orville, 7 Ben. 485 (1874).

But mere knowledge or notice of such fraud is sufficient to charge him with participation therein.

Thus, a mortgagee with notice of a claim that his mortgagor holds under a fraudulent conveyance stands in the same situation with respect to the title as such mortgagor. Stewart v. Iglehart, 7 Gill & J. 132, 28 Am. Dec. 202 (1835); Treusch v. Ottenburg, 44 Fed. Rep. 867, 6 U. S. App. 403 (1893); Knox v. Hunt, 18 Mo. 174 (1853).

And an antecedent creditor who knows that his debtor procured goods and merchandise by fraudulent means cannot secure a lien by chattel mortgage on such fraudulently procured goods adverse to the innocent vendors thereof. Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, 46 Kan. 507 (1881).

So, a mortgage made by a wife on a leasehold estate, fraudulently conveyed to her by her husband, to creditors of the husband's firm after it had failed, as security for an existing debt, is invalid where they had knowledge of all the facts which invalidated her title. Sedgwick v. Place, 12 Blatchf. 163 (1874).

R. A.

And a mortgagee, whose mortgage was given him without notice and for a sufficient consideration by a fraudulent grantee, has no right after he has been notified of bankruptcy proceedings against the fraudulent grantor and of the claim of the assignee in bankruptcy that the property was fraudulently conveyed, to assign the mortgage to another, and the assignee of such a mortgage with notice acquires no greater rights than the assignor had. Brooks v. D'Orville, supra.

But a creditor of a debtor who has made a fraudulent conveyance may, with the consent of his debtor, take a valid mortgage in good faith to secure his claim from the purchaser of the goods thus conveyed, without being required to resort to other means to reach the goods, though he had notice of the fraud. Brown v. Webb, 20 Ohio St. 399 (1881); Copenheaver v. Huffaker, 6 B. Mon. 18 (1845).

And one who takes a mortgage innocently and in good faith upon real property from the person holding the legal title under a conveyance which is fraudulent and void as to creditors of the grantor may, upon acquiring subsequent knowledge of the fraud, buy in an outstanding paramount title, not affected thereby, for his own benefit. Gjerness v. Mathews, 27 Minn. 320 (1890).

But the statutory trust in favor of a creditor of a husband who advances the purchase money of lands and procures their conveyance to his wife with intent to defraud, participated in by her, will prevail over the equity of a creditor who procures a mortgage upon the land from the wife to secure a precedent debt. Wood v. Robinson, 22 N. Y. 564 (1860).

And taking a mortgage by a creditor who lived in the same neighborhood with his debtor and who was his brother-in-law, from a fraudulent grantee of the debtor and after suit brought to impeach the conveyance for fraud, taking an absolute conveyance of the property mortgaged, there being no proof as to the value of the land, and the consideration expressed in the deed being less than the debt specified in the mortgage, justifies an inference of fraud in such mortgage and deed. Copenheaver v. Huffaker, 6 B. Mon. 18 (1845).

X. Presumptions and burden of proof.

Presumptions and burden of proof as to participation by a transferee in the fraudulent intent of his debtor making the transfer are all that is intended to be here touched, and cases as to presumptions and burden of proof of fraud generally have been omitted.

A creditor will be presumed to have acted with a view to his own security where he purchases unconditionally from his debtor in satisfaction of his claim covering its whole value, though the debtor may have entertained the intent also to defeat other creditors. Ford v. Williams, 3 B. Mon. 530 (1843).

And a mortgage given to secure a previous existing honest debt for no more than the amount justly due cannot be regarded as fraudulent as against other creditors but will be deemed to have been given to secure the creditor in preference to others. Billings v. Billings, 31 Hun. 65 (1883).

Conveyances taken by a creditor for the security or satisfaction of a debt due him are prima facie good within the statute of frauds. United States v. Bank of United States, 8 Rob. (La.) 262 (1844).

The contention of appellees that it is doubtful whether they became participants in the trespass by making the bond in our opinion, is not well taken. It seems to us that that act made them the real principals in the transaction. In order to maintain the action, it is only necessary for plaintiffs to show—First, that they owned the goods taken; second, their value; and, third, that the defendants participated in the taking or caused the same. And the right to maintain the suit cannot be made to depend upon the

And a transfer by a debtor to a creditor in payment of his claim should not be held invalid where the conduct of a grantee is not inconsistent with the theory that he did not participate in the fraudulent purpose of the grantor. Smith v. Jensen, 13 Colo. 213 (1889).

And the burden of proof to establish participation by a purchaser or mortgagee in the fraudulent intent of the vendor or mortgagor rests with the attacking creditor. Hausmann v. Hope, 20 Mo. App. 163 (1886); Benson v. Maxwell, 21 W. N. C. 446 (1887); Nichols v. Bancroft, 74 Mich. 191 (1889); Bamberger, B. & Co. v. Schoolfield, 160 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 874 (1895); Hodges Bros. v. Coleman, 76 Ala. 103 (1884); Pollak v. Searcy, 84 Ala. 259 (1887).

But an act the necessary result of which is to place a debtor's property beyond the reach of lawful process, is presumed to have been done with a fraudulent intent, but when it is regular and fair upon its face, the intent must be gathered from the surroundings. Crawford v. Beard, 12 Or. 447 (1885).

And the burden of proof rests with the mortgagee to show that a mortgage executed in contemplation of insolvency for an amount in excess of the indebtedness secured was taken in good faith and for an honest purpose, and to explain the discrepancy. Lombard v. Dows, 66 Iowa, 243 (1885); Heim v. Chapel (Minn.) 64 N. W. 825 (1895).

So, a transfer by a debtor of property which at a fair valuation is ample to satisfy all that he owes, to pay a single creditor who is a near relative, casts the burden of proof as to the validity of the entire transaction upon the purchaser. Demarest v. Terhune, 18 N. J. Eq. 532 (1867).

And a reservation in a mortgage given by a debtor to a creditor in contemplation of insolvency of power to sell a part of the mortgaged property, accounting for the proceeds, raises a presumption of fraud which will shift the burden of proof to the creditor to explain the transaction where he was aware of the contemplated insolvency. Tickner v. Wiswall, 9 Ala. 305 (1846).

And a deed of trust given by a debtor of all his property and of crops to be raised, to one who knew of his embarrassed financial condition to secure a note for $4,000 when he only owed $19 or $20, and the grantee advances $400, the property being worth over $1,900, will be presumed to have been fraudulent with the participation of the grantee, and the burden of proof rests with him to explain the facts and overcome the presumption. Henry v. Harrell, 57 Ark. 509 (1893).

As to presumptions and burden of proof with reference to particular facts and circumstances, see the respective subdivisions of this note.

XI. Participation under bankruptcy and insolvency laws.

The bankruptcy and insolvency laws of a number of the states, and the Federal bankruptcy act (since repealed), prohibit preferences or preferences beyond a designated amount by insolvent debtors, and provide that transfers made in contemplation of insolvency or within a designated time before insolvency shall be void as to creditors.

Within these statutes notice to or knowledge by the creditor taking the transfer or accepting the preference would seem to constitute participation in the debtor's intent to commit a fraud upon the act, which will invalidate the transaction.

Thus, a transfer by an insolvent debtor to a creditor with intent to prefer him contrary to the 31 L. R. A.

provisions of the Minnesota insolvent act, is invalid where such facts are known to the creditor as are sufficient to put a person of ordinary prudence upon inquiry, and such inquiry would have brought the required information. Holcombe v. Ehrmantraut, 46 Minn. 397 (1891).

And a sale by a debtor to a creditor, giving him an advantage over other creditors, will be deemed under the Louisiana statute to have been made in fraud of creditors, where the purchaser knew that the vendor was insolvent. De Blanc v. Martin, 2 Rob. (La.) 39 (1842).

And a sale made with intent to give preferences to certain creditors and to hinder and delay others, which intent is known to and shared in by the purchaser, is void under the Iowa statute prohibiting preferences though there is no actual intention to defraud creditors. Bixby v. Carskaddon, 55 Iowa, 533 (1881).

So, if a creditor who purchases property from an embarrassed debtor in payment of his debt intends thereby to assist the debtor in defrauding his other creditors, his purchase is invalid though his debt was bona fide and one of his objects in making the purchase was to save it. Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425 (1895); Howell v. Carden, 99 Ala. 100 (1892); Palmour v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 91 (1889); Phinlitz v. Clark, 62 Ga. 623 (1879).

And a deed made by a debtor to a creditor, which is fraudulent as to creditors, is not relieved from the taint of fraud by proof that it was made ostensibly to discharge the debt. Merry v. Bostwick, 13 Ill. 398, 54 Am. Dec. 434 (1851).

So, a bill of sale from the sheriff having five executions against an embarrassed trader of all his goods which he had seized under such execution, made with an understanding that they should remain on the trader's premises to enable him to repurchase them, the object being, not simply to relieve him from a forced sale of his goods, but also to protect them from the judgments of other creditors, is invalid under 13 Eliz. chap. 5, § 1, and as an act of bankruptcy. Graham v. Furber, 14 C. B. 410, 2 C. L. Rep. 10, 462, 23 L. J. C. P. 51, 18 Jur. 226 (1854).

So, a chattel mortgage, though made to secure an antecedent debt, is void as giving a preference to creditors, and as in fraud of the bankruptcy act, where at the time it was given the mortgagee had knowledge of the insolvency of the mortgagor. City Nat. Bank v. Goodrich, 3 Colo. 139 (1876).

And a mother who receives a chattel mortgage from her sons doing business as partners upon their entire stock with knowledge of their insolvent condition is not entitled to any preference as a bona fide secured creditor over other creditors. Cron v. Cron's Estate, 56 Mich. 8 (1885).

And a contract for the transfer of property, which gives one creditor a preference over others, is fraudulent if the party to be benefited thereby knew of the insolvency of the obligor, which knowledge must be shown by the party attacking the contract. White v. Trotter, 14 Smedes & M. 30, 53 Am. Dec. 112 (1850).

So, a mortgage taken for the purpose of preventing an equal distribution under the bankrupt law, and to prevent its having its free course, is void when the mortgagor was insolvent in fact and the mortgagee had reasonable cause to believe him to be insolvent and that he was acting in contemplation of insolvency. Beals v. Quinn, 101 Mass. 262 (1869).

existence or nonexistence of any statute. It is simply the common right that every one has to recover the value of his property when wrongfully taken. The plaintiffs, if they owned the goods, could have sued McGuire and the sheriff and the defendants jointly,

if they desired, or either of them separately. Lovejoy v. Murray, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 19, 18 L. ed. 134. The only issue in this controversy that was really contested is whether plaintiffs owned the goods levied on under the McGuire attachment. Their claim rests

And a transfer made while the vendor was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, the payment for which was made with a view to give preferences to the transferee over other creditors, the transferee having reasonable cause to believe that the vendor was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, authorizes the jury to infer that such transferee had reasonable cause to believe that the vendor intended the transfer as a preference. Abbott v. Shepard, 142 Mass. 17 (1886).

So, a sale by an insolvent debtor for the avowed purpose of securing creditors to a greater extent than is lawful under the provisions of the New York assignment law of 1887, of all his property to assignees of insufficient responsibility, substantially on credit and for the purchase price, taking the notes of the assignee on long time, is sufficient to warrant a finding that it was made with intent to defraud creditors. Evans v. Sims, 82 Hun, 386 (1894).

And a purchase by one who had reasonable cause to believe that it was the vendor's intent to contravene the insolvent laws would be void although the benefit of the preference thereby intended might inure, not to himself, but to another and wholly bona fide and innocent creditor, who by reason of his innocence could retain the payment. Crafts v. Belden, 99 Mass. 535 (1869).

So, a mortgage given by an insolvent corporation to secure an existing debt with intent to prefer a creditor who has reason to believe that the corporation is insolvent and that a preference is intended in fraud of the insolvency law, made within four months of the filing of a petition in insolvency, is invalid. Clay v. Towle, 78 Me. 86 (1886).

And a mortgage given by a failing debtor within four months of his insolvency to a mortgagee knowing his condition or having reasonable cause to suspect it, is invalid under the laws of Vermont prohibiting a conveyance by a debtor to a creditor within four months of insolvency where the creditor had reasonable cause to believe him insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency. Knower v. Haines, 31 Fed. Rep. 513 (1887).

And a mortgage executed by an insolvent debtor with intent to prefer a creditor who has reasonable cause to believe him to be insolvent, and knows it to have been made in fraud of the bankruptcy act, and who for the purpose of evading that act conceals and withholds the mortgage from record for several months, is void under the bankruptcy act, though executed more than two months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the mortgagor. Blennerhassett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080 (1882).

And in Forbes v. Howe, 102 Mass. 428, 3 Am. Rep. 475 (1869), an instruction that if a creditor had reasonable cause to believe that his debtor was insolvent, and with that knowledge took nearly all his property to secure himself at the same time knowing that the law required that his property should be divided equally among his creditors, it would go far towards supporting the inference that he had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor intended the mortgage as a preference, is not obnoxious to the objection that it is in the nature of a charge with respect to matters of fact.

So, a chattel mortgage made so near in point of time to an assignment as to be evidently a part of the purpose contemplated and a part of the same transaction, taken with knowledge of the insolvency of the mortgagor, constitutes an illegal preference under the Michigan insolvency laws. Heineman v. Hart, 55 Mich. 64 (1884).

And when an insolvent, at his own instance and convenience, voluntarily gives his creditor security, it is a suspicious circumstance, and if followed in a short time by an assignment, the conclusion will be justified, in the absence of other controlling circumstances, that both were contemplated and should be deemed in law one transaction, within the prohibition of How. (Mich.) Stat. § 8739, invalidating preferences in common-law assignments. Kellogg v. Root, 23 Fed. Rep. 525 (1885).

But an indemnity mortgage executed by a debtor for an honest purpose the day before he makes a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors is not invalidated thereby. Root v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420 (1886).

And chattel mortgages made and delivered by a failing debtor to secure valid and honest debts without fraud in fact, two days in advance of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, do not constitute an illegal preference under the Michigan statute providing that all assignments for creditors shall be void unless the same shall be without preference. Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498 (1886).

The fact that a chattel mortgage was executed but a few hours previous to the making of an assignment by the mortgagor for the benefit of creditors is not conclusive evidence of fraud which will entitle the assignee to recover the property as a part of the assigned estate. Brown v. Farmers' & M. Bkg. Co. 36 Neb. 434 (1893).

So, payment of a debt by an insolvent debtor cannot be regarded as a forbidden preference under the national bankruptcy act, unless the debtor intended thereby to give a preference and the creditor had reasonable cause to believe him to be insolvent. Stewart v. Hopkins, 30 Ohio St. 502 (1876).

And in order to invalidate a conveyance under that act on the ground that it was made as a preference, it must appear that the debtor was insolvent at the time of the conveyance or that he made it in contemplation of insolvency, that he did it with a view to give a preference to a creditor, that the party taking the conveyance or to be benefited by it had, at that time, reasonable cause to believe him to be insolvent, and that the conveyance was made in fraud of the provision of the act. Forbes v. Howe, 102 Mass. 428, 3 Am. Rep. 475 (1869); Rice v. Melendy, 41 Iowa, 395 (1875); Bauman v. Cunningham, 48 Minn. 292 (1892); Mays v. Fritton, 87 U. S. 30 Wall. 414, 22 L. ed. 369 (1874).

And a mortgage made by an insolvent within two months previous to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him upon the urgent request of a creditor is valid, where he supposed he could go on and pay his debts and did not at any time intend to assign or expect to be proceeded against in bankruptcy. Dow v. Sargent, 15 N. H. 115, 41 Am. Dec. 684 (1844).

And a mortgage for an actual bona fide loan in the ordinary course of business is not avoided by Maryland act of 1890, chap. 364, prohibiting preferences by merchants who are insolvent or contemplating insolvency, saving liens for money bona fide loaned, where there is nothing to show that the mortgagee knew the mortgagor was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, or of any attempt on his part to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors. Hinkleman v. Fey, 79 Md. 112 (1894).

upon the instrument executed by Jones & Fulton, and their title depends upon its integrity.

The different instructions given at the request of both parties, that appear in the record, but are not copied in our statement of the case, seem to state fairly the different propositions of law to which they relate, and to be free from error.

We do not find any reversible error in the refusal of the 18th instruction asked by the plaintiffs, which directed a verdict for them.

So, a mortgage given by a debtor to a creditor, covering all of a stock of merchandise, the debtor having other property before being insolvent, is not invalidated by S. C. Gen. Stat. § 2014, invalidating a disposition of his property by a debtor so as to give a preference to one or more of his creditors, where neither the vendor nor the purchaser had any suspicion that the vendor was insolvent. Waltz v. Potter, 32 Fed. Rep. 888 (1887).

Nor is it invalidated by the fact that the agent in whose name the mortgaged stock of goods is carried knew of the insolvency of his principal, where neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee had any suspicion of it. Ibid.

And a chattel mortgage given in consideration of an actual bona fide advance by the mortgagee without knowledge of the insolvency of the mortgagor or of any intention on his part to defeat, delay, or hinder his creditors, is not invalidated or affected by the statute. Campbell v. Patterson, 21 Can. S. C. 645 (1892).

And a mortgage executed by an insolvent debtor with intent to secure and prefer one creditor over others, covering a large portion of his property, is not void under the South Carolina assignment act. Gen. Stat. § 2014. Magovern v. Richard, 27 S. C. 272 (1886).

So, a creditor is not prevented from taking security by mortgage or otherwise from an insolvent debtor, with knowledge of his financial weakness, by How. (Mich.) Stat. § 8730, prohibiting preferences in common-law assignments, so long as the creditor has no notice or knowledge that the debtor contemplates making an assignment, but the security must be given at the instance of the creditor, be duly delivered, and he must have no notice or knowledge of any fraudulent purpose within the meaning of the statute. Kellogg v. Root, 23 Fed. Rep. 625 (1885).

And a mortgage given by an insolvent firm in anticipation of an assignment to certain creditors upon the firm property, which is accepted in payment or as security for just and valid debts without knowledge of such intended assignment, is not fraudulent as a preference in their favor. Sweetzer v. Highy, 63 Mich. 13 (1886).

And mortgages given by a failing debtor for a bona fide indebtedness to the full amount named in the respective instruments are not invalidated as illegal preferences where none of the mortgagees knew at the time they were executed that the mortgagor was insolvent or contemplated insolvency. Field v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 606 (1887).

So a mortgage by a debtor to a creditor intended to secure the creditor's claim will not be set aside under the Louisiana statute as giving an illegal preference where there is nothing to show that the mortgagees knew or believed that their debtor was unable to pay his debts and sought to give them an unwarrantable advantage. Barrett v. His Creditors, 4 Rob. (La.) 408 (1843).

And a mortgage given by a woman whose business had been mostly suspended during the time of making changes and improvements in her buildings, upon the receipt of a sum of money pursuant to a previous arrangement after which she became insolvent, does not necessarily require an inference that the conveyance was given or received with fraudulent intent within the Massachusetts statute, where at the time she expected to continue and the vendor had reason to believe that it had been profitable, and that she would be relieved from embarrassment and able to prosecute it with the aid he had furnished. Bridges v. Miles, 152 Mass. 249.

The fact that a purchaser had no knowledge of the insolvency of his vendor, or that he intended to sell to him as a preference, however, cannot avail to protect him under Md. Code, art. 47, §§ 22, 32, providing that preferences shall be deemed an act of insolvency, and that upon the adjudication therein provided for, all the estate and property of the debtor shall be divested, and that any such lien or preference shall be void. Willison v. First Nat. Bank, 80 Md. 196 (1894).

But a mortgage not followed by a general assignment within ninety days is good as against creditors, though the debtor was insolvent at the time to the knowledge of the grantor. Magovern v. Richard, 27 S. C. 272 (1886).

And a conveyance by a failing debtor with a view to insolvency, to a creditor who accepted it with knowledge of the circumstances and a view of securing a preference over other creditors, is not invalid as against a levying creditor under the Connecticut insolvency act where no proceedings in insolvency were instituted within sixty days. Sisson v. Roath, 30 Conn. 15 (1861).

And a transfer of a promissory note, made by a debtor to a creditor, to whom he was indebted more than the amount of the note, when he knew that his failure was unavoidable, with intent to prefer the creditor, is not a fraud upon the bankruptcy laws where the debtor is not adjudged a bankrupt within three months thereafter. Alexander v. Galt, 9 Fed. Rep. 149 (1881).

Nor are a judgment and a levy thereunder upon the property of an insolvent debtor invalidated by the fact that the judgment creditor knew of the insolvent condition of the debtor, and the lien thereof will not be displaced by subsequent proceedings in bankruptcy though commenced within four months of the levy of the execution or rendition of the judgment. Wilson v. City Bank, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 473, 21 L. ed. 723 (1883).

And so long as a corporation is a going concern engaged in the conduct of its business for which it was organized, and not known or believed to be insolvent by its officers and managers, with assets exceeding its liabilities by many thousand dollars, however, it is not in such a state of insolvency as will preclude a creditor from taking a mortgage upon its property to secure its debt, though it subsequently turns out that it was in fact unable to pay its debts and the debt was one for which the directors were security. Sabin v. Columbia River Lumber & F. Co. 25 Or. 15 (1893).

So, it is not enough that a creditor has some cause to suspect the insolvency of his debtor in order to invalidate a security taken for his debt, under the bankruptcy act; he must have such knowledge of such facts as would induce a reasonable belief of his debtor's insolvency. Grant v. First Nat. Bank, 97 U. S. 80, 24 L. ed. 971 (1877).

And a creditor has reasonable cause to believe a debtor who is a trader to be insolvent so as to render a transfer to him of a part of his property invalid as a fraud upon the bankruptcy act, when such a state of facts is brought to his notice respecting the affairs and pecuniary condition of the debtor as would lead a prudent business man to the conclusion that he is unable to meet his obliga-

We see but little, if anything, in the evidence, that even tends to establish fraud; but at the same time we do not undertake to say that there is absolutely no evidence of that kind.

The 19th instruction asked by the plaintiffs should have been given. It is not a fraud for one creditor to try to keep another from finding out about a trade that he is seeking to make, for no other purpose than his own protection.

In regard to the 20th instruction asked by the appellants, and refused by the court, we deem it sufficient to say that, in our opinion, its refusal was not error of which the appellants can complain. A proper disposition of this case can be arrived at by fairly construing the acts of the parties, without stopping to discuss the legal consequences of secret motives or mere intent, not acted upon or carried out.

The 21st instruction asked by the plaintiffs, and the 9th given by the court at the request of the defendants, both relate to the effect of the statement that Jones & Fulton claim the representatives of the plaintiffs made in regard to their money in bank and their accounts. Without discussing either of these instructions in detail, we are of the opinion that the purchasers were under no obligation whatever to take the money in bank on their debts instead of the goods; nor did the future disposition of the money or accounts concern them. If their debts were bona fide, they had a right, under the law, to collect them, either in money or property, however disastrous the consequences might be to others. Although Jones & Fulton, at the time they sold to the plaintiffs, may have intended to defraud their other creditors by appropriating to their own use the money and accounts, and although the purchasers may have known of this intention, their purchase could not be defeated on that account alone. Such was the decision of this court in Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425. If the purchasing creditor's debt is honest, and his only object is to secure the payment of his own debt, he is not affected by any motive or design that the debtor may have or entertain as to his other creditors. But he will not be permitted to protect himself by any fraud to which he is a party. Fraud cuts down everything, and no claim or title can rest upon any such foundation. So, in this case, if the disposition of the money in bank, and the accounts, or either of them, came up for discussion while negotiations were pending, the plaintiffs or their representatives might well have said to the vendors: "We are not concerned with that property. We care nothing about it, and your disposition of it is not material to us." The law would not attach any fraud to such words, or to any expressions of similar import.

The 11th instruction given at the request of the defendants was clearly erroneous. There is nothing in any part of the record, either in the bill of sale or in the oral evidence, disclosing any feature of an assignment. When the appellants accepted the bill of sale, they were bound by its terms, and were liable to every creditor whose debt was assumed; and that liability was in no manner dependent upon the disposition of the stock of goods.

For the errors indicated, the cause is reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

Wood, J., being disqualified, did not sit.

tions as they mature in the ordinary course of business. Toof v. Martin, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 40, 20 L. ed. 481 (1871).

But positive knowledge on the part of a creditor of the insolvency of his debtor need not be established in order to invalidate a sale by which he is given a preference. Proof of circumstances tending to produce a strong impression that he was aware of it is sufficient. De Blanc v. Martin, 2 Rob. (La.) 39 (1842).

So, a creditor who takes goods from his debtor in payment of a pre-existing debt, and assumes the payment of other debts to the debtor in an amount greater than his own, with the knowledge that the debtor had reserved from the stock of goods sold the amount exempt to him by law, is chargeable as matter of law with notice of the existence of other creditors of the debtor. Chipman v. Glennon, 98 Ala. 263 (1892).

And that the indebtedness of an insolvent to a creditor for which he makes a transfer of property was overdue, and that the creditor had been pressing him for payment without success, and that his checks drawn in their favor had been dishonored, and he was neglecting his business and running behind, to his knowledge, and that he knew of other indebtedness but did not know how much and that the sale to him was not in the regular course of business,—are sufficient to charge him with notice of the intent of the insolvent to prefer him contrary to the provisions of the insolvent act. Holcombe v. Ehrmantraut, 46 Minn. 397 (1891).

So, a transfer of property made by a debtor to his creditor not in the ordinary course of business is prima facie fraudulent within the meaning of the California insolvency act, and sufficient to charge the transferee with notice of the insolvency of the vendor. Godfrey v. Miller, 80 Cal. 420 (1889).

And a transfer made by a debtor to his creditor on Sunday, which is accepted without exemption with knowledge that the debtor's property had been attached on the preceding day, and that another attachment was expected, is not a transfer in the ordinary course of business, and the transferee will be charged with notice of the vendor's insolvency and with an intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his other creditors. Ibid.

And a transfer by a debtor to a particular creditor of his book accounts, made by way of orders drawn by the debtor on his debtors, is an assignment out of the ordinary course of business within the meaning of the insolvency act, and is prima facie evidence that the transferee had reasonable cause to believe that it was made to prevent the debtor's property from coming to his assignee in insolvency. Washburn v. Huntington, 78 Cal. 573 (1889).

And money paid by a debtor with intent to prefer a creditor cannot be recovered by the debtor's assignee under Massachusetts statute of 1841, chap. 124, § 3, providing for the recovery by the assignee of an insolvent debtor in specified cases from a creditor of such debtor, property assigned, sold, transferred, or conveyed to the creditor with intent to give a preference for the value thereof though the creditor also purchased goods of the debtor at that time knowing him to be insolvent. Wall v. Lakin, 13 Met. 167 (1847).

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY, Plf. in Err.,
v.

James McCANN.

(53 Ohio St. 127.)

1. The general assembly of this state has authority to prescribe the circumstances that shall constitute prima facie evidence of a fact in issue in an action on trial in the courts of this state, whether the cause of action to which it relates arose within or without the territorial limits of the state.

2. The provision of the second section of the act of April 2, 1890 (87 Ohio Laws, 149), which provide that when certain "defects shall be made to appear in the trial of any action in the courts of this state, brought by such employee or his legal representatives against any railroad corporation for damages on account of such injuries so received, the same shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of such corporation," applies to all railroad companies any part of whose line of railway extends into this state, whether the injury complained of was received within or without the state.

(January 21, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Mahoning County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from its negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Bradbury, J. :

On the 7th day of May, 1890, the defendant in error, who was a brakeman in the service of the plaintiff in error, in attempting, in the state of Pennsylvania, to board one of its moving cars, put his foot in a stirrup that was suspended from the sill of the car, and used as a step in mounting the car; the stirrup, or step, yielded to the pressure of his foot, causing him to be thrown under the car, whereby a wheel of the locomotive, which was backing, ran over one of his legs, inflicting the injury of which he complained in his petition. After the evidence on behalf of the defendant in error had been introduced, the plaintiff in error moved the court of common pleas to take the case from the jury and to render a judgment in its favor, which was done. Thereupon the defendant in error carried the cause to the circuit court to reverse the judgment of the court of common pleas.

The circuit court reversed the judgment of the court of common pleas on the sole ground that the act of April 2, 1890 (87 Ohio Laws, 149), was applicable, by force of which the fact that the stirrup was defective made a prima facie case of negligence against the railroad company. The railroad company thereupon, brought the cause to this court to reverse the judgment of the circuit court and reinstate that of the court of common pleas.

Mr. A. W. Jones for plaintiff in error.
Messrs. Cary & Boyle, George F. Arrel, W. T. Gibson, and R. B. Murray for defendant in error.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question arising upon the record of sufficient importance to be worthy of extended consideration is whether the act of the general assembly of this state, passed April 2, 1890 (87 Ohio Laws, 149), is applicable to the case or not, the injury complained of having been sustained beyond the limits of this state. It was contended in argument that the railroad upon which the plaintiff below was injured, lay wholly outside the state. The record, however, discloses that the railroad company, at the time and before the accident occurred, was operating a railroad running from Youngstown, in this state, to a point within the state of Pennsylvania, and in connection therewith, a branch, 4 or 5 miles long, on which the accident occurred, connecting the main line with certain coal mines from which it transported coal to the main line, and thence in different directions over the latter to market; and that in the discharge of his duties as servant of the railroad company, the defendant in error passed in and out of the state of Ohio, on the main line, as the exigencies of its business required.

The 2d section of the act in question (87 Ohio Laws, 149) prescribes the effect that shall be given to evidence which establishes a defect in the locomotives, cars, machinery, or attachments of certain railroads, in actions for injuries to its employees, caused by such defects; and declares that when such defects are made to appear the same shall be prima facie evidence of negligence.

There can be no doubt respecting the general power of a state to prescribe the rules of evidence which shall be observed by its judicial tribunals. It is a matter concerning its internal policy over which its legislative department necessarily has authority, limited only by the constitutional guaranties respecting due process of law, vested rights, and the inviolability of contracts. Columbus, H. V. & T. R. Co. v. Erick, 51 Ohio St. 146.

In Templeton v. Kraver, 24 Ohio St. 554, this court held that "under the grant of legislative power in the Constitution, the general assembly has complete control over the remedies which are to be afforded to parties in the courts of the state; and if the remedies provided do not interfere with vested rights, such effect must be given them as will carry out the intent of the law-making power."

The rules of evidence pertain to the remedy, and usually are the same whether the cause of action in which they are applied, arises within or without the state, whose tribunal

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—For illustration of power of legislature to make rule as to prima facie evidence, see also Wooten v. State (Fla.) 1 L. R. A. 819.
31 L. R. A.

is investigating the facts in contention between the parties before it. Nor is it material in this respect whether the parties are residents or nonresidents of the state. The law of evidence in its ordinary operation is no more affected by one of these considerations than by the other. No extra-territorial effect is given to a statute creating a rule of evidence by the fact that the rule is applied to the trial of a cause of action arising in another state, or to the trial of an action between parties who are nonresidents. If the tribunals of a state obtain jurisdiction of the parties and the cause, it will conduct the investigation of the facts in controversy between them according to its own rules of evidence, which is, simply, to follow its own laws within its own borders. This principle was followed by the supreme court of Georgia in the case of Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 92 Ga. 77, an action quite similar to the one we are now considering, the court saying: "Touching the evidence requisite to make a prima facie case in behalf of the plaintiff below, the court gave in charge to the jury the rule of law applicable in this state between the parties where the action is against a railroad company for a personal injury sustained by one of its employees in consequence of the negligence of the company. . . . This was correct although the injury sued for was sustained in the state of Alabama. The quality or degree of evidence requisite to sustain an action or to change the burden of proof is determined by the law of the forum and not by the law of the place where the cause of action arose. It belongs, not to the law of rights, but to the law of remedy." The court of appeals of New York held in 1876 that "an act declaring any circumstance or any evidence, however slight prima facie proof of a fact is valid." Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262. The cases that bear in some degree upon the question are so numerous that it is impracticable to cite all of them. Hayes v. Armstrong, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 248; Parker v. Sterling, 10 Ohio, 357; Levis v. McElean, 16 Ohio, 347; Goshorn v. Purcell, 11 Ohio St. 641; Mason v. Haile, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 370, 6 L. ed. 660; Vanzant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg. 260; United States v. Quincy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 585, 18 L. ed. 403; Long's Appeal, 87 Pa. 114; Rathbone v. Bradford, 1 Ala. 312; Holland v. Dickerson, 41 Iowa, 367.

Doubtless it would be competent for the general assembly to limit the application of a rule of evidence, created by it to causes of action arising within the state. If, therefore, the act under consideration does so limit the rule of evidence it establishes, the courts should observe this limitation. That the act has three sections: The first section provides "that it shall be unlawful for any railroad or railway corporation or company owning and operating, or operating, or that may hereafter own or operate, a railroad in whole or in part within this state, to adopt or promulgate any rule," and then denounces with a penalty the violation of its provisions.

This section of the statute attempts to regulate the conduct of every railroad company or corporation that owns or operates any part of its line within this state. The general assembly has no authority over any others, and therefore could not compel their obedience to its commandments. It did, however, extend those commandments to the extreme limits of its jurisdiction—possibly beyond them—for it may be true that although the line of a railroad may extend into this state, yet the general assembly may have no authority to inflict upon it penalties on account of acts or omissions occurring elsewhere. If this be so, the courts in construing this section, might hesitate to impute to the legislature an intent to usurp an authority it did not possess, and would not do so unless the language of the statute should be unambiguous in this respect. In terms, this section does not require the forbidden conduct to occur in this state in order to incur the penalty that it denounces therefor. The language of the section is broad enough to include acts and omissions performed or omitted in other states. This circumstance is important only in so far as it indicates a legislative purpose to extend the relief afforded by the act to the full extent of its authority.

The second section in forbidding the use of defective cars and locomotives by railroad companies, refers to them as "such corporations" manifestly including every corporation owning or operating a railroad, any part of which extends into this state. Here, again, the prohibitive language employed is broad enough to include acts or conduct occurring in other states. If it does not reach them we are forced to conclude that this result is quite as much due to want of power as to absence of purpose.

In the subsequent clause of the 2d section of the act, wherein the general assembly sought to prescribe the rule of evidence, before referred to, applicable to the trial of actions in the courts of this state, brought by employees of railroad companies on account of injuries sustained by reason of defective cars, locomotives, machinery, or attachments, it approached the question of procedure in our judicial tribunals, over which, as we have seen, the authority of the general assembly is practically supreme. This clause of the statute is purely remedial and should receive a liberal construction. The language employed by the act in this connection is consistent with a legislative purpose to extend the remedy to all actions of the character named in the act, against all railroad companies, and no sufficient reason has been assigned for limiting its operation to causes of action that arose within the state. Indeed, it would be somewhat anomalous to prescribe to the courts of the state rules of evidence depending upon the questions whether the cause of action arose within or without the state; and an intent to create this distinction should not be imputed to the legislative power unless it is fairly inferable from the language it has used.

That language is as follows: "And when the fact of such defect shall be made to appear in the trial of any action in the courts of this state brought by such employee or his legal representatives against any railroad corporation for damages on account of such injuries so received the same shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of such corporations. This language contains nothing indicating a purpose to confine the rule of evidence it creates, to causes of action that should arise in this state. On the contrary it expressly extends the rule to "any action in the courts of this state brought by such employee . . . against any railroad corporation." In fact, the language is comprehensive enough to apply the rule to a railroad company, in this class of actions, whether any part of its line extended into Ohio or not, and if the courts of our state should acquire jurisdiction over the person of a railroad company whose line lay wholly without the state, no reason is perceived why the rule should not be applied.

Judgment affirmed.

Shauck, J., dissenting:

It is not doubted that some of the provisions of the act of April 2, 1890 (87 Ohio Laws, 149), relate to the remedy in the cases contemplated, nor that the law of the forum determines all questions relating to the remedy. The only point of difference between the courts below and between counsel here, is whether the language of the act referred to does not exclude from its operation cases in which the cause of action arose upon a railroad lying wholly within another state. If its terms do not permit its application in such cases the court of common pleas did not err in its judgment, otherwise the judgment of reversal in the circuit court should be affirmed.

The scope of the act is expressly defined in the 1st section: "That it shall be unlawful for any railroad or railway corporation or company owning and operating, or operating, or that may hereafter own or operate a railroad in whole or in part in this state to adopt," etc. The remaining provisions of the 1st section relate to the contractual relations of such companies and their employees.

The 2d section of the act creates a prima facie presumption, not according to the common law, in favor of the injured person. By the terms of the section it affects only "such corporation," that is, a railroad corporation operating "a railroad in whole or in part in this state." The duty enjoined by the section, and the presumption raised do not concern railroad corporations generally, but, by express restriction, only those described in the 1st section.

The general purpose of the act is to afford citizens of the state the protection of its provisions. Some of its provisions would be void if an attempt were made to apply them to roads lying in other states, and that would be true even if the general assembly had attempted to make them so applicable.

To hold that these remedial provisions are applicable to a case of this character is to ignore the general purpose of the act and to deny effect to the language by which its operation is expressly restricted.

Doubtless it would be the duty of the court to enforce the act with the limitations thus clearly indicated, even if the reasons for such limitation did not appear. Those reasons, however, are apparent. They are illustrated by the circumstances of this case. The general policy of the state has looked to the relief of suitors from the long and vexatious delays which all recognize. It would be quite remarkable if that policy had been interrupted by a statute creating a presumption in favor of plaintiffs not afforded elsewhere, and inviting the citizens of all the states to enter the courts of Ohio to secure its benefits, without any conditions except those which are imposed by the requirements of the Code as to service of summons.

Whether attention be directed to the general purposes of the act, to the circumstances under which it was enacted, or to its express provisions, it appears that the general assembly was concerned only for citizens of the state and that it has taken care to avert consequences which this judgment of affirmance invites.

Burket, J., dissents and concurs in the foregoing.

Spear, J., did not sit in the case.

CINCINNATI, HAMILTON, & DAYTON RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

METROPOLITAN NATIONAL BANK.

(53 Ohio St. 117.)

An action cannot be maintained against a bank by the holder of a check for refusal to pay it, unless the check has been accepted, although there stands to the credit of the drawer on the books of the bank a sum more than sufficient to meet the check.

(January 21, 1896.)

ERROR to the Superior Court of Cincinnati to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of a check. Affirmed.

Statement by Spear, J.:

The action below was by the plaintiff in error against defendant in error to recover on a bank check. The petition was in words and figures following:

"The plaintiff is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Ohio. The defendant is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the United States. There is due to the plaintiff from the defendant upon the check, a copy of which, there being no credits nor indorsements thereon, is hereto attached, made part hereof, and marked 'Exhibit A,' the sum of

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—The conflict of authorities upon the question of the effect of a check to give the holder a right of action against the drawee bank is clearly presented in the above case. For other cases on this subject, see also Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. (Ill.) 23 L. R. A. 611; Akin v. Jones (Tenn.) 25 L. R. A. 523.

$338.31, with interest from May 11, 1886. The plaintiff is the owner and holder of said check, and on May 11, 1886, presented it for payment to the defendant, who at that time, and at the time of the drawing of said check, had funds of said J. E. Ash on deposit, more than sufficient to pay the same, but the defendant refused to pay said check. Wherefore the plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant for said sum of $338.31, with interest from May 11, 1886, for its costs, and all other relief to which it may be entitled."

Exhibit A.

Cincinnati, May 10, 1886.

Metropolitan National Bank: Pay to the order of C. H. & D. R. R. Co. three hundred and thirty-eight $\frac{1}{10}$ dollars. \$338.31.

[Signed] J. E. Ash.

A general demurrer was interposed by the bank, and the holding of the superior court at general term was, in effect, to sustain the demurrer. Judgment for the bank followed, to reverse which the present proceeding is prosecuted.

Messrs. Ramsey, Maxwell, & Ramsey, for plaintiff in error:

A check is drawn upon an existing fund, and is an absolute transfer or appropriation by the holder of so much money in the hands of the drawee.

Morrison v. Bailey, 5 Ohio St. 13, 64 Am. Dec. 682; Stewart v. Smith, 17 Ohio St. 82; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195.

In Ohio the objection of want of privity cannot prevail, for a third person for whose benefit a contract is made may maintain an action at law upon it.

Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 338; Bagaley v. Waters, 7 Ohio St. 367; Trimble v. Strother, 25 Ohio St. 881; Breuer v. Maurer, 38 Ohio St. 548, 43 Am. Rep. 486; Enmitt v. Brophy, 42 Ohio St. 82.

The payee may maintain an action against the bank upon the check.

Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35 (1860); Chicago Marine & F. Ins. Co. v. Stanford, 28 Ill. 168, 81 Am. Dec. 270 (1862); Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185 (1875); Roberts v. Corbin, 26 Iowa, 815; Lester v. Given, 8 Bush, 358 (1871); Gordon v. Muchler, 34 La. Ann. 608 (1882); Fonner v. Smith, 31 Neb. 107, 11 L. R. A. 528 (1891); Fogarties v. State Bank, 12 Rich. L. 518, 78 Am. Dec. 468 (1860); 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1638.

Messrs. Pogue, Pottinger, & Pogue, for defendant in error:

The payee of a check cannot maintain an action on it against the drawee, the bank, when the bank refuses to accept it.

Nearly every court of last resort in the United States and England which has passed upon this question for the first time since the decision in National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897 (1869), has said that the payee has no right to sue the drawee on failure to accept either at law or in equity.

There can scarcely be a clearer expression than that used by our supreme court in Covert v. Rhodes, 48 Ohio St. 66 (1891), that it has established this same doctrine in this state in harmony with the views of courts of last resort, whose integrity, thoroughness, and intellectual strength are recognized everywhere, when it says: "A bank check or draft for a part of the sum due the drawer does not, before acceptance by the drawee, constitute an equitable assignment of the amount for which it is drawn."

An ordinary bill of exchange or draft drawn generally and not upon any particular fund, whether accepted or not by the drawee, does not operate as an equitable assignment.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1284; Metropolitan Bank v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 27 Ohio L. J. 105.

A payee of a check cannot sue the bank, the drawee, which has refused to accept a check, even though it may have funds of the drawer sufficient to pay it when presented.

National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897 (1869); First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343, 24 L. ed. 229 (1876); Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 514, 30 L. ed. 705 (1887); Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 391, 31 L. ed. 427 (1888); Essex County Nat. Bank v. Bank of Montreal, 7 Biss. 195; Dykens v. Leather Mfrs. Bank, 11 Paige, 616 (1844); Ætna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 814 (1871); Atty. Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 325, 27 Am. Rep. 55 (1877); Risley v. Phenix Bank, 83 N. Y. 318, 38 Am. Rep. 421 (1891); Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray, 605, 61 Am. Dec. 433 (1854); Carr v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 48, 9 Am. Rep. 6 (1871); Jermyn v. Moffitt, 75 Pa. 399 (1874); Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 23 (1882); Kuhn v. Warren Sav. Bank, 20 W. N. C. 230 (1887); First Nat. Bank v. Shoemaker, 117 Pa. 94 (1887); Creveling v. Bloomsbury Nat. Bank, 46 N. J. L. 255, 50 Am. Rep. 417 (1884); Moses v. Franklin Bank, 34 Md. 580 (1871); Purcell v. Allemon, 22 Gratt. 742 (1872); Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 538, 58 Am. Rep. 805 (1884); Second Nat. Bank v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282 (1865); Grammel v. Carner, 55 Mich. 201, 54 Am. Rep. 868 (1884); Brennan v. Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 343 (1886); Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Coates, 79 Mo. 168, 17 Rep. 17 (1883); Bush v. Foote, 58 Miss. 5, 38 Am. Rep. 310 (1880); Planters' Bank v. Merritt, 7 Heisk. 177 (1874); Pickle v. Muse, 88 Tenn. 380, 7 L. R. A. 93 (1889); Cushman v. Harrison, 90 Cal. 297 (1891); Buttcher v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 15 Colo. 16 (1890); Satterwhite v. Melzer (Ariz.) 24 Pac. 184 (1890); Hopkinson v. Forster, L. R. 19 Eq. 74 (1874).

This is on the principle that there can be no foundation for an action on the part of the holder unless there is a privity of contract between him and the bank.

National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 155, 19 L. ed. 899; Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 391, 31 L. ed. 427.

There is neither a legal nor an equitable interest in the payee which entitles him to sue the bank.

Ætna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; Risley v. Phenix Bank, 83 N. Y. 318, 38 Am. Rep. 421; First Nat. Bank v. Shoemaker, 117 Pa. 94; Carr v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 48; Hopkinson v. Forster, L. R. 19 Eq. 74; Brennan v.

Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 348; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Coates, supra; Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 539, 58 Am. Rep. 805; Pickle v. Muse, 88 Tenn. 380, 7 L. R. A. 93; 2 Ames, Bills & Notes, 735.

States which deny the right of a payee of a check to sue the drawee of a check on his refusal to accept the check do not deny the right of a third party, for whose benefit a contract is made, to maintain an action upon it.

Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268 (1859); Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327 (1861); Campbell v. Smith, 71 N. Y. 28, 27 Am. Rep. 5 (1877); Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 411 (1871); Pike v. Brown, 7 Cush. 133 (1851); Mellen v. Whipple, 1 Gray, 317 (1854); Carr v. National Security Bank, supra; Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354 (1875); Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10 (1876); Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. 80 (1879); Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504 (1875); Heim v. Vogel, 69 Mo. 529 (1879); Fitzgerald v. Barker, 70 Mo. 635 (1879); Bassett v. Bradley, 48 Conn. 225 (1880); Harrison v. Wright, supra; Day v. Patterson, 18 Ind. 114; Devot v. McIntosh, 23 Ind. 529; Cross v. Truesdale, 28 Ind. 45 (1867); Brice v. King, 1 Head, 153 (1858); Moore v. Stocall, 2 Lea, 543; Thompson v. Thompson, 3 Lea, 127; O'Neal v. Washington County School Comrs. 27 Md. 227 (1867); Green v. Morrison, 5 Colo. 18; Hutchinson v. Simon, 57 Miss. 628.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented is whether or not a payee of a bank check can maintain an action against the bank where the latter, on presentation, refuses to pay it, the drawer having, at the time, a credit on the books of the bank more than sufficient to meet the check. Questions bearing some relation to this have been considered by this court, but the precise question has not heretofore been determined. Authority is found supporting the affirmative of this proposition. The grounds urged are not identical in all cases, nor is the reasoning wholly consistent, but the following is believed to be a fair résumé of the conclusions: Because of the universal usage of banks to cash the checks drawn by a depositor where he has sufficient unencumbered balance standing to his credit, a duty is implied on the part of the bank to so pay, and the holder takes the check relying upon this usage. Serious injury may result to the holder by the bank's refusal to pay, for, while he may have an action against the drawer that would prove delusive in the frequent instance of the drawer's insolvency, the bank's wrongful action would be the real cause of the loss. The law therefore implies a contract on the part of the bank with its depositors to pay their checks as presented so long as the fund is sufficient, and should, for like reasons, imply a contract with whoever may become the holder of such check to pay on presentation. The check is treated as an equitable assignment pro tanto of the fund in the hands of the bank, and by the act of presentation the check holder is brought in privity with the bank, his right to sue completed, and he may sue the drawer and the bank in one action, the former as drawer and the latter as an implied acceptor. 81 L. R. A.

He may also sue the drawer on the check's dishonor, or the bank for money had and received. Forcible and ingenious arguments in support of the right to maintain the action are presented by Mr. Morse in his valuable work on Banking; by Mr. Daniel in his treatise on Negotiable Instruments (vol. 2, § 1638), where the arguments pro and con are stated, and ably reviewed; and by a number of decisions, some of which are the following: Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35; Chicago Marine & F. Ins. Co. v. Stanford, 28 Ill. 168, 81 Am. Dec. 270; Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185, (but see opinion in Essex County Nat. Bank v. Bank of Montreal, 7 Biss. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 4,532); Roberts v. Corbin, 26 Iowa, 315; Lester v. Given, 8 Bush, 357; Fogarties v. State Bank, 12 Rich. L. 518, 78 Am. Dec. 468; Gordon v. Muchler, 34 La. Ann. 608; Fonner v. Smith, 31 Neb. 107, 11 L. R. A. 528. The contrary doctrine is maintained by many text-writers and decisions. Following are some of the authorities: 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, p. 280; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1234; Van Schaack, Bank Checks, 212; National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 843, 24 L. ed. 229; Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 514, 30 L. ed. 705; Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 391, 31 L. ed. 427; Ætna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; Atty. Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 325, 27 Am. Rep. 55; Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray, 605, 61 Am. Dec. 433; Carr v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 48, 9 Am. Rep. 6; Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 23; Kuhn v. Warren Sav. Bank, 20 W. N. C. 230; First Nat. Bank v. Shoemaker, 117 Pa. 94; Creveling v. Bloomsbury Nat. Bank, 46 N. J. L. 255, 50 Am. Rep. 417; Moses v. Franklin Bank, 84 Md. 580; Purcell v. Allemon, 22 Gratt. 742; Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 538, 58 Am. Rep. 805; Grammel v. Carner, 55 Mich. 201, 54 Am. Rep. 363; Brennan v. Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 342; Bush v. Foote, 58 Miss. 5, 38 Am. Rep. 310; Planters' Bank v. Merritt, 7 Heisk. 177; Pickle v. Muse, 88 Tenn. 380, 7 L. R. A. 93; Cushman v. Harrison, 90 Cal. 297; Boettcher v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 15 Colo. 16; Satterwhite v. Melcer (Ariz.) 24 Pac. 184; Hopkinson v. Forster, L. R. 19 Eq. 74; Wald's Pollock, Cont. 190, 204; 2 Ames, Bills & Notes, 735.

It is not doubted that, as a general proposition, there can be no cause of action upon a contract unless there is privity of contract between the obligor and the party complaining. But it is urged in argument here that, while the want of privity is a good objection to the action in those states which deny the right of a third party for whose benefit a contract is made to maintain an action upon it, in Ohio the objection of want of privity cannot prevail for the reason, as held by this court in a number of cases, that an agreement made on a valid consideration by one person with another, to pay money to a third, can be enforced by the latter in his own name, and that the third person is not named does not affect the right to enforce it. The most recent case involving this principle is that of Emmitt v. Brophy, 43 Ohio St. 82. The action was upon a bond.

given by Emmitt to the county commissioners in the sale of a bridge by the Scioto Bridge Company, in which Emmitt obligated himself "to pay off and liquidate all claims and demands, whether in judgment or otherwise, existing against said bridge, so that the full use of said bridge may inure to the public without let or hindrance." Brophy at the time was a judgment creditor, and the owner of all of the claims enumerated in the bond. Owen, J., in the opinion, after reciting the facts, observes: "These facts are strongly suggestive that it entered into the contemplation of the parties to this bond, at the time of its execution, that this particular lien of the plaintiffs upon the bridge was to be discharged by Emmitt. Its existence was known to them and they seem to have left nothing to conjecture. Indeed, if Brophy and Potter had been expressly named as the lienholders, it is difficult to see how this would have added to the definiteness of the bond, or made more certain the intention of the parties. This seems to be a conclusive answer to the suggestion that there is a want of privity." No one of the cases cited carries the doctrine farther than the foregoing. In no one of them is it held that a right to sue in a stranger can be raised by mere implication. Nowhere is it held that the obligation will attach in favor of future creditors not named and not known, and as to amounts not specified, or then ascertainable, to the extent of giving to such creditors a right of action on the contract. It must be apparent, even on brief reflection, that it does not follow from these decisions that there is privity between checkholder and bank before acceptance; and that, in order to cover the case at bar a marked extension of the doctrine must be made. Reasons urged for such extension, however plausible, do not seem sufficient. On the contrary, strong reasons against the proposition may be adduced; among others, this: The transaction of giving the check does not, as will be shown further on, substitute the checkholder for the drawer. The latter may maintain an action for the breach of the contract to honor his check, and, if the holder has a similar right, the result is that two persons may maintain separate actions upon the same instrument at the same time to recover against the same defendant as a principal debtor. The inference that the right to recover by the checkholder is denied only in the states where a right of recovery is refused to one for whose benefit a contract is made by another arises from a misapprehension of the authorities. In many states where the right of a checkholder to sue the bank is not assented to the right of one for whose benefit a contract is made to recover upon it is recognized. See Lawrence v. For, 20 N. Y. 268; Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327; Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399; Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. 78; Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504; O'Neal v. Washington County School Comrs, 27 Md. 240; Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Heim v. Vogel, 69 Mo. 529; Fitzgerald v. Barker, 70 Mo. 685; Cross v. Truesdale, 28 Ind. 44; Brice v. King, 1 Head, 152; Green v. Morrison, 5 Colo. 18.

31 L. R. A.

It is insisted that the case should not turn alone on the legal idea of privity, for under our system of procedure it is immaterial whether the interest of the payee against the bank is legal or equitable, and that the action here may be maintained on equitable grounds. In a well-considered case (Covert v. Rhodes, 48 Ohio St. 66), this court held that "a bank check or draft for a part of the sum due the drawer does not, before acceptance by the drawee, constitute an equitable assignment of the amount for which it is drawn." The conclusion is amply sustained by the reasoning of the opinion, and no discussion of the subject is necessary. If there is no equitable assignment of the debt pro tanto, how can equitable considerations avail? The proceeding is not an equitable one; and, if it were, we do not understand that equity has different rules from those of law with respect to the rights and obligations of parties to negotiable paper. As applicable to such case we believe that reason and the great preponderance of authority establish the following conclusions: The relation of bank and general depositor is simply the ordinary one of debtor and creditor, not of agent and principal, or trustee and cestui que trust. The bank agrees with its depositor to receive his deposits, to account with him for the amount, to repay him on demand, and to honor his checks to the amount of his credit when the checks are presented; and for any breach of that agreement the bank is liable to an action by him. The deposits become the absolute property of the bank, impressed with no trust, and the bank's right to use the money for its own benefit is immediate and continuous, which right constitutes the consideration for the bank's promise to the depositor. The bank's agreement with the depositor involves or implies no agreement with the holder of a check. The giving of a check is not an assignment of so much of the creditor's claim. It passes no title, legal or equitable, to the holder in the moneys previously deposited; nor does it create a lien on the fund, for there is no special fund out of which the check can be paid, nor does it transfer any money to the credit of the holder. It is simply an order which may be countermanded and payment forbidden by the drawer any time before it is actually cashed or accepted. If accepted, then the agreement is to pay according to the terms of the check or acceptance; but until then the payee looks exclusively to the drawer. He can maintain no action against the bank, for the bank owes to the payee no legal duty, and an action at law cannot be maintained unless there is shown to have been a failure in the performance of legal duty. Being liable to the drawer to account with him for failure to honor his check, the bank cannot, either on legal or equitable considerations, be held at the same time liable to the holder of the check.

Tested by these rules, the plaintiff could have no cause of action against the bank, and the superior court committed no error in the judgment rendered.

Judgment affirmed.

SNYDER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Andrew G. SNYDER et al.

(.....Ohio.....)

*1. Upon the dissolution of a trading copartnership, its assets, including the good will of the business, may be sold as a whole, either by the partners directly, or through a receiver under an order of the court in a case to which they are parties; and a purchaser thereof, under either method of sale, is entitled to continue the business as the successor of the firm, and make use of the firm name for that purpose.

2. Where the purchaser transfers the property so acquired by him to a corporation of which he is a member, organized to succeed to the business, it may carry on the business in the same manner, under a corporate name including the name which had been used by the firm.

(January 21, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ashtabula County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enjoin the use of a name. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burke & Ingersolls and A. A. Thayer, for plaintiff in error.

The Snyners had no right in law to enjoin the use of that name.

Brass & I. Works Co. v. Payne, 50 Ohio St. 115, 19 L. R. A. 82; Kerr, Inj. 457; Hudson v. Osborne, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 79; Rogers v. Taintor, 97 Mass. 291; Caswell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 485; Banks v. Gibson, 84 Beav. 566.

Messrs. Theodore Hall and Dickey, Carr, & Goff, for defendants in error:

Said partnership had expired by limitation, and there was no good will to sell.

Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 287, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Mussetman's Appeal, 66 Pa. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 382; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 22 Beav. 84; Horton Mfg. Co. v. Horton Mfg. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 816; Hove v. Searing, 10 Abb. Pr. 264.

The plaintiff in error admits that its object in using the term "Snyder Manufacturing Company" and the word "Snyder" is to gain any benefit that may be derived from the good reputation that name has acquired in the trade; and avers at the same time that there is no person by the name of Snyder connected with the corporation. This is practising such a deception upon the public as courts of equity will not countenance.

Morgan v. Schuyler, 79 N. Y. 490, 35 Am. Rep. 543; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 27 L. ed. 706; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Buckland v. Rice, 40 Ohio St. 526.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action below was brought by Andrew

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—For name as part of good will of a business, see note to Vonderbank v. Schmitt (La.) 15 L. R. A. 462.

81 L. R. A.

G. Snyder and William A. Snyder, against the Snyder Manufacturing Company, to enjoin the use, by the defendant, of the name "Snyder Manufacturing Company," and especially the use of the word "Snyder" in that name. Certain averments of the petition are denied by the answer, and some allegations of the answer are controverted by reply; but the issues thus raised seem unimportant in the light of the facts admitted by the pleadings, which are, in substance, as follows: The plaintiffs, who are now, and for several years past have been, engaged in business as manufacturers of certain kinds of goods at the city of Piqua, in this state, for many years before carried on the same kind of a business at Ashtabula, also in this state, and by their skill and attention to business established a valuable reputation in their business, which was carried on under the name of Snyder & Son. Then, on the 7th day of September, 1887, they and two other persons formed a copartnership with W. H. Bradley, who was the owner of a manufactory at Ashtabula, employed in the manufacture of goods similar to those made by the plaintiffs, for the purpose of combining the business of the parties and thereafter continuing the same as one concern. By the terms of the partnership agreement, Bradley was to, and did, contribute one half of the capital, and, in addition thereto, furnish the use of his manufactory without charge and expend at least $3,000 in putting the same in repair; as an offset to which the plaintiffs were to, and did, put in the good will of their business, and they and their two associates were to, and did, contribute the other half of the capital and devote their time and skill to the manufacture of goods and the general management of the business of the partnership; Bradley not being required to give any time or attention thereto. This copartnership which carried on its business under the firm name of "Snyder Manufacturing Company" continued for a period of three years acquiring under that name an extensive and profitable business and a good reputation; and at its termination the parties being unable to effect a satisfactory settlement, the plaintiffs, to obtain a settlement of its affairs, commenced an action, in which a receiver was appointed at their instance, who took possession of the partnership effects, and afterwards, under an order of the court so directing him, sold the same, with the good will of the firm, at public sale. The order of sale contained an express provision that the purchaser should have the right to carry on the business as the successor of the firm, and was so made without objection from any of the partners, all of whom were parties to the action. The plaintiffs and Bradley were competing bidders at the sale, when the latter bidding more than his competitors for the assets and good will of the firm and being the highest bidder therefor, became the purchaser. The sale was duly confirmed by the court and the property transferred to Bradley, who shortly thereafter, with other persons organized a corporation under the laws of this state, with the name of "the Snyder Manufacturing Company," for the purpose of continuing the business at the manufactory which had been operated by the firm, and the partnership effects and good will that Bradley had purchased were transferred with the manufacturing plant to the corporation, which has since in its corporate name been doing a business of like character to that formerly done by the copartnership, and claiming to be its successor. That manner of conducting its business by the corporation was enjoined by the judgment which it is sought here to have reversed; and whether there should be a reversal, or not, it is conceded depends on the effect of Bradley's purchase of the assets including the good will of the partnership, and their transfer by him to the defendant corporation. Did the defendant in that way acquire the right to carry on a business in the name adopted by it, like that which had been done by the previously existing partnership, and as its successor? Without attempting an accurate or exhaustive definition of the good will of the business, it may be said that it practically consists of that favorable disposition or inclination of persons to extend their patronage to the business on account of the reputation it has established; and, as the business is always associated with the name under which it is conducted, the name becomes a part, and often an important part, of its good will. The good will of a copartnership is regarded in law as property, constituting a part of its assets, and having a salable value in connection with its tangible property, sometimes exceeding all its other assets, because of the advantages afforded a purchaser of retaining an established custom, and enlarging it. As a general rule, when it becomes necessary to sell the partnership effects the good will should be valued and sold with, and as a part of them, and ordinarily it passes by a sale of them though not expressly mentioned.

It is well settled that when a partner sells his interest in the business to a copartner without a reservation or exception of the good will, the purchaser is entitled, not only to continue the business in the name of the firm and as its successor, but he may prevent the selling partner or other person from carrying on business in that way; and no good reason is apparent why the same result should not attend a purchase of the entire assets and good will of the firm by one of the partners at a sale thereof made under an order of court in a proceeding to which the partners were parties; especially, if the sale be so made at their instance and for their benefit. Indeed the authorities appear to go further and maintain that upon the dissolution of a copartnership there being no agreement between its members to the contrary, the court having the parties before it may order the good will to be sold or disposed of as may be deemed most advantageous to the partners; and that the purchaser at such sale, though a stranger to the firm, may lawfully continue the use of the firm name in carrying on the business thereafter. And that seems but the logical result of the rule that the rights mentioned belong to a partner who becomes a purchaser at such sale; for, in order to insure a fair sale, all bidders should stand upon an equality, which would not be so if the rights acquired at the sale were to be varied or made to depend upon the relation which the purchaser had sustained to the partnership, or other individual circumstance. The salable value of the good will is whatever it is worth in the market when open to untrammelled competition; and when brought to that test for the benefit of the partners, it is not for them to assert that the purchaser obtained less than they authorized to be sold, or induced him to believe he was buying.

It is contended that Bradley did not become the owner of the good will of the late firm of which he was a member, by his purchase at the receiver's sale, because, (1) the good will of the plaintiffs was put into the firm as an offset to the use of Bradley's manufactory, and only for the period agreed upon for the duration of the partnership, and therefore at the expiration of that period the plaintiffs were reinvested with their good will, as was Bradley with the possession of his property; (2) the order of the court under which the sale was made expressly excludes any right on the part of the purchaser to make use of the firm name; and, (3) the good will ceased upon the termination of the partnership, and consequently, could not be sold.

1. With respect to the first of these propositions, it may be observed that what the order of the court directed to be sold, and what the receiver under its authority in fact sold, was not the good will or property of the plaintiffs, but those belonging to the firm. The plaintiffs' business and its good will as they existed at the formation of the partnership, were absorbed and merged in those of the firm, and went to make up its assets, and, in so far as they did so, became the property of the firm, subject to sale under the order with its other effects, and with them vested in the purchaser. Conceding, however, that the plaintiffs, at the expiration of the partnership into which they had entered with Bradley, were restored to the good will which belonged to their business when the partnership was formed, and were entitled to resume that business under the name they had formerly used, it is not perceived how that could operate to vest in them any part of the good will of the firm, or prevent its vesting in Bradley under the receiver's sale.

2. The order under which the sale was made, directs the receiver to sell all the property of the firm "as a whole, including the good will," and provides that "the purchaser shall have the right to carry on the business as successor to the Snyder Manufacturing Company;" but states, that "the court does not pass upon or make any order whatever as to what name said purchaser would have the right to use in carrying on said business." The last clause of the order is relied upon as excluding any right on the part of the purchaser under it to employ the name of the firm in any business he might choose to carry on after the purchase, and as further excluding any authority to do such business as the successor of the firm. But it is obvious the clause has not that operation. Instead of being an adjudication abridging the rights of the purchaser with regard to the use of the firm name, its design was to leave the determination of those rights, in any controversy that might thereafter arise concerning them, unaffected by the order. And, as a partner who purchases the property and good will of the copartnership becomes entitled to the use of the firm name in the absence of a stipulation forbidding it, an express provision in the sale, or the order of the court under which it was made, that the purchaser should have that right, was unnecessary.

3. The proposition mainly urged in support of the judgment below is, that the good will of a copartnership can exist only so long as it is a going concern, and, ceasing upon the termination of the partnership, is not thereafter a subject of sale. It may be that when a firm is dissolved, its effects distributed, or sold in parcels to purchasers not wishing to embark in a similar business, and its affairs are wound up, its good will is dissipated and lost; but that results from the acts of the partners themselves in making such a disposition of the assets as renders the good will unavailable as a salable article, for it is not a distinctive article of property which may be sold separate from the tangible effects of the partnership, and in that sense it may be said to cease when the partnership is so wound up. That, in substance, is the scope and purport of the rule declared in cases cited in the brief of the defendant in error. In neither of the cases was the question here presented involved. But the doctrine maintained both in England and this country, where the copartnership is wound up in the manner indicated, is that the good will remains the undivided property of the members of the firm, either or any of whom may thereafter lawfully use the firm name if they desire to continue in business, although the name of the partner so using it does not appear in that of the firm. Banks v. Gibson, 34 Beav. 566; Bradbury v. Dickens, 27 Beav. 53; Casrell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 484; Dougherty v. Van Nostrand, Hoffm. Ch. 58.

The proposition contended for, if sustained, would practically destroy the value of the good will as an asset of the partnership, and entail upon its members, in many instances, serious loss. As partnerships rest upon the agreement of the parties, express or implied, a dissolution occurs and a new partnership is formed whenever a partner retires, or a new one is admitted, and if, when that occurs, the good will of the dissolved firm should cease, and could neither be acquired by the new firm, nor transferred by any sale made by the members of the old one though expressly included in the sale of its effects, its value as an asset of the firm would disappear; yet, it is commonly known that the good will constitutes an important, and sometimes a controlling part of the consideration for the purchase, and it has long been the settled law that, in cases of the kind mentioned the purchaser obtains the good will, including the right to the use of the firm name in the continued prosecution of the business. In so holding the courts give effect to the intention of the parties as disclosed by the transaction. Where the partners themselves make a sale of the firm effects, including the good will, the intention and understanding are manifest that the purchaser shall acquire and enjoy every advantage and benefit which the firm had, so far as the parties are capable of transferring the same; and when a sale is made under an order of court in a proceeding to which the partners are parties that intention is not less plainly inferable. The object to be accomplished in making the sale, in either mode, of the good will with the other partnership effects, is to enhance the value of the assets by inducing persons to bid more for them than they otherwise would, under the belief that the purchaser will obtain all the benefits of the good will; and when the sale is made and consummated on that basis, it would be neither just nor equitable to permit the vendors to deprive the purchaser of anything they undertook to sell, and for which they have been paid. The good will being thus sold as a thing of value, and paid for by the purchaser as such, to deny him the benefit of it would operate as a fraud which the law will not sanction.

31 L. R. A.

We are not reluctant, therefore, in holding that upon the dissolution of a trading copartnership its assets, including the good will of the business, may be sold as a whole, either by the partners directly, or through a receiver under an order made by a court in a case to which they are parties; and that a purchaser thereof under either method of sale is entitled to continue the business as the successor of the firm, and make use of the firm name for that purpose. And, further, that where the purchaser transfers the property so acquired by him to a corporation of which he is a member, organized to succeed to the business, it may carry on the business in the same manner under a corporate name including the name which had been used by the firm. Brass & I. Works Co. v. Payne, 50 Ohio St. 115, 19 L. R. A. 82.

If it is desired to limit the right of the purchaser or his vendee in the use of the firm name, or exclude such right altogether, it should be done by stipulation in the contract when the sale is made by the partners, or by a provision to that effect in the order, when the sale is made through the court.

In the case of Horton Mfg. Co. v. Horton Mfg. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 816, cited by counsel for the defendant in error, a copartnership without any consideration obtained the consent of a person not a member to use his name in and as part of the firm name. That consent, the court held, amounted to a mere license, revocable at pleasure, and the partnership so obtaining it could not, without consent of such person, transfer the right to another company or corporation to make a like use of the name. But that case cannot be regarded as an authority against the claim made by the plaintiff in error in this case; for, where the partners themselves make a sale of their firm's good will, which carries with it the right to use the firm name, or authorize such sale to be made, it cannot be said that the use of the name either by the purchaser, or those succeeding to the business, is without their consent. As said by the court in the case just cited, on page 819: "If one has made of his own name a trademark, and then transfers to another his business, in which his name has been so used, the right to continue such use of the name will doubtless follow the business as often as it may be transferred."

Upon the facts admitted by the pleadings the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff in error.

STATE of Ohio
v.
Omar N. GARDNER.

(53 Ohio St. 145.)

*The official acts of public officers, in an office created by an unconstitutional statute of this state, performed before the statute has been declared unconstitutional by an authoritative decision of the courts of the state, cannot be collaterally attacked.

(January 21, 1896.)

EXCEPTIONS by the State to rulings of the Court of Common Pleas for Summit County made during the trial of an indictment for offering a bribe which resulted in an acquittal. Exceptions sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel G. Rogers, Prosecuting Attorney, and Henry K. Sauder, for plaintiff in error:

The constitutionality of the act cannot be considered in this proceeding.

It is purely a collateral question, inasmuch as the officer bribed is not a party to the action, neither is any other officer in any city whose government is affected by the act of a party or in any manner connected with the cause, and they certainly have a right to be heard before they are declared by solemn judicial decision to be usurpers.

Molitor v. State, 6 Ohio C. C. 263; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 330; State v. Alling, 12 Ohio, 16; Ehrman v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 35 Ohio St. 324; Chamberlain v. Painsville & H. R. Co. 15 Ohio St. 225; Presbyterian Soc. v. Smithers, 12 Ohio St. 248; Sheehan's Case, 122 Mass. 445, 23 Am. Rep. 374.

It would be manifestly contrary to public policy to allow such an issue to be raised upon an indictment. It would put it in the power of every one charged with crime to question the judicial authority of the court trying him before any finding is made ousting the court from its jurisdiction.

Stuart v. School Dist. No. 1, 30 Mich. 69; People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 470; Fractional School Dist. No. 1 v. Joint Bd. of School Inspectors, 27 Mich. 3; Bird v. Perkins, 33 Mich. 28; Mendota v. Thompson, 20 Ill. 197; Kettering v. Jacksonville, 50 Ill. 39; People v. Weber, 86 Ill. 283.

The authority of officers claiming title under color of law can only be questioned by the state by proceedings in quo warranto.

Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117; Com. v. Burrell, 7 Pa. 34; Clark v. Com. 29 Pa. 129; Campbell v. Com. 96 Pa. 344; Fraser v. Freelon, 53 Cal. 644; Burt v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 472.

If Joseph Hugill had been indicted for accepting a bribe he would have been estopped, beyond question, from setting up the unconstitutionality of the act under which he claimed to be serving.

1 Bishop, New Crim. L. §§ 462-464; 2 Bishop, New Crim. L. §§ 892, 393.

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—For de facto officers under unconstitutional statute, see also note to King v. Philadelphia Co. (Pa.) 21 L. R. A. 141.

L. R. A.

In like manner a person offering a bribe, and thus recognizing him as an officer under the act, would be estopped from denying his official authority.

There was a de facto office and Joseph Hugill was a de facto officer.

Where an office is established by legislative act apparently valid, and the office is filled and exercised under the act, it is a de facto office.

Smith v. Lynch, 29 Ohio St. 261; Leach v. People, 122 Ill. 420; Burt v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. supra; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 318, 327; Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309; Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, § 21, p. 33.

Mr. Charles Baird, contra:

The demurrer to the indictment puts the legality of the whole proceedings in issue, and compels the court to examine the validity of the whole record, and although the demurrer admits the facts demurred to and refers to their legal sufficiency to the court, it does not admit allegations of the legal effect of the facts pleaded, nor does it admit any facts that are not well pleaded.

Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. §§ 402, 403; Com. v. Trimmer, 84 Pa. 65.

The question raised by the demurrer is whether under the law there is the office of city commissioner of the city of Akron, and whether under the law Joseph Hugill, the person named in the indictment, held or could hold the office of city commissioner.

The act in review confers corporate powers upon Akron and Youngstown (State v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 249), through the board of city commissioners, and organizes these two cities upon a basis of a special grade for purposes of municipal government; suspends the operation of general laws as to them, while these suspended statutes must remain in full force as to the other cities of the state of the same class and grade, or throw the laws regulating the organization of municipal corporations into inextricable confusion.

State v. Ellet, 47 Ohio St. 90, Costello v. Wyoming, 49 Ohio St. 202; State v. Schwab, Id. 229; Hamilton County Comrs. v. State, 50 Ohio St. 653; Curr v. West Carrollton, 8 Ohio C. C. 1; Kenton v. State, 32 Ohio L. J. 394; State v. Bargas, 34 Ohio L. J. 71; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Martin, Id. 232.

In order that there may be a de facto officer, there must be a de jure office; and the notion that there can be a de facto office has been characterized as a political solecism, without foundation in reason and without support in law; and therefore a person cannot claim to be a de facto officer of a municipal corporation when the corporation or people have in law no power, in any event, to elect or appoint such an officer.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 276; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178; Gorman v. People, 17 Colo. 597; Ex parte Roundtree, 51 Ala. 42; Hildredth v. McIntire, 1 J. J. Marsh. 206, 19 Am. Dec. 61; Decorah v. Bullis, 25 Iowa, 12.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the September term of the Court of Common Pleas of Summit county, Omar N. Gardner was indicted for offering a bribe to Joseph Hugill, a city commissioner of the city of Akron. The accused demurred to the indictment on the ground that the act of April 20, 1893, under which Hugill was performing the duties of his office, was unconstitutional and void. The demurrer was sustained and the defendant discharged. To this holding of the court the prosecuting attorney excepted, and, by virtue of the provisions of sections 7305-7308 of the Revised Statutes, has brought the question to this court for review. Two questions are presented by the record: First, whether the act of April 20, 1893, which provides a municipal government for the city of Akron, is unconstitutional or not; and, second, if unconstitutional whether its constitutionality may be assailed in the collateral way, undertaken by the accused. The first question which logically arises is the latter of the two; for if the accused should not be allowed to raise the question, in the way he attempted, it follows that the constitutionality of the act which created the office was not before the court. Whether an act of the general assembly creating an office and providing a method for filling it may be collaterally attacked, is a question of the utmost importance in the practical administration of governmental affairs. Different courts have decided the question differently. Leach v. People, 122 Ill. 420; Burt v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 81 Minn. 472; Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 318, 327; Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, § 21, p. 33; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178; Hildreth v. McIntire, 1 J. J. Marsh. 206, 19 Am. Dec. 61.

It is now before this court for the first time, and while we are not insensible to the consideration justly due to the high standing of those courts and authors we are bound to reach that conclusion which, in our judgment, is best sustained by sound reason; and that best comports with an enlightened public policy and the maintenance of public order.

If the official acts of officers acting in an office created by an unconstitutional statute should be regarded as falling within the principle that sustains the act of de facto officers until the statute has been held unconstitutional by competent judicial authority in a proceeding appropriate to that end, all difficulty vanishes. The opposite doctrine is based upon the assertion that there can be no de facto officer unless there is a de jure office. That is a simple and summary way to dispose of this grave question. That there can be no de jure officer without a de jure office is a proposition to which all minds will, of course, assent. But that there can be a de facto officer without a de jure office is disputable if the phrase "de facto officer" includes one who in fact discharges the duties of a public office, recognized by the great body of the people and by virtue of a statute solemnly passed by the general assembly of the state, which may be unconstitutional. That there have been many officers who occupied and discharged the duties of offices created by laws that were afterwards held unconstitutional is a fact well known to every one. While in such occupancy innumerable official acts affecting both public and private rights may have been actually performed by them, the duration of the office may, and often does, extend through a series of years. In the case before us the act in question is one creating a municipal government for the city of Akron, and has been in force since its enactment in April, 1893. It superseded an act passed in the year 1891 for the government of that city, which latter act was subject to the same assault that was attempted to be made on the one under consideration. The existing government of the populous and thriving city of Youngstown also rests upon the act now assailed; while that of the city of Springfield depends upon an act, at least as vulnerable to the same attack as the act under consideration. The constitutionality of the governments of the cities of Springfield and Youngstown has not been assailed, even collaterally, and may continue unchallenged for many years. The officers who in these cities occupy offices created by the acts upon which the city government rests are daily discharging duties affecting the rights of the city, and the private rights of individuals. These officers are either usurpers and trespassers, or de facto officers: if the latter, the rights of the public, or of individuals who have submitted to their authority, or acquiesced in its exercise, would be unaffected by a subsequent authoritative judicial declaration that the statute was unconstitutional; if they were usurpers merely every official act would be a nullity, and interminable confusion possibly follow such a decision. Were such results to follow, the courts might well pause, before declaring unconstitutional an act establishing a city government, unless its constitutionality was challenged upon the threshold of its existence.

The common law in relation to de facto officers had its origin in England. It was there laid upon a foundation as broad as their necessities required. Such a thing as a written constitution controlling legislative action was unknown to their jurisprudence; whatever office parliament chose to create was a de jure office. In the states of the American Union, however, we find written constitutions, limiting the otherwise absolute power of the people to act through the legislative branch of the government. As a consequence of this peculiar feature of our government, a statute, regularly enacted by the legislative branch thereof may, in express terms, create a public office, or it may authorize a municipal corporation to create one; an incumbent may be appointed in the mode prescribed by the statute. He may qualify, enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office, and continue to discharge those duties indefinitely, possibly for many years, during which he daily performs official acts affecting not only public rights, but private rights of the most sacred character. After all this has occurred, the constitutionality of the statute is successfully challenged, and the statute declared void, and for the first time in the history of the common law its principles must be invoked to ascertain the status of the rights of persons, and of the public, that accrued before the law was declared void.

We think that principle of public policy, declared by the English courts three centuries ago, which gave validity to the official acts of persons who intruded themselves into an office to which they had not been legally appointed, is as applicable to the conditions now presented as they were to the conditions that then confronted the English judiciary. We are not required to find a name by which officers are to be known, who have acted under a statute that has subsequently been declared unconstitutional, though we think such officers might aptly be called "de facto officers." They actually performed official acts authorized by a statute solemnly enacted by the law making department of the government. Such a statute is presumed to be constitutional. Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77. The unbroken current of authority supports this proposition.

Courts in the practical administration of justice should regard the substance of things and deal with conditions as they actually exist. Here are grave and important official acts actually performed by virtue of an office, created under the provisions of a statute regularly enacted by that branch of the government to which the power to make law has been delegated by the Constitution; there is a clearly established legal presumption of its validity. The public in its organized capacity, as well as private citizens, has acquiesced in and submitted to their authority. Such circumstances, the majority of the court are of opinion, are sufficient to give such color to their title as to make them de facto officers; but whether they fall within the previously existing definition of such officers or not, their official acts thus performed fall within the protection of that principle of public policy which defends them against collateral attack, and that therefore the question of the constitutionality of the statute in question was not before the court of common pleas.

Exceptions sustained.

Spear, J., concurring:

It is always well to start with a clear conception of the real question at issue. In his investigation of the case the judge of the common pleas reached the conclusion that the defendant was in a position to raise the question of the constitutionality of the statute establishing a government for the city of Akron, and then, being of opinion that the act is unconstitutional, he sustained the demurrer to the indictment. Courts uniformly decline to consider the alleged unconstitutionality of an act of the general assembly unless it becomes necessary to a disposition of the case before them. The first inquiry is, therefore, as to the right of the defendant to make the question of the constitutionality of the statute under review. If he cannot be heard to raise that question then the issue of constitutionality is not before us; meantime it is neither conceded to be unconstitutional, nor contended that it is not. Can he make the question? This inquiry will be answered when it has been determined whether or not the city commissioner of Akron is an officer. If he is, within the meaning of our law, an officer, the exact extent or character of his title will, it is believed, prove of but little consequence, for the charge is that of attempting to bribe an officer.

The high estimate I entertain of the learning and ability of the trial judge, as well as the importance of the principle involved, has caused me to hesitate long before assenting to a conclusion contrary to the holding below, and it is only after careful examination of many authorities, and much reflection, that I have been satisfied to rest upon the conclusions announced in the majority opinion; and for the above-mentioned reason I have preferred to express my own views on the subject. A reference to some of those authorities will prove instructive.

McKim v. Somers, 1 Penr. & W. 297, involved the admissibility of a deposition taken before a justice whom the objecting party alleged and sought to prove had, prior to the taking of the deposition, moved from the county and thereby vacated his office. The court held the evidence not competent on the ground that whenever a person has color of authority, and acts under a commission from the appointing power, but which it may be alleged has been forfeited, the validity of the commission cannot be examined in a suit in which he is not a party. "If a person," observed the court, "usurp an authority to which he has no title, or color of title, his acts would be simply void; but a colorable title to an office can be examined only in a mode in which the officer is a party and before the proper tribunal."

People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184, was a quo warranto to test the title of the defendant to the office of circuit judge. The Constitution gave authority to the general assembly to increase the number of circuits, and in such case the number of judges, but the assembly undertook to provide for an additional judge without creating an additional circuit, and Judge Bangs was elected, commissioned, and entered upon his duties as judge. Judgment of ouster was entered, the court holding that the portion of the law which provided for the election of a circuit judge was not authorized by the Constitution and the election itself was void, but it gave the judge color of office, and his acts were as valid as if the law had been constitutional. The syllabus reads: "Though a judge elected under a law not authorized by the Constitution shall be ousted because he is not an officer de jure, yet his acts colore officii will be valid."

People v. Weber, 86 Ill. 283, was a petition for a writ of mandamus by one Sullivan, claiming to be a city treasurer, to compel a collector of taxes to pay to him taxes collected belonging to the municipality. Sullivan's title rested upon an alleged appointment by the mayor. This the court held to be invalid, and the writ was refused. It is held in the syllabus: When one claims rights as an officer by virtue of his office he must show that he is legally entitled to act,—that he is an officer de jure as well as de facto. The acts of an officer de jure are valid and effectual everywhere when within the limits of his authority; but the acts of a de facto officer are valid only so far as the rights of the public, and of third persons having an interest in such acts, are involved. . . . The title of a de facto officer cannot be inquired into in a collateral way between third parties, but it may be inquired into where he is suing in his own right as an officer.

In Leach v. People, 123 Ill. 420, one paragraph of the syllabus is as follows: "The legislature passed an act which proved to be in violation of the Constitution, whereby the management of the affairs of a county acting under township organization was attempted to be taken from the supervisors of the several towns, and vested in a board of supervisors consisting of only five members, instead of fifteen, as before, to be elected in five districts, and hold their offices for four years. Supposing the act to be a valid enactment, such board of five were elected, and for a time acted without question, as the legally constituted tribunal having charge of the county affairs: Held, that their acts were valid and binding as those of de facto officers under color of office."

Brown v. O'Connell, 36 Conn. 432, 4 Am. Rep. 89, was an action of debt on a recognizance given in the police court of Hartford. The Constitution provided that all judicial officers should be appointed by the general assembly. That body, by a statute, undertook to authorize the appointment of a judge of the police court by the common council. The supreme court held the appointment void, but that the appointee "was a judge de facto, and that a recognizance entered into before him in the police court for the appearance of a prisoner was valid and binding."

Judge Van Fleet, in his work on Collateral Attack, p. 33, remarks: "If it is necessary, in order to guard the rights of the public, to hold the acts of an actual although unlawful incumbent of a judicial office valid, as being done by an officer de facto, then a fortiori it is necessary to hold an actual judicial tribunal, erected under the forms of law, sustained by the power of the state, and settling rights and titles, a tribunal de facto."

And, as conclusion from divers authorities cited, the same learned author observes on page 51: "The de facto character of the officer is not impaired because he was appointed by virtue of a void statute. Thus, a judge appointed by the governor, or a city council, or transferred to another district; or a probate clerk, or district attorney, appointed by authority of an unconstitutional statute; and county officers elected in a new county before the law organizing it could take effect, are all officers de facto." See also Burt v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 81 Minn. 472; Morris v. People, 3 Denio, 381; State v. Choate, 11 Ohio, 511; State v. Alling, 12 Ohio, 16; Taylor v. Skrine, 2 Treadway, Const. 696; Case v. State, 5 Ind. 1; Creighton v. Piper, 14 Ind. 182; Plymouth v. Painter, 17 Conn. 585, 44 Am. Dec. 574.

Smith v. Lynch, 29 Ohio St. 261, was an action to restrain the collection of a tax assessed by the board of health of the village of West Cleveland upon the land of plaintiff for the expense of removing a nuisance therefrom. The plaintiff claimed that the board was not a lawful board because the ordinance of council creating it was not read on three several days, nor were the yeas and nays, of those voting recorded, nor did a majority of members vote for suspension of rules as required by statute; that they acted without authority, and the tax was therefore illegal. The persons claiming to be such board were the only persons claiming to be acting as such, and they were generally and publicly known and acknowledged as such at the time of the transaction. The court held that the requirements of the statute as to the manner of passing the ordinance were mandatory. Nevertheless the board was a board de facto and whether it was a board de jure was immaterial. It was claimed in argument that the case was one where there was no office to be filled. But the court held that "the statute (66 Ohio Laws, 200) creates the office. It authorizes the council to establish the board, and to fill it by appointment. True, until the council act in the premises, it is a mere potentiality in their hands; yet it is none the less an office, known to the law, and provided for by law. . . . It is enough that the office is one provided for by law, and that the parties have the color of appointment, assume to be and act as such officers, and that they are accepted and acknowledged by the public as such to the exclusion of all others. Such was the case here. There were both the color and fact of office."

Turning to the statute referred to we find that it simply provides for the composition of a board of health, and defines its powers, duties, etc., "whenever the council of any city or incorporated village shall establish a board of health." No such board can exist until it is so established. Direct authority to establish such board is given by § 1622, Rev. Stat. ¶ 24. When, therefore, the court says that such board is "an office, known to the law, and provided for by law," no more is meant than that provision has been made by law for the establishment of such an office. No one would pretend that the statute created the particular board in question.

And, in the same sense, is not the office of city commissioner one which the law has provided may be established? Is the "potentiality" lodged in the general assembly by the Constitution by the general grant (art. 2, § 1), and by art. 13, § 6, in the words: "The general assembly shall provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages," etc., any less potent in the constituting of municipal offices generally than is the "potentiality" lodged in the council by act of the general assembly to create a particular office? And where the council, attempting to act under such authority, violates the fundamental law in such way as to fail to clothe its appointee with a good title to the office, and yet, because it possessed power to do the thing lawfully, and because its appointee has entered upon and is performing its duties to the exclusion of all others and to the acceptance of the public, this court says there being both color of office and fact of office, that the appointee is an officer de facto. Shall we now say in this case, where is the most abundant authority in the general assembly to create the office, and an attempt to do it, and the officer has entered upon and is performing the duties to the exclusion of all others and to the acceptance of the public, yet because of a failure to observe the fundamental law by the general assembly, if there be such failure, there is no color, and no fact, and hence no de facto officer, but he is simply an intruder and a usurper?

No question is made as to the regularity of the proceedings by which the board of city commissioners was appointed. Every legal formality was observed. The objection urged is that there was no power in the officers who appointed to make the appointment in any manner, however regular. This is sufficiently answered, we submit, if there was color of authority.

As before stated, the ground upon which acts of de facto officers are sustained is that of public policy. But it is insisted that this is a criminal case and hence a different public policy should prevail. Many courts have thought differently.

In State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 499, 9 Am. Rep. 409, the prisoner had been found guilty of libel and breach of the peace in the city court of New Haven. Carroll's complaint was that the person acting as judge was not such, having been called in to take the place of the judge by the clerk acting under an unconstitutional statute. The court, applying the general rules as to the effect of color and of fact, in an opinion of marked ability and learning, by Butler, Ch. J., held that "the acts of an officer appointed by and acting under and pursuant to an unconstitutional law, performed before the unconstitutionality of the law has been judicially determined, are valid as respects the public and third persons, as the acts of an officer de facto."

In Mapes v. People, 69 Ill. 523, in a liquor prosecution, objection was made by defendant that the jury was an illegal body because drawn by an unauthorized person, one Lee, who, although authorized to perform other duties as clerk was not empowered to draw juries. The court held that whether Lee was an officer de jure was not material. He was an officer de facto, in possession of the office, performing its duties, and until he was in some direct way adjudged to be without authority, his official acts must be regarded as valid.

In Clark v. Com. 29 Pa. 129, the prisoner had been convicted of murder in a court, the judge of which was exercising functions in a county attached to his district subsequent to his election, and the contention of the prisoner was that the act of the legislature by which such addition was attempted to be made was unconstitutional. But the court held that the question could not be raised collaterally; that the judge was a judge de facto and, as against all but the commonwealth, a judge de jure. The murderer was hanged.

In Campbell v. Com. 96 Pa. 344, the prisoners had been convicted in Fayette county of arson in burning a dwelling house and other buildings. Two associate judges, not learned in the law, but who had been elected the people of the county and commissioned, sat with the president judge and participated in the trial and sentence. The validity of their title to the office, and hence of the composition of the court, was questioned on the ground that, under the Constitution of 1874, and subsequent legislation, the people had no power to elect associate judges in Fayette county. It was held "that they were judges de facto, and as against all parties but the commonwealth they were judges de jure, and having at least a colorable title to these offices their title thereto could not be questioned in any other form than by quo warranto at the suit of the commonwealth." And the burners of dwelling houses went to the penitentiary for eight years. At a subsequent term, in an action in quo warranto, brought by the attorney general, the associate judges were ousted.

Of like import was the holding in Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117, and the murderer was executed.

In State v. Brooks, 39 La. Ann. 817, the defendant had been convicted of manslaughter. The person killed was one Allen, an acting constable, who, armed with a warrant was in the act of seizing Brooks' property at the time of the homicide. The defendant sought to prove that Allen had not been legally appointed and was not a legal constable. This proof was rejected. This ruling was affirmed. The court quotes with approval language of the court in an earlier case, that "we do not desire to be understood, however, as intimating that a party charged with crime can be heard to raise an issue that the ministerial and other officers of court, actually and de facto acting as such, have no right to such offices. We should never get a criminal tried at that rate. We would commence with a kind of collateral quo warranto as to the judge and then go on down through the official roster of the court." The manslaughter went to the penitentiary for fifteen years. See also, Sheehan's Case, 122 Mass. 445, 23 Am. Rep. 374, and cases there cited; State v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521; Re Ah Lee, 5 Fed. Rep. 899; Smurr v. State, 105 Ind. 125; Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. p. 53, note.

Regarding the respect which is to be paid to officers de facto, Mr Bishop, in his New Criminal Law, vol. 1, p. 284, observes: "The criminal law will not justify a person in resisting an arrest by an officer de facto on the ground that he is not such de jure. Other methods of testing the right are open. Indeed, it would be little less than a breach of the peace by the court itself to permit men to try, in pais, the titles of constables and sheriffs, by beating them over the head and raising a riot."

And by Prof. Wharton, in his work on Criminal Law, vol. 2, § 1572d, it is observed: "It has been already seen that on an indictment for resisting an officer his title is not at issue when it appears that, at the time in question, he was a de facto officer, i. e. the recognized official representative of the government actually in power. This is what is called color of title."

Ex parte Strang, 21 Ohio St. 610, was a proceeding in habeas corpus in the probate court reviewed in this court. Strang had been convicted in the police court of Cincinnati and was held by the chief of police under a mittimus requiring his conveyance to the workhouse. His ground of release was that he had been tried and convicted before one Carter, who was not the police judge, but an appointee of the mayor under an unconstitutional statute, the police judge being at the time ill and absent from his post. This court affirmed the judgment, holding: "That assuming (but without deciding the question) the power of appointment thus conferred on the mayor to be unauthorized by the Constitution, yet the person acting under such appointment, would be a judge de facto," and that "the acts of an officer de facto, when questioned collaterally, are as binding as those of an officer de jure. To constitute an officer de facto of a legally existing office it is not necessary that he should derive his appointment from one competent to invest him with a good title to the office. It is sufficient if he derives his appointment from one having colorable authority to appoint; and an act of the general assembly, though not warranted by the Constitution, will give such authority."

In the consideration of the case the police court is treated as one of the courts inferior to the supreme court, which, by the Constitution, the general assembly is authorized to establish, the judges of which are to be elected by the people, and the acting police judge was regarded as appointed to hold the police court, and to exercise all the jurisdiction pertaining thereto. So that the inquiry was not into the jurisdiction of the court, but an inquiry into the right of Carter to hold the office.

The case illustrates the proposition that color of authority to appoint is sufficient to clothe the appointee with color of title to office. And if this be so, will not an act of the general assembly which purports to authorize an inferior body to appoint to office give color of authority for such appointment where the power of the general assembly over the subject is unquestioned, and the only criticism is in the manner of its exercise? The Constitution recognizes municipal corporations, and authorizes the general assembly to organize them and adopt methods by which they may be provided with officers for their government. The office in question in the case at bar is one which may be so provided; in effect, therefore, the Constitution creates the office,—not this particular board, but boards generally, and such boards may become as essentially a part of the city government as is the police court, or any other instrumentality. It will be noted that the holding is in square contradiction of the maxim, often repeated in the text-books and by judges, that where there is an officer de jure in the office there is no room for an officer de facto; that both cannot exist at the same time. Judge Straub had not vacated the office; he was still in occupancy of it, drawing the salary, and armed with all the power; notwithstanding which the decision holds Carter to be a judge de facto. We emphasize this because it shows that maxims of text-books are not to be implicitly relied upon, and because it shows to what length the court was inclined to go in order to maintain the acts of one in the exercise of functions of an office authorized by statute.

It is not here assumed that there is not disagreement among the authorities. There is. Perhaps Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178, is most relied on as sustaining the contrary doctrine. In that case the legislature of Tennessee had undertaken, by statute, to constitute for the county of Shelby a board of commissioners to be appointed by the governor, and clothe it with all the powers and duties then possessed by the quarterly court of the county, composed of the justices of the peace who had been elected by the people. This county court was one of the institutions of the state, recognized in the Constitution. County commissions were wholly unknown to the Constitution, and theretofore to the laws. There was no acquiescence by the justices or the people; on the contrary, there was immediate and continued public opposition, by suit and otherwise, on the part of the justices and others until the final disposition of the case. Meantime, in the face of the opposition and the litigation, the board subscribed to stock and issued railroad bonds of the county to the amount of about $29,000, and the liability of the county on these bonds was the subject of the suit. It must be apparent at a glance that we have before us no such case. In that case there was, according to the holding of the supreme court of Tennessee, no power in the legislature to authorize the appointment of county commissioners with such powers, by any form of statute, while in our case the power to create a board of city commissioners for Akron is unquestioned, and, if the proper classification has been prescribed no one doubts that it is a board de jure. As against protest and objection from the start in the Tennessee case, we have, in our case, universal assent and acquiescence on the part of everybody for years. But it is insisted that the declarations of law given out by the court, irrespective of the judgment rendered, control this case. Do they? It is there said: "An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no rights; it imposes no duties; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed." It is not necessary to question the aptness of this language as applied to the Tennessee case, but when it is sought to apply it to the situation in this state, and to our case, we think it opposed by the better authorities and the better reason. All legislative authority is vested in our general assembly. That body enacts the laws. It is just as much its duty to observe the Constitution as it is the duty of any other branch of the government. The presumption is, as declared in Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77, and nowhere disputed, that in the enactment of laws they heed that duty. To say, then, that a statute which, by all presumptions, is valid and constitutional until set aside as invalid by judicial authority, cannot, in the meantime, confer any right, impose any duty, afford any protection, but is as inoperative as though it had never been passed, is at least startling. To say that a statute which purports to create a constitutional office, duly enacted by our general assembly, and duly promulgated, enjoins no duty of respect or obedience by the people, and affords no corresponding right or protection, and that all who undertake to enforce its demands do so at their peril, and at the risk of being deemed trespassers and usurpers, in case it shall be finally decided to be unconstitutional, by a bare majority, perhaps, of the court of last resort, no matter what public necessities existed for its enforcement, nor what public approval and acquiescence there may have been, nor for how long a term of years, and no matter how many holdings of intermediate courts there may have been sustaining its constitutionality, is to invite riot, turmoil, and chaos. It is not the law in Ohio.

If the people may reasonably be expected to have sufficient knowledge of the Constitution so that when called upon to deal with one exercising the functions of an office they may intelligently inquire far enough to ascertain whether the office be one which the Constitution creates, or gives authority to the general assembly to create, it certainly is not reasonable to expect the people to be wise enough to determine for themselves, and at their peril, whether the general assembly, in its effort to establish an office which it has the most unquestioned right to establish, has observed all the requirements of the Constitution.

It is sought to dispose of this case by use of the phrase that there can be no officer de facto unless there is an office to fill. The proposition begs the question. The obvious answer is that there is an office to fill whenever our law-making power, exercising its authority to create a constitutional office, by a duly enacted and promulgated statute, ordains there shall be such office, and it remains an office until the act is repealed or held unconstitutional by a court of competent authority, in a proceeding to which the one holding the office is a party, who, in the meantime, his election or appointment being regular, and the public acquiescing in his discharge of the duties, is an officer whose title can be questioned only by the state itself.

Staight v. State, 39 Ohio St. 496, has not been overlooked. The holding of the court, given in the syllabus, is in substance this: Perjury cannot be assigned of an oath taken before one acting as a deputy clerk of the probate court, holding, without new appointment, during the second term of the judge appointing him, for the reason that the oath is not administered by lawful authority.

The position of deputy clerk is not, in the constitutional sense, an office. At common law the officer and his deputy filled but a single office. By statute the probate judge is ex officio clerk of his own court; the deputy is appointed by him, and can be neither appointed nor removed by any one else, and the acts of the deputy are the acts of the principal. Warwick v. State, 25 Ohio St. 21. Petit, the one acting as deputy when the oath was administered to Staight, had received no appointment under the judge's second term, and had taken no oath. Even had there been an office to fill, he lacked color of office, and in no aspect could he be regarded an officer de facto. It would appear that the case has no important bearing upon the present contention.

But it is insisted that the title of the officer is an essential ingredient of the crime, and that an unconstitutional act cannot create a material element of a crime. This begs the question by assuming as though proved, first, that an act of our general assembly, duly enacted, purporting to establish an office which the assembly has power to establish, may be treated as a nullity before it has been declared invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction in a proper case; and, second, that the question of constitutionality can be raised in the manner attempted by this defendant.

We have already undertaken to give some reasons why these propositions are not tenable. It may be added that considerations of justice, the uniformity of administration of law, and public policy alike forbid assent to them. In the old days when persons accused of crime could have no compulsory process for witnesses, could have no counsel, could not testify in their own behalf, and were subject to other disabilities, it was usual for courts to resort to technicalities, and sometimes trivialities, to aid the prisoner. But that condition has passed away and courts are not now so willing to favor shifts invented to get guilty men off, and the substance of things is more regarded. By statute it is made the duty of our courts to disregard defects and imperfections in indictments which do not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits. How is the corruption, the guilt of one who attempts to pollute the fountains of justice by bribing its acting officers, and thus cheat his neighbors and the community, any the less substantial, or the state's case against him any the less meritorious, because it may turn out that the officer's title would not stand the test of a quo warranto? Such strictness is not observed in some other branches of criminal law. As against the thief or the burglar, a possessory title is good. The state isn't required to prove absolute ownership, or a fee simple. Would a manslayer be heard to defend that his victim had been born into the world lacking some quality of manhood, mental or physical? If the acting commissioner be good enough officer to be bribed ought he not to be held good enough officer to answer the designation of the statute in order to punish the briber? It is insisted that to convict the defendant in this case would override the maxim that an element of a crime cannot be supplied by estoppel. Let us see. Could the commissioner, had he accepted the bribe, be heard to say he was not an officer? Surely not. Wherein lies the difference? Why should there be a difference? Why should the venal scoundrel who, dealing with the other as an officer, invents the wickedness and tempts him, be let off by a mere technicality? The statute which prescribes punishment for accepting a bribe also prescribes punishment for giving it. What a travesty on justice would be presented by the judgment of a court, acting on the same facts, and applying the same criminal statute, which says to the tempted officer, you will go to the penitentiary, and to the wily Fowler who spread the net, and gathered in his grasp the ill-gotten gain, you may go free. Or, suppose a defendant convicted in the police court before a judge de facto, as in the Strang Case, is sentenced to a fine and a term in the work house. He cannot be heard to defend that the law providing for the appointment of the acting judge is unconstitutional. But, according to the theory of the defense in this case, if the prosecuting witness has sworn falsely in order to effect a conviction, and is prosecuted, he may raise the question, and perchance on that ground escape punishment for his perjury. If such failures of justice are a necessity under our jurisprudence is it any wonder that inconsiderate people sometimes show their contempt for its administration by trying to take the law into their own hands?

It is suggested that the general assembly might have provided that an attempt to bribe an acting officer should be a crime, but that it has failed to do so. But is not that exactly what has been done? The same authority which provides punishment for attempting to bribe an officer in one act has said in another act that a city commissioner is an officer. Treating the acts as in pari materia, and construing them together, what is lacking?

It seems to be conceded that, on grounds of public policy, one occupying an existing de jure office should be regarded an officer de facto, although his appointment thereto is pursuant to an unconstitutional statute. Does any reason exist why the same public policy will not require that one occupying, with general acceptance, an office which the general assembly has power to create, should likewise be adjudged an officer de facto, although in the exercise of the power by the assembly, constitutional requirements have not been observed? If any such reason does exist certain it is that none has been adduced; but instead the maxim that there can be no de facto officer unless there be a de jure office is invoked. Summed up in brief, the substantial ground of objection urged against the state's position is that it antagonizes well-known maxims of the law, and is illogical. Maxims, like definitions, have their uses; but it is not wise to rely absolutely on them, for they are often inexact. A discriminating writer has said: "Maxims are attractive because they seem to offer the conclusions of wisdom in a portable form, but legal principles are not capable of definition after the fashion of the exact sciences, because the law is not a science in the scientific sense, and the attempt to express its principles in rules of mathematical precision misleads oftener than it enlightens." It may be added that maxims and aphorisms are among the tritest, not to say cheapest, weapons of legal contests. If one may annihilate an opponent's position by attacking it with a maxim, or a phrase, the conquest is easy, for the legal quiver is full of them. It is equally easy to assume, as proved, contested propositions, and from them advance with confidence to desired conclusions. This is logic, perhaps, but there are times when logic fails. The law is intended for practical use. By the act in question local governments are erected in the cities coming within the description, and the necessary officers are provided to carry on the government in those localities. On certain officers named is imposed the duty to put the law in operation by appointing the commissioners. As before stated, the law is presumed to be constitutional. Should those officers be expected to go into an inquiry to demonstrate that they have no power to do what the statute directs them to do? At all events, they raise no question but proceed with the duty, and fully equipped city governments result, which the community recognizes, and the property rights of the people, and public order as well, depend upon the acts of such commissioners in the performance of duties imposed by statute. And yet we are told that these proceedings, whenever questioned collaterally, are to be adjudged void, because the statute "creates no office, imposes no duty, confers no right, affords no protection, and is as inoperative as though it had never been passed." The mischiefs and troubles which would follow such a result are against reason, and are so apparent that no enumeration of them is needed.

It would seem plain that the proceeding to challenge such a legislative act should be a direct one to which the officer is a party, so that the judgment of the court may have the direct effect of settling the question permanently, and for the whole world, in such manner as that it could not afterward be made the subject of judicial investigation.

Justice to the judge of the common pleas makes it proper to add that (as appears by his opinion reported in vol. 3, Ohio Legal News, p. 34), he was disposed to adopt, as matter of personal judgment, the view "that the office so created, as long as acquiesced in, could not be impeached by persons recognizing its existence for their benefit until the same had been declared invalid by competent authority," but, inasmuch as the matter would be brought to this court however decided in the common pleas, he thought it more expedient to sustain the demurrer, following the doctrine of Norton v. Shelby County, supra, as in that event, if concurred in by the reviewing court, that determination would end the case, while if held otherwise by this court the case would go back for correction of errors; which latter inference, it is here suggested, the learned judge would not have drawn had his attention been called to State v. Granville, 45 Ohio St. 264. Where it is held that the effect of sustaining exceptions is not to reverse the judgment below, but simply to determine the law to govern similar cases.

Shauck, J., dissenting:

The question considered assumes that the act of March 5, 1891 (88 Ohio Laws, 77), by which the legislature attempted to create the office of city commissioner of Akron, is unconstitutional.

The substance of the indictment is that Gardner "unlawfully, fraudulently, and corruptly did offer and promise to one Joseph Hugill, he, the said Joseph Hugill, being then and there an officer of the city of Akron . . . to wit, a city commissioner of said city duly appointed, qualified, and acting, . . . a large sum of money, etc."

The crime created by the statute under which the indictment was found is corruptly giving, promising, or offering to an officer anything of value, etc.

Since there are no common-law crimes in this state, we must look to the statutes for their exclusive definition. If it were not averred in this indictment that Hugill is an officer, no one would question the correctness of the ruling below. Notwithstanding that averment, the indictment is fatally defective if, in view of the provisions of the Constitution and the statutes, the averment is, as a matter of law, false. From the assumption that the statute in question is unconstitutional, it results that there is no such legal office as city commissioner of Akron. But the indictment avers that Hugill was acting as such commissioner; and the question presented is whether there can be a de facto incumbent of an office that has no legal existence. The decision of this question is required by the demurrer to the indictment, since, if it should be answered in the negative, there is wanting an essential element of the crime defined by the statute.

There are well-considered cases in which it is held that parties to civil actions have become so related to the subject of an unconstitutional enactment that, upon principles of equity, they are estopped to assert its invalidity. But an element of a crime cannot be introduced or established by estoppel.

There are also cases in which it is held that considerations of public policy will not permit one to question the legal existence or right composition of the court before which he is brought to trial. It is not of present importance that the authority of these cases is seriously impaired, for in this case the accused, admitting the existence, composition, and jurisdiction of the court, challenges only the existence of the office whose existence is indispensable to the crime defined by the statute and charged in the indictment.

In numerous cases for reasons entirely consistent with the general rule, it is held that, the office being legally created, its incumbent is an officer de facto, although the statute providing for his appointment is unconstitutional. Such a case is Ex parte Strang, 21 Ohio St. 610.

Recently by divided courts, and in some cases for reasons which obviously invited dissent, there have been holdings supposed to introduce exceptions to the established rule that there can be no de facto officer unless there is a legal office. They are cases of acts ineffectual to establish the office because of an insufficient legislative vote, the invalidity of the acts not appearing from the 31 L. R. A.

repugnancy of their provisions to those of the Constitution, but alone from the legislative journals, and unconstitutional acts to increase the numerical membership of official boards that had been legally constituted. All such holdings disappear from the present view when it is remembered that the Akron act attempted to create an office which did not previously exist, and that the act was ineffectual because it involved the exercise of power which was withheld from the general assembly by the express terms of the Constitution.

The case is therefore within the doctrine of Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178, where it is held that there can be no officer de facto unless there is a legal office. That case was decided in 1886. The report shows that it was decided after the most careful analysis of previous cases and full consideration of the legal reasons involved in its determination. An examination of the numerous cases cited by counsel in that case will vindicate the language of Mr. Justice Field in the opinion: "Numerous cases are cited in which expressions are used which, read apart from the facts of the cases, seemingly give support to the position of counsel. But, when read in connection with the facts, they will be seen to apply only to the invalidity, irregularity, or unconstitutionality of the mode by which the party was appointed or elected to a legally existing office. None of them sanctions the doctrine that there can be a de facto office under a constitutional government, and that the acts of the incumbent are entitled to consideration as valid acts of a de facto officer. When an office exists under the law, it matters not how the appointment of the incumbent is made, so far as the validity of his acts is concerned. It is enough that he is clothed with the insignia of the office, and exercises its powers and functions. As said by Mr. Justice Manning, of the supreme court of Michigan, in Carleton v. People, 10 Mich. 259, 'where there is no office there can be no officer de facto, for the reason that there can be none de jure.'"

In that case the nothingness of an act which the legislature is denied the power to pass is comprehensively and accurately described: "An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no rights; it imposes no duties; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed."

This case is referred to by considerate writers as determining the law. Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 324-327, and Dill, Mun. Corp. § 276. This question is not affected by any local consideration, and a refusal to follow Norton v. Shelby County must imply that it was wrongly decided. That conclusion should not be hastily adopted with reference to a unanimous decision of a court so distinguished for learning and ability, even if it did not seem to be supported by satisfactory reasons. But looking to the legal considerations involved, it is difficult to see how any other conclusion could have been reached.

Every view of the substance of things of this character goes beyond the mere form of an act and considers the constitutional provisions and the power of the general assembly with reference to the subject. The Constitution is not only a part, but the controlling part, of the law which all are presumed to know. It is implied, though not stated, in the view of the majority, that courts possess more than judicial power. For, until they have power not only to declare the law, but to make it, their judgments can neither add to nor detract from the virtue of a legislative act. If a judgment were rendered against Hugill in quo warranto, it would not be because of any defect in his appointment, but because there is no such office as that which he assumes to fill. The judgment would not create that condition. It would only declare a condition which previously existed because of the invalidity of the act. The characterization is admirable because of its accuracy: "The notion that there can be a de facto officer without a legally constituted office is a political solecism." This view is in accord with the doctrine of State v. O'Brien, 47 Ohio St. 464.

May be the general assembly has power to make it a felony to attempt to bribe one assuming to exercise the imaginary duties of an office that does not exist, but such case is not within the present statute. The right of an accused person to invoke the provisions of the Constitution to shield him from unlawful punishment cannot be less clear than that so frequently exercised by citizens to protect their property from unlawful taxation.

The misuse of words and phrases is effective to mislead. One who invokes the provisions of the fundamental law for his protection against acts in conflict with it is not subject to any of the doctrines of collateral attack. An unconstitutional act is not a statute. The law-making department authorizes no official acts which the Constitution forbids it to authorize. An act of the general assembly in excess of its power is invested with no solemnity. Law-making power that has been withheld has not been delegated. In a consideration which assumes that an act is unconstitutional, there is no place for the presumption that it is constitutional.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

CLARENDON LAND INVESTMENT, & AGENCY COMPANY, Limited, Plff. in Err.,

v.

McCLELLAND BROTHERS.

(.....Tex.....)

1. Failure of instruction to explain the meaning of a word which might mislead the jury is not ground for reversal if a proper charge upon the subject was not requested.
2. Knowledge of the owner of cattle that the fence of another person was insufficient cannot make the former liable for trespass by his cattle passing through such imperfect fence.
3. Knowledge that cattle are liable to break fences is necessary in order to make the owner liable in Texas for permitting them to run at large.
4. The liability of cattle to communicate a disease cannot be assumed as a matter of law on account of the fact that they came from a particular locality.
5. The burden of showing that plaintiff's fence was defective when entered by defendant's cattle cannot be cast upon the defendant in an action of trespass.
6. A land owner's failure to comply with his duty to enclose his lands with a fence sufficient to exclude cattle of all sizes and kinds of ordinary disposition as to breaking fences will prevent his recovering any damages resulting therefrom by trespassing cattle.
7. The owner of cattle is liable for their communicating a disease to others if he knew or had good reason to believe that they could communicate it and still let them run at large.

8. Knowledge of the owner that cattle were breachy, but without knowledge or good reason to believe that they were liable to communicate disease, will not make him responsible for the effect of such disease actually imparted to the cattle of another person in consequence of their breaking a fence.

9. Cattle known to be diseased may be placed by the owner in his own pasture without making him liable for communicating the disease unless he was negligent in the manner of keeping them.

(February 10, 1896.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Second Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Donley County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the value of certain cattle which were alleged to have been injured and killed by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. R. Butler and Matlock & Peacock, for plaintiff in error:

The keeping of cattle upon one's own premises that are liable to impart an infectious disease to the cattle of another upon an adjoining pasture is not unlawful, nor will it give the owner of such adjoining premises a cause of action for damages sustained in consequence of the disease being communicated to his cattle by the entry of such cattle upon his enclosure and mixing and mingling with his cattle, unless the party owning such cattle liable to com-

NOTE.—The liability of the owner of cattle for their trespassing is the subject of a note to Bulpitt v. Matthews (Ill.) 22 L. R. A. 55.

As to the sufficiency of fences to exclude or restrain cattle, see note in 22 L. R. A. 105, to the present 31 L. R. A.

ent case of Clarendon Land, I. & A. Co. v. McClelland Bros. as decided on a former appeal.

For statutory regulations as to infected animals, see note to Grimes v. Eddy (Mo.) 28 L. R. A. 638.

municate such disease knew the fact that they were liable to communicate such disease, and was guilty of negligence in the manner of handling them, and knew at the time that said cattle were so placed in his inclosure that they could pass through the adjoining inclosure and mix with the cattle therein.

Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. 329; Mills v. New York & H. R. Co. 2 Robt. 326, 41 N. Y. 619; Walker v. Herron, 22 Tex. 55; Gibbs v. Cockendall, 39 Hun, 141.

A person is not liable for turning ordinary cattle on the range or in his own enclosure, and a person desiring to protect his premises other than such as are protected by Tex. Rev. Stat. arts. 2481, 4609a, from trespass from such cattle must make a fence sufficient to exclude them.

Clarendon Land, I. & A. Co. v. McClelland Bros. 86 Tex. 179, 22 L. R. A. 105.

Messrs. Browning & Madden for defendants in error.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

McClelland Bros., the defendants in error, owned a pasture in Donley county, consisting of about 2,000 acres of land, which was inclosed by a wire fence on cedar posts. The fence, however, was not a lawful fence, under the law of this state as applicable to cultivated lands. In the pasture they had cattle of the Shorthorn, Jersey, and Holstein breeds, consisting of full bloods and grades of those breeds. The plaintiff in error, a corporation organized under the laws of Great Britain, owned lands in the same county, which entirely surrounded that of McClelland Bros., and which lands the plaintiff in error inclosed for the purpose of pasturing cattle thereon. In the year 1889 the corporation bought about 4,000 head of yearlings, called by the witnesses "dogies," in Tarrant and other counties east of that, which were placed in the pasture of the corporation. Some of the yearlings passed out of the pasture of the plaintiff in error into that of the defendants in error at different times during that year. After the yearlings were in the pasture of the defendants in error, a number of their fine cattle died from a disease called "Texas fever;" but it does not appear, from the evidence, that the yearlings had the disease at the time. McClelland Bros. sued the corporation for the value of the cattle that died, and for damages to others that had the fever, but did not die, charging that the yearlings of the plaintiff in error were of a breachy character, and that they were liable to communicate the Texas fever to the cattle of the plaintiffs, all of which was alleged to be known to the said corporation or its agents. The corporation answered by general denial, and by special plea to the effect that the plaintiffs' fence was insufficient to turn the cattle of the said corporation, and that the plaintiffs therein were guilty of negligence in not keeping their fence in proper repair. It also denied that the said cattle were breachy in character, or liable to communicate any disease to the plaintiffs' cattle; but, if such were the fact, then it alleged that it did not know of such fact. Trial was had before a jury, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs, McClelland Bros., for $1,748.36, which judgment was affirmed by the court of civil appeals. 31 S. W. 1088.

31 L. R. A.

This case was before this court on writ of error granted to a judgment rendered by the court of civil appeals (21 S. W. 170) affirming a judgment of the district court at a former trial. The report of the case, as decided in this court, will be found in 86 Tex., on page 179, 22 L. R. A. 105. By the opinion of the court, by Justice Gaines, these propositions of law are clearly announced: (1) That the common-law rule, which required every man to restrain his cattle either by tethering or by inclosure, is not in force in this state, and that every owner of land in this state, who desires to exclude therefrom cattle running at large, or in an adjoining pasture, situated as these pastures were, must throw around his own land an inclosure sufficient to exclude all animals, of the class intended to be excluded, of ordinary disposition as to breaking fences or inclosures. (2) It is the right of every owner of domestic animals, which are not known to him to be vicious, mischievous, or diseased, to allow them to run at large, or to occupy his own inclosed lands when adjoining those of another. (3) If the owners of land have around it a fence sufficient to turn cattle of all sizes and kinds, of ordinary disposition as to breaking fences, and the inclosure is entered by cattle which are known to the owners to be vicious, in the sense that they have the habit of breaking into inclosures when the same class of cattle would not ordinarily do so, the owner of such cattle would be liable for such damages, thereby occasioned, as would ordinarily result from such trespass; and if, in addition to the known habits of fence breaking, the owner knows, or has reason to believe, that such cattle would be liable to communicate an infectious disease to others upon coming in contact with them, the owner would be liable, in case of trespass by such cattle by breaking such fence, for the damage occasioned by the communication of such infectious or contagious disease to the cattle belonging to the owner of the inclosure so broken.

Upon the second trial of this case in the district court, the judge gave charges which are deemed to be in conflict with the rules of law announced in the former opinion, of which charges plaintiff in error complains, in its application for writ of error herein. We think the use of the word "ordinary," in its connection with other language in the third charge, as given by the court, was calculated to mislead the jury; yet, if the defendant desired it explained, it should have asked a proper charge upon the subject. The second special charge requested by the defendant, and refused by the court, was properly refused, because it assumed that the plaintiffs' fence was defective, and no other charge was asked which tended to explain the word "ordinary" as used in the third paragraph of the charge of the court. The second charge given by the trial court reads as follows: "You are instructed, under the law applicable to this case, that if the cattle of one person wander from the owner's range or pasture upon the uninclosed or imperfectly inclosed lands of another, they are not trespassers; and the owner is not liable for any damage they may inflict, unless such owner knew that the cattle could pass through such inclosure, and that they were likely to communicate disease to the cattle of the person whose inclosure they might enter." The same proposition is announced in the fifth and sixth charges of the court, which make an application of the principle announced in the second charge to the particular facts of the case. The effect of these charges was to instruct the jury that if the plaintiffs' lands were imperfectly inclosed,—that is, if the fence around them was not sufficient to keep out cattle of ordinary disposition as to fence breaking,—and if the owner of the cattle knew that the fence was imperfectly constructed, then the owner of such cattle would be liable for damages which might be occasioned to the plaintiffs' cattle by reason of their passing through the imperfect fence of the plaintiffs. In other words, a man who owns land, and has around it a fence which is insufficient to exclude from his premises the cattle of his neighbors, can by giving notice, to such neighbors of the imperfect condition of his own fence, cast upon them the burden of restraining their stock from running at large upon the range, or, as in this case, from permitting the cattle to occupy the pasture lands of the defendant, and to render the defendant in this case liable for damages which might have been committed upon the plaintiffs' land by reason of the defective condition of the plaintiffs' fence, because of the fact that the owner of the cattle had notice of the defects in the fence. If such a proposition were correct, as a matter of law, then it would change the rule as announced in the opinion of this court, which is well sustained by authorities in this state, to the effect that the owner of cattle may permit them to run at large without restraint, and that it devolved upon the owner of other land to exclude them by a sufficient fence thrown around such lands. Under this rule, thus announced by the court below, the plaintiffs might be permitted to avoid the consequences of their own negligence in failing to erect a proper fence, and visit the consequences of that negligence upon the defendant, simply because it had notice of the bad condition of their fence. The proposition does not admit of argument. It is too plainly contrary to the law to require argument to refute it.

The third charge, as given by the trial court, reads as follows: "The owner, however, of a pasture which has an inclosure sufficient to prevent the entry of all ordinary animals of the class intended to be excluded, is entitled to recover damages from the owner of stock running at large upon the adjacent range or pasture that forcibly break through such inclosure, if such stock are of the class intended to be excluded, and the entry would not have been made but for the vicious, breachy, or fence-breaking character of such animals, or when such stock, by their entry, communicated disease, or otherwise damaged stock of the owner of the inclosure; and in such case the owner of the inclosure would be entitled to recover the damages so sustained by him, notwithstanding the owner of the stock so trespassing may not have known of the breachy or fence-breaking character of the stock, and their liability to communicate disease." This charge is in substance repeated in the seventh charge given by the court, and is therein applied to the facts of this case. In effect, the court charges the jury that, if the plaintiffs had a fence around their pasture sufficient to turn or exclude therefrom cattle of the kind owned by the defendant, of ordinary disposition as to fence-breaking, and if the defendant's cattle were vicious and breachy, or fence-breaking in character, and by reason of such character entered the inclosure of the plaintiffs, and thereby communicated disease to the plaintiffs' cattle, the defendant would be liable for such damages, although it neither knew of the disposition of its cattle to break the fences, or their liability to communicate disease to the plaintiffs' cattle. This proposition is in direct conflict with the former opinion of this court, in which it was said: "It is the right of every owner of domestic animals in this state, not known to be diseased, vicious, or breachy, to allow them to run at large, and this without reference to the size or class of such animals kept by others in the same neighborhood. For these reasons, we think there was error in the charge complained of, for which the judgment must be reversed." We cannot conceive of language which would more definitely express a proposition of law at variance with the charge as given by the court than that quoted above. If the owner, of the stock in this case had permitted them to run at large upon his lands, and such lands had been uninclosed instead of being inclosed, as they were, then, under the proposition stated in the opinion as quoted above, in order to render it liable for damages on account of their breaking through the inclosure of the plaintiffs, it would be necessary for the plaintiffs to show that the defendant knew, or had reason to believe, that such cattle were vicious or breachy, and were liable to communicate the disease to plaintiffs' cattle. Under the charge given by the court, all that was necessary for the plaintiffs to prove, in order to establish their right, was that they had a fence sufficient to turn cattle of the kind owned by the defendant, if they were of ordinary disposition, and that defendant's cattle were breachy, which would cast upon the defendant liability for the result of such breaking, whether it knew of such habits or the existence of the disease communicated or not.

In the fifth charge, the court, in effect, instructed the jury that, if the defendant had reason to believe that its cattle were liable to communicate disease to the plaintiffs' cattle from the fact that they were driven from a certain locality, then the defendant would be liable for the result of their communicating such disease. At the time of this transaction there was no law which forbade persons to drive cattle from one portion of the state to another, and we do not believe that it can be assumed, as a matter of law, that the cattle driven from one section of the state to another are liable to communicate any disease to cattle in the section to which they are driven. This would be a matter of proof, and the question as to whether the locality from which they were driven would operate as notice to the persons buying and driving them of their liability to communicate such disease would depend upon the evidence as to whether or not the facts known to defendant were such as to have the effect of notice, or whether it was known, as a fact, by the persons so purchasing and driving them. This part of the charge, we think, was upon the weight of the evidence and should not have been given.

The eighth charge given by the court is not complained of in this court; but, in view of the fact that this case must be reversed, we deem it proper to call attention thereto, in order that it may not be again repeated, and furnish ground for complaint in the future. It is as follows: "If you find, from the evidence, that the cattle of the defendant company did enter the inclosure of the plaintiffs and did communicate the disease to plaintiffs' cattle, in order to excuse the defendant on account of the negligence or carelessness of the plaintiffs in permitting their inclosure to remain in a defective condition, or their gates to be left open, it is incumbent upon the defendant, upon this issue, to establish such negligence on the part of the plaintiffs by a preponderance of the testimony upon said issue, and show that said negligence on the part of the plaintiffs was the cause of the damage, if any, resulting to the plaintiffs." This cast upon the defendant the burden of showing that the fence of the plaintiffs was in a defective condition when entered by the defendant's cattle; whereas, the plaintiffs' right of action depends upon the fact that they had a fence sufficient to turn cattle of ordinary disposition, and that the defendant's cattle were of a vicious or breachy character, and so known to be by the defendant. The burden of proof was upon the plaintiffs to establish their case throughout, and did not shift to the defendant under any circumstances; and the above charge, which has the effect to cast the burden upon the defendant, was improperly given by the court.

It was the duty of the plaintiffs, under the facts of this case, to inclose their lands with a fence sufficient to exclude therefrom cattle of all sizes and kinds, of ordinary disposition as to breaking fences; and, if they did not have such a fence, they cannot recover for any damages occasioned by the entry of defendant's cattle upon their land, because the entry and the damages would be the result of their own negligence. Scott v. Grover, 56 Vt. 499, 48 Am. Rep. 814. If the plaintiffs' fence was sufficient to turn cattle of ordinary disposition, and defendant's cattle were, to an extent more than usual with such stock, disposed to break through fences, if this was known to the defendant or its servants, and by reason of that disposition the cattle broke into plaintiffs' inclosure, defendant would be liable for such damages as would usually arise from such trespass; and if the defendant's cattle, so entering, were liable to impart to others a disease, by contact and association with them, and defendant knew this, or had good reason to believe it to be true, then it would be liable for the effects of such disease, if communicated by its cattle entering the plaintiffs' pasture under the circumstances stated. If, however, the defendant did not know of the vicious or fence-breaking character of its cattle, and had no knowledge of circumstances sufficient to charge it with notice thereof, it would not be liable for damages occasioned by such an entry into the plaintiffs' land. Vrooman v. Lawyer, 13 Johns. 339; Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y. 515, 49 Am. Rep. 346. If the defendant knew that its cattle were unusually disposed to break fences, but did not know, and had no good reason to believe, that they were liable to communicate disease to others, it would not be responsible for the effect of such disease actually imparted to the plaintiffs' cattle by such a breaking of their fence. Cooley, Torts, p. 403; Coyle v. Conway, 35 Mo. App. 490; Patee v. Adams, 37 Kan. 133.

Mr. Cooley, in his work on Torts, in treating of this subject, says: "But there are other mischiefs which may be committed by domestic animals that one is under no obligation to anticipate and guard against, because they are not the result of a general propensity, but are committed, if at all, by exceptionally vicious individuals of the particular species of animals. Thus, though every horse will roam into neighboring fields if not restrained from doing so, it is only in rare and exceptional cases that a horse will attack and injure those who come near him. Therefore, while the owner should anticipate and protect against trespasses on lands by his horses, he is under no moral obligation to anticipate that a horse in which no such disposition has been discovered will suddenly make an assault upon and kick and bite some passer-by who chances to come within his reach. For this reason the keeper of a domestic animal is not in general responsible for any mischief that may be done by such animal which was of a kind not to be expected from him, and which it would not be negligence in the keeper to fail to guard against." We are aware that Mr. Thompson, in his work on Negligence (vol. 1, p. 206, § 21), and Shearman & Redfield in their work on the same subject (§ 639), assert the contrary doctrine as to diseased stock, and there are cases in the reports of some states to the same effect; but we believe that the doctrine announced by Mr. Cooley is supported by the better reason. The cases of Coyle v. Conway, and Patee v. Adams, cited above, bear more directly upon this question, involving the liability of the owner for the communication of the same character of disease as in this case.

It was lawful for defendant to place its cattle in its own pasture, even if known to be diseased, and it would not be liable unless negligent in the manner of keeping them. Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. 829; Walker v. Herron, 22 Tex. 55; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 585. We can see no reason why the owner of stock afflicted with an unknown latent disease should be liable for its communication to others, any more than if the same animal had an unknown vicious habit which caused an injury. The ground of liability is that the party to be charged has been guilty of negligence in permitting the animal diseased or of vicious habits to go upon the land of another party, and there to inflict an injury, because the care to be exercised must be commensurate with the danger. If there be no knowledge of the existence of a disease, how could there be negligence in reference thereto? If the negligence of permitting the horse to stray upon the land of another unlawfully will not render the owner liable for an injury inflicted by it while thus trespassing, because of the fact that the vicious habits from which the injury arose are unknown to the owner, then how can it be said that the owner of the diseased animal which commits a like trespass is to be held liable for the damages arising from its diseased condition, when he knew nothing of that condition, and was guilty of no negligence in reference thereto? We think the rule laid down by Mr. Cooley is applicable to both classes of cases, and should govern in this case. The district court erred in giving the charges as hereinbefore indicated, and the court of civil appeals erred in not sustaining the assignments of error thereto, and reversing the judgment; for which reason the judgments of both the said courts are hereby reversed, and this cause is remanded for further trial, in accordance with this and the former opinion of this court.

Rehearing denied.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

James L. EVANS, Guardian, etc., of Frederick L. Evans, Appt.

v.

CONSUMERS' GAS TRUST COMPANY.

(.....Ind.)

I. A provision in an oil and gas lease that it shall be null and void on failure of the lessee to perform his agreement is no defense to him for breach of his agreement, but merely gives the lessor an option to declare it void for that reason.

2. An agreement to furnish pipes, fixtures, and plumbing for supplying the lessor's house, included in a lease for oil and gas purposes, and to leave the pipes and fixtures if the well ceases to be a paying one, must be

NOTE.—Forfeiture of oil and gas lease.

Most of the leases for prospecting for oil and gas contain clauses for forfeiture in case work is not prosecuted with diligence.

In one case it was held that to enable a lessor to declare and enforce a forfeiture the right to do so must be distinctly reserved. Thompson v. Christie, 138 Pa. 230, 11 L. R. A. 236.

But in Ohio Oil Co. v. Harris, 1 Ohio Dec. 157, it is held that the lessee in an oil lease must fully and reasonably develop the territory leased and also protect the same from wells on adjoining lands, and in case the lessee fails to do so a court of equity will take jurisdiction and to the extent of the lands on which there are no wells will declare the lease forfeited and permit the lessor to enter and drill thereon. And it has also been held that although the lease does not provide for any forfeiture if the lessee neglects to proceed for an unreasonable time, it may amount to an abandonment of his rights. Barnhart v. Lockwood, 152 Pa. 82.

Manner of enforcing forfeiture clause.

The party entitled to enforce the forfeiture must exercise the right promptly and the result of enforcing the forfeiture must not be unconscionable. Thompson v. Christie, 138 Pa. 230, 11 L. R. A. 236.

If the lease contains a clause of forfeiture but no clause of re-entry for such forfeiture, demand and re-entry are not the only mode by which the landlord may enforce the forfeiture. Guffey v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 49, 8 L. R. A. 750.

In case the lease provides that if a well is not sunk within a specified time the lease will become void, if the lessor remains in possession for the purpose of cultivating the land, it is not necessary for him to enter in order to enforce the forfeiture, but he may do so by executing a lease to a third person. Alleghany Oil Co. v. Bradford Oil Co. 21 Hun. 26, Affirmed 86 N. Y. 638.

31 L. R. A.

A notice by a lessor in possession to the lessee, that the lease is forfeited, is substantially a declaration that he will refuse to give lessee possession of the land. Carnegie Nat. Gas Co. v. Philadelphia Co. 158 Pa. 317.

If, after the time has expired on the first lease and a second lease has been given to a third person and expired, the first lessee takes possession with the consent of the lessor, and at great expense produces oil in paying quantities, the holders of the second lease cannot maintain an action under their lease for possession of the premises. Thomas v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 385.

Waiver.

The right of a lessor in an oil lease to insist upon a forfeiture by reason of a failure to put down the first well within the stipulated time is waived by his acquiescence in the failure to put down two or three of the preceding wells within the times stipulated in the lease. Duffield v. Hue, 129 Pa. 94.

A waiver of the time within which operations shall commence is not necessarily a waiver of the time for completion. Cleminger v. Baden Gas Co. 150 Pa. 16.

So, in that case it was held that if the lessee covenants to commence operations or forfeit the lease within sixty days, and to complete a well in five months, the lessor may forfeit the lease after the expiration of five months if a well has not been completed within that time, although the commencement of the well within the sixty days was not insisted upon.

Estoppel.

If oil has been found in paying quantities and the lessee has expended large sums of money with the knowledge of the lessor, the latter will not be permitted to forfeit the lease for an inadvertent failure to pay the rent for six days after it becomes due. Lynch v. Versailles Fuel Gas Co. 165 Pa. 518.

construed to apply only if gas is obtained by the lessee.

(December 18, 1891.)*

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hamilton County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of the amount alleged to be due under certain oil and gas leases. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Shirts & Vestal for appellant.

Messrs. R. N. Lamb, Ralph Hill, and Robert Graham, with Messrs. W. P. Fishback and W. P. Kappes, for appellee:

If the court declines to hold the instruments to be of the nature of licenses or options it should undoubtedly hold that for the period of ninety days there was an estate for years—not from year to year.

Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. p. 465; Brown v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 884, note 2, p. 985; Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162.

Where one person holds lands or tenements under a demise from another, and no certain term has been mentioned, but an annual rent has been reserved, it constitutes a tenancy from year to year. It is a general letting without limitation as to time.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 675.

*A petition for rehearing was filed in this case but before final judgment upon it the case was settled and by stipulation of counsel was dismissed from the docket [Ed.]

How forfeiture clause regarded.

Forfeiture for nondevelopment is essential to private and public interests. Although equity abhors a forfeiture it does not do so where it works equity and protects a land owner from the laches of a lessee whose lease is of no value until developed. Munroe v. Armstrong, 96 Pa. 307.

Forfeitures are to be strictly construed. Where a lease provides that it shall be forfeited if any of the payments provided for are not made, a whole payment is meant and not a balance on a running account. Westmoreland & C. Nat. Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 180 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731.

If the lease provides for prosecution to success or abandonment with due diligence, and for a forfeiture in case oil is not excavated in paying quantities on or before a certain day, the mere striking of oil will not avoid the forfeiture in case it is not brought to the surface so as to be made available. Kennedy v. Crawford, 138 Pa. 561.

Inability to secure workmen because of the extreme cold weather, and consequent failure to complete the well within the time specified, are not sufficient to prevent a forfeiture. Cryan v. Riddelsperger, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 473.

If the lessee covenants to commence operations so as to complete the first well within six months or thereafter within sixty days remove all machinery and buildings from the premises, and that the lease shall be declared null and void unless further prosecuted after the first well is drilled, the lease will be void if after the first well is drilled no further operations for mining purposes are prosecuted on the land during several years. Heintz v. Shortt, 149 Pa. 286.

If the place of the location of the well is fixed, the timbers provided, the contract let, and the machinery ordered within the time, the mere fact that the impassable condition of the roads prevents the hauling of the machinery to the place where it is to be used until after the expiration of the time 31 L. R. A.

The statute providing for estates from year to year contemplates only cases where the premises are actually occupied by the tenant.

Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5208.

Where a demise is for a term of years at an annual rental, and the tenant holds over, paying the agreed rate, he is a tenant from year to year.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 676; Ross v. Schneider, 30 Ind. 423; Bright v. McQuat, 40 Ind. 521; Thiebaut v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ind. 212; Burbank v. Dyer, 54 Ind. 392; Tolle v. Orth, 75 Ind. 298, 39 Am. Rep. 147; Montgomery v. Hamilton County Comrs. 76 Ind. 362, 40 Am. Rep. 250; Coomler v. Hefner, 86 Ind. 103.

The provision for payment or obligation to pay was in effect a description as to how the lessee might procure a longer time. It was a privilege of which lessee might only avail itself by an affirmative act or by holding over.

The stipulation "first parties (the plaintiff) to locate all wells," is a condition precedent to be performed by the plaintiff before he has any right of action.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 527, 528; Shirley v. Shirley, 7 Blackf. 455; Stewart v. Ludwick, 29 Ind. 232; Huff v. Laylor, 45 Ind. 80; Summers v. Sleeth, Id. 598; Vankirk v. Talbot, 4 Blackf. 367; Wilson v. Dale, 16 Ind. 399; Benjamin, Sales, § 756.

McBride, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint in this case is in eight para-limited for the commencement of the operation will not justify a forfeiture. Fleming Oil & Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. 37 W. Va. 645.

In case the lease is forfeited for failure to procure oil the lessees are not entitled to be compensated for the cost of the well although gas is obtained in paying quantities. Palmer v. Truby, 138 Pa. 556.

Relief from the forfeiture will not be given in equity upon tender of the monthly rental which is not paid if the principal thing was the neglect to sink the well which cannot be compensated for in damages. Hukill v. Guffey, 37 W. Va. 425.

Absence of obligation clause.

If the lease contains no covenant on the part of the lessee to pay rent or develop the mines, but merely provides that the lease shall become null and void and all rights cease unless a well shall be completed on the premises within a specified time or unless the lessee shall pay rent at a certain rate a month in advance, the failure to explore for oil or gas will merely forfeit the lease and not impose any liability on the lessee. Glasgow v. Chartiers Oil Co. 152 Pa. 48, Affirming Glasgow v. Griffith, 22 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 181.

Effect of alternative provision for rent.

An alternative provision for payment of rent in case operations are not begun within the specified time does not abrogate the provision for forfeiture, but such provision may be enforced at the lessor's option in case the operations are not begun and the rent not paid. Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 142.

Who may set up forfeiture.

EVANS V. CONSUMERS' GAS TRUST CO. announces the general rule that the lessee cannot take advantage of his own default. This rule had been settled in cases of ordinary mining leases before it was applied to oil and gas leases.

graphs, each based on a separate written contract, which is made a part of the pleading. The several contracts, except the first, are alike, save as to the time within which they are to be performed. The circuit court sustained a separate demurrer to each paragraph, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and this ruling is assigned as error. Its correctness depends upon the construction to be placed upon the contracts which are the foundation of the action.

The contract counted upon in the second paragraph, and which, as above stated, is precisely like those set out in all but the first paragraph, except as to the time of performance, is as follows:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 1st day of December, A. D. 1887, by and between J. L. Evans, guardian of Frederick L. Evans, of the county of Hamilton and the state of Indiana, of the first part, and Consumers' Gas Trust Company, Indianapolis, Indiana, parties of the second part, witnesseth, that the said parties of the first part for the consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned have granted, demised, and let unto the parties of the second part, their heirs or assigns, for the purpose and with the exclusive right of drilling and operating for petroleum and gas, all that certain tract of land situate in Noblesville township, Hamilton county and state of Indiana, bounded and described as follows, to wit:

"Being the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 25, T. 19, R. 4 E. containing 20 acres, be the same more or less, together with the right of using sufficient water therefrom necessary to the operation thereof, the right of way over said premises, the right to lay pipes to convey oil and gas produced on this territory, and the right to remove any machinery or fixtures placed on said premises by the party of the second part.

"The parties of the first part are to fully use and enjoy the said premises for the purpose of tillage, except such part as shall be necessary for said mining purposes.

"The party of the second part, his heirs or assigns, are to have and to hold the said premises for and during the term of ninety days from the date hereof, and as much longer as oil or gas is produced or found in paying quantities thereon.

"In consideration of said grant and demise, the said parties of the second part agree to give or pay to the said parties of the first part the full equal one-eighth part of all the petroleum or rock oil produced or found on the said premises, and to deliver the same, free of expense, into tanks or pipe lines to the credit of the first parties. And should gas be found in sufficient quantities to justify marketing the same, the consideration in full to the parties of the first part shall be $250 per annum for the gas from each well so long as it shall be sold therefrom. It is further agreed that the parties of the second part shall complete a well on the above described premises within ninety days from the date hereof, and in case of failure to complete such well within such time, the parties of the second part agree to pay to the parties of the first part for such delay a yearly rental of $250 on the premises herein leased

A lease of a coal mine providing for a forfeiture in case the lessee ceased to work the mines for a certain length of time does not make such cesser work an absolute forfeiture but only at the option of the lessor, and he may recover the rent until he declares the forfeiture. Doe, Bryan, v. Bancks, 4 Barn. & Ald. 401.

If a mining lease provides that in case the mines should not be worked the lease will be void, the word "void" means voidable at the election of the lessor, and it will be necessary for him to do some act evincing an intention to avoid the lease in order to have it determined. Roberts v. Davey, 4 Barn. & Ad. 684, 1 Nev. & M. 443.

If the lease provides that the lessee shall begin work within a specified time or pay the lessor a certain sum per day "then all the provisions of this lease shall be accorded" to the lessee during the payment of such sum, the mere failure to pay the amount on the first day it becomes due does not forfeit the lease in favor of the lessee. Sbettler v. Hartman, 1 Pennyp. 279.

A clause providing for a forfeiture in the event of a default is not self-operating so as to make the forfeiture take place ipso facto upon the occurrence of the default. Westmoreland & C. Nat. Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 180 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731.

In case the lease provides for the development of a well within a certain time or in case of failure the payment of a certain amount within a designated time thereafter and in default of either the lease shall be void, the neglect of both will not absolve the lessee from his obligation, but merely gives the lessor power to nullify the lease and sue for the compensation provided for failure to develop the well. Galey Bros. v. Kellerman, 123 Pa. 491; Ray v. Western Pennsylvania Nat. Gas Co. 138 Pa. 576, 12 L. R. A. 290; Springer v. Citizens' Nat. 31 L. R. A.

Gas Co. 145 Pa. 430; Cochran v. Pew, 150 Pa. 184; Liggett v. Shira, Id. 350; Smiley v. Western Pennsylvania Nat. Gas Co. 27 W. N. C. 238.

And that result is not changed by the fact that after the words making the lease void for failure to carry out its provisions the lease continues, "and can only be renewed by mutual consent." Jones v. Western Pennsylvania Nat. Gas Co. 146 Pa. 204.

Nor by the addition of the clause "and no right of action shall after such failure accrue to either party on account of the breach of any promise or agreement herein contained." The court held that the words "after such failure" referred to the continued failure to make the payment after it became due, and that the right of action to recover it was therefore not affected. Leatherman v. Oliver, 151 Pa. 646; Conger v. National Transp. Co. 165 Pa. 561.

But in Van Voorhis v. Oliver, 22 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 114, a clause that "no right of action shall after such failure accrue to either party on account of the breach of any promise or agreement herein contained" was held to give the lessee the option to put down the well or not as he thought best without liability for failure to do so.

The lease gives the lessor the option either to declare the forfeiture or to affirm the continuance of the contract, and if he does not choose to avail himself of the forfeiture it cannot be set up by the lessee as a defense to the action on the lease by the lessor. Wills v. Manufacturers' Nat. Gas Co. 130 Pa. 222, 5 L. R. A. 603; Ogden v. Hatry, 145 Pa. 640; Phillips v. Vandergrif, 146 Pa. 357.

Following the forfeiture clause by the words the lessee "having the option to drill the well or not or pay said rental or not as he may elect" does not give him the option to refuse to do both. McMillan v. Philadelphia Co. 159 Pa. 142. H. P. F.

from the time for completing such well as above specified until such well shall be completed. The said yearly rental amounting to $250 shall be deposited to the credit of the parties of the first part in the Citizens' Bank of Noblesville, or paid direct to said first parties. And a failure to complete such well or to make such deposit or payment as above or hereinafter mentioned, shall render this lease null and void and to remain without effect between the parties hereto.

"It is also provided that no wells shall be drilled upon — acres surrounding the present buildings on said premises, and that the parties of the first part may have gas to heat and light said buildings when there is a surplus of gas on said premises after enough to run machinery of second party.

"It is further agreed that the second parties shall pay all damages done to growing crops, or otherwise, by reason of said operations; the well to be tested and accepted or rejected within ten days after the completion of the same, and if accepted to be paid for annually in advance as above provided; first parties to locate all wells. Should second party forfeit this lease the county recorder is authorized, upon demand of the first parties, to release the same from record. All pipes and pipe lines to be laid below plow depth, so as not to interfere with tiling.

"It is understood between the parties to this agreement that all the conditions between the parties hereunto shall extend to their heirs, executors, and assigns. In witness whereof," etc.

The construction given to the contract by the appellee, and which seems to have been adopted by the court below, is thus stated by counsel.

"Appellee contends that a proper construction of the leases gives it the option to avail itself of the benefits of the contract or not, as it pleases; if it fails to avail itself according to the terms of the contract and within the time limited, the right to do so expires and the contract becomes a nullity." Also, that the contracts are not properly leases, but "merely contracts between the parties for the doing of certain things and the payment of certain sums of money," with the remarkable and peculiar feature of a contract that the entire failure of one party to perform not only forfeits his rights under it, but relieves him of liability. This is the effect, the appellee insists, of the provisions of the contract that a failure to complete such well or to make the deposit or payment as stipulated, should render the lease null and void, and to remain without effect between the parties."

We cannot approve of this construction. In our opinion the instrument is a lease, and creates a tenancy from year to year. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. p. 33 (marg. note p. 382); Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5208.

It is, however, not material whether it be regarded as a lease or not. Whether it be regarded as a lease, a license, or a mere option, that construction is unsound. By its terms the absolute and exclusive right of entry and possession is given for the period of ninety days for the purpose of drilling and operating for 81 L. R. A.

petroleum and natural gas, with the power to continue the same indefinitely.

While the lessor is privileged to "use and enjoy" the premises for the purposes of tillage, such use and enjoyment are subordinated to the necessities of the "mining purposes" of drilling and operating for petroleum or natural gas and of the right of way over the premises. The consideration for the exclusive rights thus given is expressed in the clear and unequivocal agreement that the lessee shall drill and complete a well on the premises within ninety days, or in case of failure so to do shall pay a yearly rental of $250 from the expiration of the ninety days until such well shall be completed.

No time is fixed for the payment of the annual rent except when a well is completed and accepted. It would, therefore, not be due where the lessee failed to drill and complete a well until the end of the year. Watson v. Penn, 108 Ind. 21; Elmer v. Sand Creek Trp. 38 Ind. 56; Raymond v. Thomas, 24 Ind. 476.

It could not be known, until the expiration of that time, whether or not the lessee would make default. Therefore the failure to drill a well within the time limited would of itself operate to continue their rights a year longer. For a year and three months the lessee would possess the rights enumerated in the contract, and then by a mere failure or refusal to perform would not only deprive himself of the further enjoyment of these rights, but at the same time and in the same manner absolve himself from the alternative liability of paying the rental.

It is, of course, our duty to construe and give effect to the contract actually made by the parties, and not to make a contract for them. In construing it, however, it is also our duty to give effect to all of its provisions if possible, and to consider it as mutually binding upon the parties. Such construction as that contended for by the appellee destroys utterly its mutuality.

The supreme court of Pennsylvania has had occasion to construe leases or contracts of a similar character, and has reached a conclusion in which we fully concur, holding that the stipulation that the failure of the lessee to perform shall render the lease void is inserted wholly for the benefit and protection of the lessor, and that it is optional with him to avail himself of it. Wills v. Manufacturers' Nat. Gas Co. 190 Pa. 222, 5 L. R. A. 603; Galey Bros. v. Kellerman, 123 Pa. 491.

In Galey Bros. v. Kellerman, supra, it is said: "The lessees had the right to enter at any time during the eight months and either drill a well, or make the stipulated payment. If they did neither, within the time limited, their right of entry was extinguished and the contract itself was at an end. But the acts that forfeited their rights did not also forfeit those of the lessor. Their liabilities growing out of their nonperformance are to be distinguished from their rights under the contract. The latter they could forfeit, but the former belonged to the lessor, and could be lost only by his act. The lessees promised to complete one well within a given time. This was for the benefit of the lessor. If this was not done he was to be compensated in money. If the money was not paid he was at liberty to rid himself of his tenants and resume the possession of his land. But the construction contended for by the plaintiffs in error transfers the punishment for the breach of the contract from him on whose default "it arises to the innocent injured party."

The contract upon which the first paragraph counts is in many particulars substantially like the others, but in some material matters it differs from them. We quote those portions in which material differences exist.

"It is further agreed that the parties of the second part shall complete a well on the above-described premises within fifty days from the date thereof. And a failure to complete such well or to make such deposit or payment as above or hereinafter mentioned shall render this lease null and void, and to remain without effect between the parties hereto.

"It is also provided that no wells shall be drilled upon 5 acres surrounding the present buildings on said premises, and that the party of the first part may have gas to heat and light said buildings, and what is needed for farm purposes, including lawn burners. It is further agreed that second parties shall pay all damages done to growing crops or otherwise by reason of said operations, the well to be tested and accepted or rejected within ten days after the completion of the same, and if accepted to be paid for then and annually thereafter in advance, to be deposited to the credit of the first parties in the Citizens' Bank at Noblesville, or to be paid direct to said first parties. Second parties to furnish all pipes and fixtures to plumb first parties' house, first parties to locate all wells.

"It is understood between the parties to this agreement that all conditions between the parties hereunto shall extend to their heirs, executors, and assigns. Should this well cease to be a paying well, the parties of the second part agree to leave all pipes and fixtures free of cost for the use of first parties. Should second parties forfeit this lease the county recorder is authorized, upon demand of the first parties, to release the same from record. All pipes and pipe lines to be laid below plow depth so as not to interfere with tiling."

It will be observed that this contract contains no agreement for the payment of rent during the period of delay in drilling a well, while it contains substantially the same stipulation that a failure to complete the well or to make payment shall render the lease "null and void." Unlike the other contracts, also, the stipulation in this that the lessor shall have gas to heat and light the buildings is not qualified by the proviso that there is a surplus of gas on the premises after enough is used to run the machinery, but is apparently an absolute, unconditional agreement to furnish gas for such purposes as well as for farm purposes, including lawn burners. It also contains an agreement that the lessee shall furnish all pipes and fixtures to plumb the lessor's house, and that if the well ceases to be a paying well, the pipes and fixtures shall be left for the use of the lessor, without cost. The appellant construes this as an absolute agreement to furnish gas in any event whether gas is found on the premises or not, and also as an equally absolute promise to furnish pipes and fixtures and plumb the house. In this he is mistaken. A fair and just construction of the contract requires that all of its provisions be construed together and with reference to each other. Thus construed, we think the lessees only undertook to furnish gas and pipe and fixtures for plumbing in case they discovered and obtained gas from the well to be drilled.

This paragraph is not for the recovery of rent, but seeks to recover damages for failure of the appellee to drill a well.

The complaint alleges that the land leased "is situated in the midst of the paying gas field of said county, a number of the best producing wells in said county having been drilled in the vicinity thereof, and that, had the defendant drilled the well on said premises, as provided for in said lease, the same would have been a paying well, worth at said contract price $250 per annum. But the plaintiff alleges that although the defendant accepted said lease and retained said property until long after the expiration of said term, it has failed and refused to drill the well on said premises as required by said lease, has failed and refused to furnish gas for said premises, pipe and fixtures to plumb the residence thereon, which said pipe, fixtures and plumbing are of the value of $100, and the said gas privilege of the value of $50 per annum," etc.

What we have said of the provision in the other contract, that the failure of the lessee to perform should render it void, applies equally to this contract. It is averred as a fact that if the lessee had drilled a well gas would have been found, and it would have been a "paying well." The fact thus averred may not be susceptible of proof, but if so it is not within the scope of judicial knowledge to so declare. Even if it cannot be proved, we think the other facts averred are sufficient to entitle the appellant to nominal damages at least.

The court erred in sustaining each of the several demurrers.

Judgment reversed, at the costs of the appellee.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Ex parte KEELER.

(.....S. C.....)

1. Release from imprisonment for contempt of court cannot be obtained by habeas corpus unless the proceedings in which the person was adjudged guilty of contempt are null and void, in whole or in part.
2. A summary proceeding for a restraining order against carrying on a business declared by the legislature to be a common nuisance is not a case within the scope of the constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury.
3. A fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and imprisonment for not less than ninety days nor more than one year, for violation of a restraining order under the dispensary act of 1891, § 22, is not within the constitutional provision against excessive fines or cruel and unusual punishments.
4. Appearing and answering as to the merits on a charge of contempt will prevent any attack for lack of jurisdiction of the person on a decision that the party is in contempt.

(January 30, 1896.)

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain the release of petitioner from the South Carolina penitentiary to which he had been committed for violation of the liquor law. Dismissed.

The section of the law upon which the conviction depended is as follows:

"Sec. 22. All places where alcoholic liquors are sold, bartered, or given away in violation of this act, or where persons are permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking alcoholic liquors as a beverage, or where alcoholic liquors are kept for sale, barter, or delivery in violation of this act, are hereby declared to be common nuisances; and any person may go before any trial justice in the county and swear out an arrest warrant on personal knowledge or on information and belief, charging said nuisance, giving the names of witnesses against the keeper or manager of such place and his aids and assistants, if any; and such trial justice shall direct such arrest warrant either to the sheriff of the county or to any special constable commanding said defendant to be arrested and brought before him to be dealt with according to law, and at the same time shall issue a search warrant in which the premises in question shall be particularly described, commanding such sheriff or constable to thoroughly search the premises in question and to seize all alcoholic liquors found thereon, and dispose of them as provided in § 33, and to seize all vessels, bar fixtures, screens, bottles, glasses, and appurtenances apparently used or suitable for use in retailing liquors, to make a complete inventory thereof, and deposit the same with the sheriff.

NOTE.—For compulsory reference as a denial of the constitutional right to a jury, see note to Steck v. Colorado Fuel & I. Co. (N. Y.) 25 L. R. A. 67.

For right to jury in quo warranto, see note to Buckman v. State, Spencer (Fla.) 24 L. R. A. 806.

L. R. A.

That under the arrest warrant the defendant shall be arrested and brought before such trial justice, and the case shall be disposed of as in case of other crimes beyond his jurisdiction, except that when he commits or binds over the parties for trial to the next term of court of general sessions for the county, he shall make out every paper in the case in duplicate and file one with the clerk of the court for the county, and immediately transmit the other to the solicitor of the circuit, whereupon said solicitor shall at once apply to the circuit judge at chambers within that circuit for an order restraining the defendants, their servants or agents, from keeping, receiving, bartering, selling, or giving away any alcoholic liquors until the further order of the court. Such circuit judge is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to grant the said restraining order without requiring a bond or undertaking upon the hearing or receipt by him of said papers from the court of the said trial justice by the hands of the solicitor; and any violation of said restraining order before the trial of the case shall be deemed a contempt of court and punished as such by said judge or court, or any other circuit judge, as for the violation of an order of injunction. Upon conviction of said defendants of maintaining said nuisance at the trial, they or any of them shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of not less than three months, or a fine of not less than $200 or by both, in the discretion of the court, and the restraining order shall be made perpetual. The articles covered by the inventory, which were retained by the sheriff, shall be forfeited to the state and sold and the net proceeds sent to the state commissioner, and the sheriff shall forthwith proceed to dispose of the alcoholic liquors covered by said inventory as provided for in this act as when other liquors are seized. The finding of such alcoholic liquors on such premises, with satisfactory evidence that the same was being disposed of contrary to this act, shall be prima facie evidence of the nuisance complained of. Liquors seized as hereinbefore provided, and the vessels containing them, shall not be taken from the custody of the officers in possession of the same by any writ of replevin or other process while the proceedings herein provided are pending. No suit shall lie for damages alleged to arise by seizure and detention of liquors under this act. Any person violating the terms of any restraining order granted in such proceedings shall be punished for contempt by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 and by imprisonment in the state penitentiary not less than ninety days nor more than one year. In contempt proceedings arising out of the violation of any injunction granted under the provisions of this act, the court, or, in vacation, the judge thereof, shall have power to try summarily and punish the party or parties guilty, as required by law. The affidavits upon which the attachment for contempt issues shall make a prima facie case for the state. The accused may plead in the same manner as to an indictment in so far as the same is applicable. Evidence may be oral or in the form of affidavits, or both. The defendant shall not necessarily be discharged upon his denial of the facts stated in the moving papers. The clerk of the court shall, upon the application of either party, issue subpoenas for witnesses, and except as above set forth the practice in such contempt proceedings shall conform as nearly as may be to the practice in the court of common pleas,—that when any solicitor neglects or refuses to perform any duty or to take any steps required of him by any of the provisions of the preceding section or by any of the provisions of this act, the attorney general on his own motion, or by the request of the governor, shall in person or by his assistant proceed to the locality and perform such neglected duty and take such steps as are necessary in the place and stead of such solicitor, and at his discretion to cause a prosecution to be instituted, not only in the matter so neglected, but also a prosecution against the solicitor for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, or for official misconduct, or for other charges justified by facts, and to pursue the prosecution to the extent of a conviction and dismissal from office of any such solicitor. And in such event the attorney general shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint one or more additional assistants, who shall each have while actually employed the same compensation, to be paid from the litigation fund of the attorney general."

Mr. James E. Davis for petitioner.

Mr. Will A. Barber, Attorney General, for the State.

Gary, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding in habeas corpus, in which Martin Keeler petitions this court to be discharged from imprisonment in the state penitentiary. He was arrested under a warrant charging him with violation of what is called the "Dispensary Act." He waived preliminary examination, and gave bond for his appearance at court. A search warrant was issued against the said Martin Keeler, and certain intoxicating liquors were found, whereupon Mr. Solicitor Bellinger made application in writing for a restraining order against said Martin Keeler, which was granted by his honor, Judge Watts. Thereafter a rule was issued against said defendant, to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt of court in violating said restraining order, but this rule was discharged by this honor, Judge Watts. Subsequently, however, his honor Judge Buchanan, after hearing affidavits and argument of counsel for the state and the defendant, adjudged the said defendant guilty of contempt of court, in violating the restraining order aforesaid, and sentenced the defendant to pay a fine of $200 and to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for ninety days. The proceedings under which the defendant was fined and imprisoned arose under § 22 of the 31 L. R. A.

dispensary act, which section will be set out in the report of the case.

The defendant, in his petition, presents to this court several grounds for his discharge from imprisonment, some of which the court has not the power to consider in habeas corpus proceedings. The defendant has been adjudged guilty of contempt of court and imprisoned therefor. This court will, therefore, not release the defendant from imprisonment unless the proceedings in which he was adjudged guilty of contempt of court are null and void, in whole or in part. The proceeding by habeas corpus is not a substitute for the right of appeal, and there are questions which, although they could properly be reviewed on appeal, cannot be considered in habeas corpus proceedings. This limitation upon the power of the court in habeas corpus proceedings is clearly expressed by Mr. Justice Harlan in Andrews v. Swartz, 156 U. S. 272, 39 L. ed. 422, where he speaks of the well-established rule that a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court will not be discharged on habeas corpus, unless the court that passed the sentence was so far without jurisdiction that its proceedings must be regarded as void,—citing Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717; Wood v. Brush, 140 U. S. 287, 35 L. ed. 509; Jugiro v. Brush, 140 U. S. 297, 35 L. ed. 513; Pepke v. Cronan, 155 U. S. 100, 39 L. ed. 84. We will now consider the question whether the proceedings under which the petitioner was imprisoned are null and void, either in whole or in part. The authorities sustain the following propositions of law: First. That the legislature has the power to declare places where liquor is sold contrary to law to be common nuisances, and to provide for their abatement. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385. Second. That the legislature has the right to provide remedies, summary in their nature, to prevent and abate such nuisances. Third. That these summary remedies are not rendered unconstitutional by reason of the fact that they deprive the defendant of these rights, under the Constitution, to which, ordinarily, he is entitled. Fourth. That, to justify such summary proceedings, it must appear, (1) that the interests of the public generally require these stringent remedies; and (2) that they are reasonably necessary to accomplish the purposes for which they were enacted. Fifth. That, in determining that such remedies are reasonable, the court will consider the value and nature of the property involved in the nuisance, and the difficulty of its suppression.

The granting of a restraining order to prevent the defendant from carrying on a business which the legislature has declared to be a common nuisance is a part of the summary proceeding provided by the legislature against such nuisances. The defendant is, therefore, not entitled to invoke the provisions of the Constitution as to the right of trial by jury in a case of this nature. In the case of Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist., Ct. 134 U. S. 31, 33 L. ed. 801, Mr. Justice

Miles, for the court, says: "If the objection to the statute is that it authorizes a proceeding in the nature of a suit in equity to suppress the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors which are by law prohibited, and to abate the nuisance which the statute declares such acts to be, wherever carried on, we respond that, so far as at present advised, it appears to us that all the powers of a court, whether at common law or in chancery, may be called into operation by a legislative body, for the purpose of suppressing this objectionable traffic; and we know of no hindrance in the Constitution of the United States to the form of proceedings, or to the court in which this remedy shall be had. Certainly, it seems to us to be quite as wise to use the processes of the law and the powers of the court to prevent the evil, as to punish the offense as a crime, after it has been committed. We think it was within the power of the court of Plymouth county to issue the writs of injunction in these cases, and that the disobedience to them by the plaintiffs in error subjected them to the proceedings for contempt which were had before that court." Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for the court in Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, says: "It [the police power] is universally conceded to include everything essential to the public safety, health, and morals, and to justify the destruction or abatement, by summary proceedings, of whatever may be regarded as a public nuisance. Under this power it has been held that the state may order . . . the prohibition of gambling houses and places where intoxicating liquors are sold. Beyond this, however, the state may interfere wherever the public interests demand it, and in this particular a large discretion is necessarily vested in the legislature to determine, not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346. To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear: First, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals." Again: "While the legislature has no right arbitrarily to declare that to be a nuisance which is clearly not so, a good deal must be left to its discretion in that regard, and if the object to be accomplished is conducive to the public interests, it may exercise a large liberty of choice in the means employed,"—citing numerous authorities. Again: "The object of the law is undoubtedly a beneficent one, and the state ought not to be hampered in its enforcement by the application of constitutional provisions which are intended for the protection of substantial rights of property. It is evident that the efficacy of this statute would be very seriously impaired by requiring every net illegally used to be carefully taken from the water, carried before a court or magistrate, notice of the seizure to be given by publication, and regular judicial proceedings to be instituted for its condemnation. There is not a state in the Union which has not a constitutional provision entitling persons charged with crime to a trial by jury, and yet, from time immemorial, the practice has been to try persons charged with petty offenses before a police magistrate, who not only passes upon the question of guilt, but metes out the proper punishment. This has never been treated as an infraction of the Constitution, though technically a person may, in this way, be deprived of his liberty without the intervention of a jury. Calian v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. ed. 223, and cases cited. So the summary abatement of nuisances, without judicial process or proceeding, was well known to the common law, long prior to the adoption of the Constitution, and it has never been supposed that the constitutional provision in question in this case was intended to interfere with the established principles in that regard. Nor is a person whose property is seized under the act in question without his legal remedy. If in fact his property has been used in violation of the act, he has no just reason to complain; if not, he may replevy his nets from the officer seizing them, or, if they have been destroyed, may have his action for their value. In such cases the burden would be upon the defendant to prove a justification under the statute. As was said by the supreme court in New Jersey in a similar case (American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248-259): "The party is not, in point of fact, deprived of a trial by jury. The evidence necessary to sustain the defense is changed. Even if the party were deprived of a trial by jury, the statute is not therefore necessarily unconstitutional." The dispensary act is not violative of any of the requirements herebefore mentioned.

31 L. R. A.

It is also contended that the sentence is obnoxious to § 88, article 1, of the Constitution of 1868. The punishment provided in § 22 of the dispensary act for violation of the restraining order therein mentioned is a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and by imprisonment in the state penitentiary not less than ninety days nor more than one year. Section 38, art. 1, of the Constitution of 1868 provides that "excessive fines shall not be imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted," etc. In our opinion, the fine imposed on the defendant was not excessive, nor the punishment inflicted cruel and unusual.

It is the judgment of this court that the petition be dismissed.

Pope, J., concurring:

The facts underlying the application of the petitioner to this court for release from his confinement in the state penitentiary are so clearly and abundantly set forth in the opinion of Mr. Justice Gary and the dissenting opinion of Mr. Chief Justice McIVER that they need not be repeated here. I have thought the gravity of the questions here presented, together with the fact that the two justices already named have pursued divergent lines of thought in reaching a conclusion, demanded an expression of my own views. Mr. Justice Gary in the main treats of the constitutional questions raised by the petitioner, while the Chief Justice devotes his attention wholly to the preliminary questions of jurisdiction, having reached a conclusion, satisfactory to himself, that the judges below were without jurisdiction to pass the orders made by them, respectively. If the judges below were without jurisdiction to pass the order now in review, of course, no constitutional questions are of any practical effect in determining whether the petitioner is illegally restrained of his liberty. It is thus manifest that the question of jurisdiction must first be determined. Jurisdiction involves power of these circuit judges over the person and the subject-matter. As to the latter, I do not understand that any difficulty exists. If the question of the constitutional power in the general assembly of this state to pass, as law, the different provisions in § 22 of the dispensary act is for the time admitted, it is very certain that the jurisdiction of the subject-matter is given these circuit judges to pass, not only the order of jurisdiction, but also to punish any disobedience thereof by the petitioner, as a wilful contempt of court, by an imprisonment in the state penitentiary. The theory of the government in this matter is simply this: The sale of intoxicants by individuals without a license therefor is not only illegal, but the continuous sale of such intoxicants by an individual without a license therefor is a nuisance; that, upon certain steps being taken, a circuit judge may grant an order of injunction, whereby such individual, who is continuously selling intoxicants contrary to law, is forbidden so to break the law. Therefore, if such individual wilfully disobeys the order of injunction against him, he is punished for a contempt of court. In all these matters, as I before remarked, there is no contest here. Therefore the two questions are left: First. Did the circuit judge who passed the order in November last have jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner when he passed his order directing his imprisonment for contempt of court? Second. Are the provisions of the 22d section of the dispensary act obnoxious to the provisions of the state Constitution, as complained of by the petitioner?

First. It is admitted that every order passed by a judge who has no jurisdiction of the person, so far as such individual is concerned, is void. Power or jurisdiction of the person, so far as courts are concerned, is secured by the service of some process, and is regulated by law. Thus, if a judgment on the civil side of the court is desired against an individual, a summons is issued and served upon him; and, if a judgment on the criminal side of the court is desired against an individual, a warrant for his arrest is issued, and he is taken in custody thereunder. But it sometimes happens that an individual against whom a judgment on the civil side of the court is desired, although service of the summons has not been made upon him, appears voluntarily in court, and contests the right of a judgment against him on the merits.

In such an event the court is said to have acquired jurisdiction of his person, although no summons was served upon him, or, it may be, could not have been served upon him.

This is not a new doctrine, but has been upheld by repeated adjudications of this and other courts. In Graveley v. Graveley, 20 S. C. 104, it was said: "For it seems to us that, by answering to the merits, she [the defendant] properly submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court, and the matter stands as if she accepted service or authorized her attorney to do so for her." To the same effect are the decisions of Oliver v. Fowler, 22 S. C. 540; Chafee v. Postal Teleg. Co. 35 S. C. 378; Meinhard v. Youngblood, 37 S. C. 231, and 239. A like doctrine is maintained by the Supreme Court of the United States in Toland v. Sprague, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 330, 9 L. ed. 1093.

Not only is this doctrine persistently and continuously held in actions in the court of common pleas, but also in the court of general sessions. Two cases are cited: State v. Hatcher, 11 Rich. L. 525: At the fall term, 1835, of the court of general sessions for Edgefield district one Hatcher had been indicted for keeping a riotous and disorderly house, and a true bill was found. At the spring term, 1837, a verdict of guilty was rendered, and a sentence indorsed on the indictment by his honor, Judge O'Neill. There was an affidavit, and also a warrant to arrest, but no entry or indorsement which showed that the defendant had been arrested, or that he had entered into recognizance to appear. In 1844 a scire facias quare executio non was served on the defendant, to which he made default, and an order for execution to issue was passed. In 1857 the defendant moved, before his honor, Judge Wardlaw, at Edgefield, that all the proceedings subsequent to the finding of the grand jury be set aside, and as the basis of his motion presented his own affidavit, which recited that he had never been arrested under the warrant; that he had never entered into recognizance to appear; that he was absent from the state from the fall of 1836 until December, 1838; and that he had no knowledge that the proceedings were pending against him until long after the trial and conviction. On appeal, before a full court, the defendant's motion was denied. In the opinion of the court it is said: "The sentence in this case appears to have been pronounced more than twenty years ago. . . . After such a lapse of time, it is in vain to say that neither the warrant, etc., can be found. The law presumes 'omnia esse rite acta.' But, in addition to this, the defendant has been served with a scire facias quare executio non, made default, and thereupon execution issued for the collection of the fine. This would be enough to prevent his present motion from receiving any favor from the court." State v. Sarratt, 14 Rich. L. 29: The defendant was charged with bastardy. A warrant of arrest had been issued, and the officer made a return of non est inventus. Thereafter, May 12, 1859, a bench warrant was issued from the court of sessions for Union district, not under the provisions of the bastardy act, but requiring the defendant to enter into recognizance to appear and answer to a bill of indictment. A true bill was found at fall term, 1859, to which he appeared, pleaded not guilty, and traversed the case. At his trial at the fall term in 1860, defendant insisted that all these proceedings to make him a party in court were wholly irregular and void for want of conformity to the provisions of the bastardy act of 1839. After conviction he appealed to this court on these questions. This court (dismissed) the appeal, and affirmed the judgment, holding, in the opinion of the court, as announced by Wardlaw, J.: "The defendant, it is said, was never arrested, and it vehemently urged that injustice was done to him by the holding that his appearance and pleading effected a waiver of objection to the irregularity of proceedings by which he was brought in. He appeared, he made his defense, he recognized the advocacy of his counsel on the circuit, and through them he has been heard here. . . . But by voluntary appearance, no more than by compulsory attendance, was the defendant deprived of any ground of defense; and to any departure from a course prescribed by law he was at liberty to object under the general issue. His objection is that the bill of indictment against him was not found before a bench warrant was issued. Suppose this to be so; and, further, suppose that, for this and other reasons, the bench was irregular and void; it would follow that his arrest under that warrant was unlawful, that his recognizance, if he gave one, might be impeached for duress, and that his counsel might have moved for his discharge from arrest and recognizance. But his counsel appeared and pleaded, and he was present and made defense. Nothing which preceded could destroy the effect of this acknowledgment of the jurisdiction of the court over his person and his case; and, when urged as matters of technical objection on the trial, the supposed irregularities must have been wholly unavailing" (italics ours).

Applying these principles to the facts as developed in the case at bar, it will be readily seen that the petitioner here cannot successfully contend there was no jurisdiction of the person acquired by the court below. He distinctly and deliberately appeared before Judge Watts in August last, and contested on the merits his violation of the order of injunction. In the hearing before us he relies upon, as a part of his case, the decision of Judge Watts that the evidence heard by him did not establish a wilful disregard of the order of injunction. When he was brought before Judge Buchanan to answer a second charge of disobedience of the order of injunction, he answered fully as to the merits, and it was as to the proofs of such charge, on both sides of the controversy, that Judge Buchanan decided that he was in contempt. No appeal was taken from this order of Judge Buchanan. I am compelled to differ from the chief justice in his conclusions on this branch of the case.

It now remains for me to consider the second branch of the case, to wit, the constitutional questions presented. But, before entering upon the consideration of the second question, I have thought that a few words may be addressed to the question involved in so much of the appeal as relates to the distinction between "action" and "application." The general assembly has used the latter in the section under consideration. It was in the power of the general assembly to direct and prescribe the form of pleading. This it has done. When we remember that the object of the act is to suppress a nuisance, it is easily seen that the very design of the law might be defeated if delay was allowed. In the cases cited in the opinion of Mr. Justice Gary it will be noticed that the adoption by the legislature of summary proceedings is allowed in suppressing nuisances. I content myself with such citations of authorities. I therefore see no difficulty in such suggestion. But, be that as it may, the petitioner, by answering the merits, waived any such objection even if it was sound. I am entirely satisfied with reasoning and citations employed by Mr. Justice Gary, in his opinion in this case, in disposing of all the questions suggested by the petitioner as to the constitutionality of § 22 of the dispensary act. I shall content myself, therefore, with a concurrence therein. It follows that the petitioner must be denied the relief prayed for.

McIver, Ch. J., dissenting:

This was an application, originally addressed to the chief justice of this court, for the purpose of obtaining a discharge of the petition from what he claimed to be an illegal confinement of his person in the state penitentiary. In the notice of the motion, which was duly served upon the solicitor of the second circuit, in which the case originated, it is stated that the motion would "be made upon the injunction papers issued by his honor, Judge R. C. Watts, of date June 20, 1895, and the rule and affidavit issued and made therein, together with the order discharging said rule; also, the subsequent rule issued by his honor, Judge O. W. Buchanan, and the affidavits made therein, the return thereof [thereto], and the affidavits submitted by defendant, and the order adjudging him in contempt,—all of which are on file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court for the aforesaid county." Accordingly, when the writ of habeas corpus was granted, an order was passed requiring the clerk of the circuit court for the said county (Barnwell) to send up a certified copy of all the proceedings below which finally culminated in the order of Judge Buchanan committing the prisoner to the custody of the superintendent of the state penitentiary for a contempt in disobeying the restraining order of Judge Watts above referred to. The superintendent of the state penitentiary having made his return to the writ of habeas corpus, which need not be set out or further referred to here, as it contains nothing which throws any light upon the question to be considered, and the clerk of the circuit court for Barnwell county having sent up a certified copy of the proceedings below, as required by the order above referred to, an order was passed transferring the case to a hearing before the full court, as the questions involved were of a very grave and important character. It is conceded that these proceedings were taken under the provisions of the 22d section of an act entitled "An Act to further Declare the Law in Reference to, and further Regulate the Use, Sale, Consumption, Transportation, and Disposition of Alcoholic Liquids or Liquors within the State of South Carolina, and to Police the Same," approved January 2, 1895. As this section is very long, it will not be inserted here, especially as Mr. Justice Gary, in his opinion, has very properly directed that the section shall be set out in full in the report of this case. Inasmuch as it is too well settled to require the citation of any authority that a writ of habeas corpus cannot be used as a substitute for a writ of error or for an appeal, the only inquiry is whether the court or judge below had any jurisdiction to grant the order committing the prisoner to the custody of the superintendent of the state penitentiary, for a contempt in disobeying the restraining order of Judge Watts above referred to. This inquiry involves two general questions: (1) Whether the proper steps were taken by which his honor, Judge Watts, could acquire jurisdiction to grant the restraining order, under the provisions of the 22d section of the act above referred to, which, for convenience, may be designated as the "Dispensary Act." (2) Whether said section is unconstitutional. For, in this case, no question was raised (if indeed, it could be successfully raised) as to the power of Judge Watts, who is the judge of the fourth, and not of the second, judicial circuit, to grant such restraining order, inasmuch as it is conceded that Judge Watts, by lawful authority, was at the time holding a court within the second circuit.

The first question above stated renders it necessary that a careful analysis of the provisions of the 22d section of the dispensary act should be made. Without undertaking to state in detail all the provisions of that section, some of which are not pertinent to the present inquiry, it will be sufficient to say that, according to my understanding of that section, its scheme is that certain steps are required to be taken, in the order therein prescribed, before either the court or a judge thereof can acquire jurisdiction to issue an order restraining any person "from keeping, receiving, bartering, selling, or giving away any alcoholic liquors," to wit: (1) That some person "may go before any trial justice . . . and swear out an arrest warrant . . . charging said nuisance," and the person so charged shall be brought before the trial justice to be dealt with according to law. (2) The trial justice shall at the same time issue a search warrant, requiring the officer to whom it is directed to search the premises charged to be a nuisance, and seize all alcoholic liquors found thereon. (3) That, when the defendant is brought before the trial justice "under the arrest warrant," the case shall be disposed of as in other cases beyond his jurisdiction, except that, when he binds over the party for trial at the next term of the court of sessions, the trial justice "shall make out every paper in the case in duplicate" and file one with the clerk of the court and transmit the other to the solicitor of the circuit. (4) The solicitor is then required to apply, at once, to the circuit judge within that circuit for an order restraining the defendant from keeping, receiving, bartering, selling or giving away any alcoholic liquors until the further order of the court. Such circuit judge is empowered and required to grant the restraining order without "requiring a bond or undertaking upon the hearing or receipt by him of said papers from the court of the said trial justice by the hands of the solicitor, and any violation of said restraining order before the trial of the case shall be deemed a contempt of court, and punishment of such by said judge or court, or any other circuit judge, as for the violation of an order of injunction." (5) The act next provides that, upon the conviction of the defendant of maintaining said nuisance, at the trial, he shall suffer the punishment prescribed, "and the restraining order shall be made perpetual." (6) The act again provides that a person violating the restraining order may be punished for a contempt, and prescribes the punishment that may be imposed. The act then proceeds to declare that, in such contempt proceedings, "the court, or, in vacation the judge thereof, shall have power to try summarily and punish the party or parties guilty as required by law," and, after making some provisions as to the mode of pleading and adducing evidence and securing the attendance of witnesses, declared that "the practice in such contempt proceeding shall conform as nearly as may to the practice in the court of common pleas."

From this brief review of the provisions of the 22d section of the dispensary act, it is very obvious that the unusually stringent remedy therein provided cannot be successfully resorted to unless the several conditions prescribed are strictly complied with. Even in cases involving mere property rights, the rule is well settled that a person is not entitled to the stringent remedy of attachment and seizure of his alleged debtor's property without strictly complying with the conditions prescribed upon which such remedy may be resorted to. As was said in Augusta Sav. Bank v. Stelling, 31 S. C., at page 369: "As the remedy by attachment is a summary and somewhat harsh proceeding, whereby a person may be deprived of the possession or control of his property before the claim upon which it was based has been adjudicated, the rule is well settled that one who seeks to avail himself of such a remedy must be careful to comply strictly with the conditions upon which it is allowed." To the same effect see Wagner v. Booker, 31 S. C. 375, and Booker v. Smith, 38 S. C. 228. Now, if this be the settled rule in reference to cases involving merely rights of property, with how much greater force should it apply to cases involving the liberty of the citizen.

Guided by this well-settled rule, let us examine the various steps taken in this case, as disclosed by the certified copy of the record which has been sent up by the clerk of the circuit court, now before us. Without going into unnecessary details, that record discloses the following facts: (1) A search warrant was issued by a trial justice on the 25th of April, 1895, reciting that, upon information of J. B. Ross that "contraband intoxicating liquors are now unlawfully in the possession, storage, and keeping of, and on the premises occupied by, Martin Keeler," in the town of Blackville, and directing the officer to whom such warrant was directed to search for and seize such contraband liquors. There is no return indorsed upon this warrant, and nothing to show whether any, and, if so, what, action was taken under it. (2) Next we find an affidavit of J. B. Ross, bearing date the 26th of April, 1895, stating that Martin Keeler, on the 25th of April, 1895, and at other times, "did violate the laws and statutes of the state by selling, without permission or license, whiskey and other intoxicating liquors," to which is appended an order, signed by the trial justice, dated April 26, 1895, to "arrest and bring before me Martin Keeler, charged with violating the dispensary law." (3) A recognizance of Martin Keeler to appear before the court of general sessions on the 2d Monday in November, 1895, "to answer to a bill of indictment to be preferred against the said Martin Keeler,"—for what offense is not stated. This recognizance bears date April 27, 1895. (4) A search warrant, issued by a trial justice on the 1st of June, 1895, requiring the officer to whom it was directed to search the premises of Martin Keeler and seize any contraband liquors found thereon. This warrant is based upon the affidavit of J. B. Ross, bearing date June 1, 1895, that he is informed by his own observations, and verily believes, from such information and his own observation, "that in the house of Martin Keeler there is now deposited, stored, and kept contraband liquors, in violation of law, to wit, whiskey and other intoxicating [liquors], and that said intoxicating and contraband liquors are there kept, stored, and deposited by Martin Keeler, his aids and abettors, without a permit, in violation of the laws of the state." Upon this search warrant there is no return, and nothing to show whether any action, and, if so, what, was taken under it. (5) Next comes the application of the solicitor, without date, for the restraining order, which was made out on a printed blank, and which, after the blanks were filled, as appears in the record, reads as follows: "South Carolina, Barnwell county. And now comes G. Duncan Bellinger, solicitor for the second circuit, in which has been obtained an arrest and search warrant against Martin Keeler, issued by trial justice A. P. Woodward, of the county and state above named, and upon the return of which search warrant certain contraband and intoxicating liquors were found, being so kept without a permit. as by a reference to the trial justice's papers, hereto attached, will more fully appear, and shows to this honorable court that, the circumstances and conditions contemplated by the dispensary act having arisen in the enforcement of the provisions of the same, and the papers hereto attached charging as a nuisance the place therein mentioned, it becomes my duty to pray the issuance of an order restraining the said Martin Keeler, his agents, servants, and employees from keeping, receiving, bartering, selling or giving away any alcoholic liquors until the further order of the court." Appended to this application is the order of Judge Watts, bearing date June 26, 1895, restraining the said Martin Keeler from keeping, receiving, bartering, selling, or giving away any alcoholic liquors until the further order of the court. (6) An order of Judge Watts, bearing date the 19th of August, 1895, requiring Martin Keeler to show cause before him, on the 21st of August, 1895, why he should not be attached for a contempt in disobeying the restraining order of June 20, 1895. This rule to show cause was based upon an affidavit, dated the 16th of August, 1895, stating that said Keeler sold liquors on the 3d of August, 1895, and on divers other days before and after that date, and subsequent to the date of the restraining order. Upon the return to this rule, and after hearing the affidavits submitted, his honor, Judge Watts, granted an order (without date) discharging said rule. (7) On the 9th of November, 1895, the trial justice issued a warrant reciting, "whereas, complaint has been made unto me by H. J. Croft that Martin Keeler has unlawfully violated the dispensary act in keeping, selling, or storing contraband intoxicating liquors, and without any permit, certificate, or state license, these are therefore to command you to apprehend the said Martin Keeler, and bring him before me to be dealt with according to the law." Upon this warrant the following indorsement appears: "The defendant was arrested and brought up for a preliminary hearing. The evidence being deemed sufficient, he was bound over to appear for trial at the court of general sessions on the 2d Monday in November, 1895,"—signed by the trial justice. Accordingly, we find in the record the recognizance of the said Martin Keeler to appear and answer to a bill of indictment "for a violation of dispensary act," bearing date the 9th of November, 1895. (8) Next we find an order of his honor, Judge Buchanan, bearing date November 12, 1895, requiring Martin Keeler to show cause before him on the 16th of November, 1895, "why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for violating the restraining order made herein by Hon. R. C. Watts, presiding judge in the Second circuit, on the 20th day of June, 1895." This rule to show cause was based upon affidavits stating that said Keeler had sold whiskey to a negro on the night of the 8th of November, 1895. (9) Upon hearing the returns to said rule, with the affidavits submitted, Judge Buchanan, on the 25th of November, 1895, granted an order adjudging the said Martin Keeler guilty of contempt in disobeying the restraining order of Judge Watts, hereinbefore referred to, and sentenced him to pay a fine of $200, and to be confined to the state penitentiary for ninety days.

1 L. R. A.

From this statement of the proceeding which culminated in the order of Judge

Buchanan, adjudging the petitioner in contempt in disobeying the restraining order of Judge Watts, and imprisoning him in the state penitentiary as a punishment for such contempt, it seems to me clear that such proceedings are fundamentally defective in at least two respects, and, hence, neither the court nor any judge thereof ever acquired jurisdiction either to grant the restraining order or the order punishing the petitioner for a contempt in disobeying such restraining order. In the first place, the very first step required by the statute to be taken in order to initiate proceedings for contempt does not appear to have been taken. The first provision in the section is that some person shall obtain from a trial justice a warrant charging the person accused with committing the nuisance created by that section, and the record will be searched in vain for any evidence that any such warrant was ever obtained or applied for. As we have seen from the abstract of the record above set forth, the first step which was taken was procuring a search warrant,—not an “arrest warrant,” as it is termed in the statute,—which was obtained on the 25th of April, 1895. And the warrant for the arrest of the petitioner, issued on the next day,—the 26th of April, 1895,—so far from charging the petitioner with keeping or maintaining the nuisances denounced by the statute, simply charged the petitioner in the most general terms, with “violating the dispensary law,” without stating, or even intimating, what provision of the dispensary law he had violated. And it is very obvious that the dispensary act creates several distinct and different offenses, with distinct and different penalties attached. And, if we turn to the affidavit upon which this warrant was based, we find that it is there stated that the petitioner “did violate the laws and statutes of the state by selling, without permit or license, whiskey and other intoxicating liquors.” It is clear, therefore, that this warrant did not charge the offense of keeping and maintaining a nuisance, denounced by the 22d section of the dispensary act; but, on the contrary, did charge an offense denounced by another section of that act. So, also, the warrant issued on the 1st of June, 1895, was a search warrant, and not an “arrest warrant;” and neither that warrant, nor the affidavit upon which it was based, contains any charge of nuisance. While it is true that the recitals contained in the application of the solicitor for the restraining order do seem to imply that the petitioner was charged with keeping and maintaining a nuisance, and the returns on the search warrant showed that “certain contraband and intoxicating liquors” were found on the premises of the petitioner, yet these recitals are based, expressly, upon the several papers issued by the trial justice; and, as we have seen, these papers utterly fail to sustain such recitals, and do not show that there ever was any return made upon either of the search warrants, nor do they show that any intoxicating liquors were found upon the premises of the petitioner, and do not show that any action whatever was taken under either of the search warrants. So that it is plain that the record before us fails to show that the necessary steps prescribed by the statute were ever taken in order to confer jurisdiction to issue the restraining order; and, if so, then it necessarily follows that the proceedings for contempt of an order issued without jurisdiction are also void for want of jurisdiction. If it should be said that the admission, signed by the attorney for petitioner and the assistant attorney general, “that all the proceedings taken by Solicitor Bellinger before Judge Buchanan were regular, so far as petition, affidavits, etc., are concerned,” concluded the question of jurisdiction, the answer would be that consent cannot confer jurisdiction; and, if the consent of the parties themselves cannot confer jurisdiction, surely no admissions of their attorneys have that effect, when, as we have seen, the record before the court shows a lack of jurisdiction. Besides, there is no admission that the proceedings before Judge Watts to obtain the restraining order “were regular,” and this constitutes the fundamental jurisdictional objection. It is scarcely necessary to notice the warrant issued by the trial justice on the 9th of November, 1895, for neither that warrant nor the affidavit upon which it is based purports to charge the petitioner with keeping or maintaining a nuisance as forbidden by the 22d section of the dispensary act; and, on the contrary, the offense then charged was under another section of the dispensary act. Besides, Judge Buchanan did not, and could not, base his order, for a rule to show cause, and his final order adjudging the petitioner to be guilty of contempt, upon that prosecution, for the obvious reason that it was not followed up by any application for a restraining order. On the contrary, his action was based entirely upon the original prosecution, followed up by the restraining order of Judge Watts, granted on the 20th of June, 1895. I may add here that there is nothing in the position, taken by counsel for petitioner, that Judge Watts had previously discharged a rule to show cause why the petitioner should not be adjudged guilty of a contempt in disobeying the restraining order of 20th of June, 1895, and, therefore, that the matter was res judicata; for the papers show that the proceedings for contempt before Judge Watts were based upon the charge of selling liquor on or about the 3d of August, 1895, while the similar proceeding before Judge Buchanan was based upon a charge of selling liquor on the 8th of November, 1895, some time afterwards. And, while it might have been entirely true that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the charge of selling liquor on the 3d of August, 1895, as, no doubt, was the fact, yet that did not even tend to show that the charge of selling liquor on the 8th of November, 1895, was not sustained by the evidence.

In the second place, it does not appear, from the record before us, that any action was ever instituted against the petitioner under which an application was made for a restraining order, or for an injunction, as it is indifferently spoken of in the act. While it is true that there is no provision in the 22d section of the dispensary act requiring that the application for a restraining order must be made by an action instituted for that purpose, yet it is equally true that there is no provision in that section, or any other section, of the dispensary act, providing for any other mode by which an application for an injunction or a restraining order may be made; and hence, in the absence of any such provision, it follows, necessarily, that the only mode provided by the general law for obtaining an injunction, to wit, by an action, must be pursued. The provision in the section that the solicitor shall, upon the papers furnished him by the trial justice, apply to the circuit judge for a restraining order, certainly does not prescribe any mode of proceeding by which such an application shall be made. It simply provides the basis or evidence upon which the application may be made. Besides all this it seems to me, from an attentive and careful examination of the provisions of § 22 of the dispensary act, that it is more than doubtful, to say the least of it, whether the legislature ever intended that a citizen should be deprived of his liberty and subjected to the degrading punishment of confinement in the penitentiary for disobeying an order forbidding him to keep or maintain an alleged nuisance, before it had been ascertained by the verdict of a jury that he had ever kept or maintained a nuisance. Otherwise, whence the necessity of requiring, as the very first step in the proceedings, that a warrant shall be issued charging the accused with keeping and maintaining a nuisance, under which he shall be arrested and bound over to answer, in the court of sessions, to a bill of indictment for such offense, where, of course he would be entitled to a trial by jury. On the contrary, it seems to me that the more reasonable construction of the section is that the intention of the legislature was that the person charged with keeping and maintaining the nuisance created by the section in question should be indicted and tried in the regular way; and, for the purpose of preventing the continuance of the alleged nuisance, pending the prosecution, an order may be granted enjoining and restraining the accused from continuing such nuisance, for disobedience of which, as in any other case of injunction, he may be punished for a contempt, after the fact of nuisance has been judicially ascertained by the verdict of the jury. Suppose it should be ascertained, judicially, upon the trial of an indictment for nuisance, that the accused had never been guilty of keeping or maintaining a nuisance; then if, in the meantime, he shall be punished for a contempt in disobeying an order restraining him from keeping and maintaining a nuisance, under summary proceedings for contempt, he will have been punished by confinement in the penitentiary for doing an act which it has been judicially ascertained, by the verdict of the jury, he never did do. Surely, the legislature never intended any such result, and I would be very unwilling to attribute to them any such intention unless it was plainly expressed in much more explicit terms than those found in § 22 of the dispensary act. Under this view, the second general question, as to the constitutionality of the 22d section of the dispensary act, does not necessarily arise, and, therefore, under well-settled principles, should not be considered. I am therefore of the opinion that the petitioner, Martin Keeler, has been deprived of his liberty without due warrant of law, and is therefore entitled to a discharge.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Mary MENNEILEY, Appt.,
v.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSURANCE CORPORATION, Limited, Respnt.

(148 N. Y. 586.)

1. The words "inhaling gas," in a provision describing causes of death against which a policy does not insure, apply only to cases where gas is inhaled intentionally, voluntarily, and consciously.
2. A provision that death "from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled" is not insured against applies only where something has been voluntarily and intentionally although mistakenly taken, administered, or inhaled.
3. A provision that death "from accidents that shall bear no external and visible marks" is not insured against by a life insurance policy means that there must be external and visible evidence that death was accidental, and does not exclude liability for death caused by accidentally and involuntarily breathing illuminating gas while asleep.

(March 3, 1896.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, reversing a judgment of the Monroe County Circuit in her favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a mutual benefit certificate. Reversed.

Statement by Martin, J.:

The facts in this case were agreed upon by the parties, and were as follows: "That on the 12th day of October, 1891, during the continuance of the said policy of insurance, Samuel D. W. Menneiley, the person mentioned in the complaint as the person insured in and by said policy of insurance, died. That at the time of his death he was stopping as a guest at the NOTE.—As to what constitutes an accident within the meaning of an insurance policy, see note to Fidelity & C. Co. v. Johnson (Miss.) 80 L. R. A. 206.

For provisions against liability on an insurance policy, see T. R. A.

policy for death by inhaling gas, see also Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (N.Y.) 3 L. R. A. 443, and Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 13 L. R. A. 661, with note.

Millard Hotel, in Omaha, Neb. That he went to his room in said hotel on the night of the said 12th day of October, 1891, and at some time after he went to his room the illuminating gas therein accidentally escaped into his room. That early in the morning of the 13th day of October, 1891, the said Menneiley was found dead in his bed, his room being tightly closed on the inside, and filled with such illuminating gas. That the death of said Menneiley was occasioned by accidental means, and arose from and was caused by his involuntarily and accidentally breathing into his lungs the said illuminating gas, which had so accidentally escaped into such room, the escape of such gas being immediately discoverable upon entering said room, in consequence of which inspiration of said gas he died the same night of asphyxia. That the accident from which said Menneiley died caused no external and visible marks, and the body of said Menneiley bore no external and visible marks of the accident on account of which he died, unless the facts that illuminating gas emanated from his body when artificial respiration was produced, to the perception of the person producing such artificial respiration; that the room, on entering the same, was easily perceived to be full of illuminating gas, and that the gas was then escaping therein; and that inspection of the body showed life to be extinct,—be held or found to constitute such external and visible marks, within the meaning of the term 'external and visible marks,' contained in the policy. The defendant does not admit that such facts constitute 'external and visible marks,' within the meaning of the term 'external and visible marks,' contained in the policy. The plaintiff claims that they do. That the plaintiff herein gave immediate notice of said accident, with full particulars thereof, in writing, to the United States managers of the defendant, at Boston, and, prior to the commencement of this action, furnished them with full proof and evidence thereof. That on the 27th day of January, 1892, plaintiff duly demanded of the defendant payment of said policy, but that the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff any amount on said policy, claiming that said policy did not insure against such a risk as that which caused the death of the insured. This action was commenced February 11, 1892."

Mr. William Nathaniel Cogswell, for appellant:

The clause exempting the company from liability in case the accident arose from inhaling gas does not apply to such a case as this.

Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443.

The clause exempting the company from liability "against death or disablement arising from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled" does not apply to such a case as this.

Ripley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 2 Bigelow, Life & Acc. Ins. Rep. § 738; Providence L. Ins. & L. Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310; Burry v. United States Mut. Acc. Assn. 23 Fed. Rep. 712; Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Assn. 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617; Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 13 L. R. A. 661.

The clause in the policy as to 'external and visible marks" does not discharge the defendant from liability.

United States Mut. Acc. Assn. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60.

Mr. W. A. Southerland, with Messrs. Butler, Stillman, & Hubbard, for respondent:

The defendant had the right, and certainly attempted to stipulate against liability in case of death caused by gas.

The defendant's policy has successfully attempted to stipulate against liability in cases like the one at bar.

The expressions "inhaling gas" and "anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled" are not tautologous, and do not refer to one and the same thing.

In Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443, this court said that the words "inhaling gas" cannot refer to an involuntary and unconscious act. But in the case at bar the company expressly stipulated against something besides "a voluntary and intelligent act by the insured" and it did provide against "an involuntary and unconscious act."

Richardson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 843.

The death of Menneiley was not caused by any accident that bore "external and visible marks."

If a dead body in and of itself constitutes the "external and visible marks" caused by an accident, then the words used in the policy are meaningless, and the defendant has first contracted that an accident to render it liable must produce visible and external marks, and in the same words it has stipulated that there can be no death without such external and visible marks.

Martin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is upon a policy or contract of insurance issued by the defendant to Samuel D. W. Menneiley, by which, in case of his death from any accident within the provisions of the policy, the defendant agreed, within three months thereafter, to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $5,000. The conditions contained in the policy, so far as applicable to the questions involved in this case, are as follows: "This policy does not insure against death or disablement . . . from accidents that shall bear no external and visible marks . . . nor against death or disablement arising from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled, contact of poisonous substances, inhaling gas, or any surgical operation or exhaustion consequent thereon." The general term held that the clause in the policy which provides that it does not insure against death or disablement arising from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled, described an act that was not voluntary and intelligent, but accidental, and that the admitted facts bring this case within that exception. That court also held that the facts did not establish a case within the exception as to inhaling gas; citing the decision of Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443. 'Thus the sole ground upon which judgment was directed for the defendant was that it was not liable because the cause of the death of the insured was within the exception in the policy as to death arising from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled. Moreover, the respondent admits that in this state, under the authority of the Paul Case, the words "inhaling gas," contained in the policy, when read in the light of the context, apply only to cases where gas is inhaled intentionally, voluntarily, and consciously, and that under the decision in that case the judgment of the general term cannot be upheld on the theory that that provision exempted the defendant from liability under its policy. In the Paul Case, Judge Gray, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "But, in expressing its intention not to be liable for death from 'inhaling of gas,' the company can only be understood to mean a voluntary and intelligent act by the insured, and not an involuntary and unconscious act. Read in that sense, and in the light of the context, these words must be interpreted as having reference to medical or surgical treatment, in which, ex vi termini, would be included the dentist's work, or to a suicidal purpose. Of course, the deceased must have in a certain sense, inhaled gas; but in view of the finding that the death was caused by accidental means, the proper meaning of words compels, as does the logic of the thing, the conclusion that there was not that voluntary or conscious act, necessarily involved in the process of inhaling." In that case it was distinctly held that the defendant was not exempt from liability under such a provision where the death of the insured was caused by the accidental inhaling of illuminating gas. The facts in that case were so nearly like those in the case at bar that no distinction between them exists. The Paul Case was referred to in Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Assn. 123 N. Y. 304, 308, 9 L. R. A. 617, and its doctrine expressly recognized as correct. It was also followed in Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 91, 13 L. R. A. 661. It follows that the judgment appealed from cannot be sustained upon the ground that the clause in the policy excepting death from inhaling gas from its provisions exempts the defendant from liability in this case.

The respondent, however, urges that upon the admitted facts the general term properly held that the provision with reference to "anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled," exempted the company from any liability whatever under its policy. We think otherwise. That provision in the policy clearly implies voluntary action on the part of the insured, or some other person. The insured must take or inhale, or another must administer. The manifest purpose of the provision is to exempt the insurer from liability where the insured has voluntarily and consciously, but accidentally, taken or inhaled, or something has been voluntarily administered which was injurious or destructive of life. We think that the particular accidents intended to be excepted by that provision are the accidental taking or inhaling into the system of some injurious or destructive agency under the mistaken belief that it was beneficial, or, at least, harmless. That is made more apparent by that portion of the provision which relates to something "administered," as it cannot be reasonably construed as referring to a thing involuntarily and unconsciously administered. Indeed, it is quite difficult to understand how a thing could be involuntarily and unconsciously administered. Coupled together as these provisions are, the same rule of construction must be applied to that portion which relates to something accidentally inhaled as applies to the portion which relates to a substance accidentally taken or accidentally administered. All the cases thus provided for plainly involve voluntary and conscious action on the part of the insured, or some other person. The leading and controlling idea in this provision is the performance of a voluntary act which accidentally causes the death or injury of the insured. That a proper construction of the policy requires us to hold that it applies only to cases where something has been voluntarily and intentionally, although mistakenly taken, administered, or inhaled, there can, we think, be but little doubt. As thus construed, this provision, manifestly, did not exempt the defendant from liability in this case, as it was admitted that the death of the insured was occasioned by accidental means, and was caused by involuntarily and accidentally breathing illuminating gas which had escaped into the room where he was sleeping at the time of his death. The argument that the provision as to inhaling gas has been given the same effect as is now given to the other and more general one, and that such could not have been their purpose, has little force. The inhaling of gas having been specially provided for when taken for surgical and like purposes, it is only when it is inhaled for some other purpose, or under other circumstances, that the general provision applies. The special provision is applicable when gas is inhaled for surgical and like purposes. The general provision applies when it is inhaled for other purposes. Applying to the construction of this policy the principles stated in the opinion in the Paul Case, it is obvious that the construction we have placed upon the policy is the proper and correct one.

The only remaining question relates to the provision which declares that the policy "does not insure against death or disablement . . . from accidents that shall bear no external and visible marks." It is somewhat difficult to understand precisely what was intended by this clause of the policy. We are, however, of the opinion that the language employed, when fairly construed, indicates that its purpose was to provide that a case of death or injury should not be regarded as within the policy unless there was some external or visible evidence which indicated that it was accidental; in other words, that only such injury as could be shown by external and visible evidence to have been accidental should be regarded as within the policy. In this case it is admitted that the decedent's death was occasioned by his involuntarily and accidentally breathing illuminating gas which had accidentally escaped into his room; that there were no visible marks of the accident upon the body of the deceased, but, when artificial respiration was produced, illuminating gas emanated therefrom to the perception of the person producing such artificial respiration; that upon entering the room it was perceived to be full of gas, and that gas was then escaping therein; and that an inspection of the body showed life to be extinct. We think this admission furnishes sufficient evidence of an external and visible character that the death of the decedent was accidental to exclude it from this exception in the policy, and hence that it was one of the accidents against which the defendant intended to insure. The respondent discusses this question upon the theory that this clause in the policy should be construed as though it read, "from accident where there shall be no external and visible marks upon the body of the deceased." A fair construction of the language does not, we think, justify the conclusion that such was its intent and purpose, but that the more reasonable construction is that which has already been suggested.

If we are correct in these conclusions, it follows that the judgment of the General Term should be reversed, and the judgment upon the verdict directed for the plaintiff should be affirmed, with costs to the plaintiff in all the courts.

All concur, except Andrews, Ch. J., not voting, and Haight, J., not sitting.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, Respt.,
v.

Henry J. HAVNOR, Appt.

(149 N. Y. 195.)

1. Due process of law is not furnished by a judgment pronounced after opportunity to be heard by a court of competent jurisdiction in accordance with the provisions of a statute, unless that statute accords with the provisions of the fundamental law.
2. Every man's liberty and property are to some extent subject to the general welfare, as each person's interest is presumed to be promoted by that which promotes the interest of all.
3. The limitation on legislative exercise of the police power is that such a statute must have a reasonable connection with the welfare of the public.
4. A statute prohibiting barbers from carrying on their trade on Sunday is a constitutional exercise of the police power to promote the public health.
5. The physical welfare of the citizen is a subject of such primary importance to the state, and has such a direct relation to the general good, as to make laws tending to promote that object proper under the police power.
6. A statute permitting barbers in two localities of the state only to pursue their business during certain hours on Sunday does not deny to barbers in other places the equal protection of the laws, since it affects all within the same localities alike.

NOTE.—The constitutionality of Sunday laws is overwhelmingly established by the decisions found in a note to Judefund v. State (Md.) 22 L. R. A. 721. In conflict with the above case of PEOPLE v.

31 L. R. A.

(April 14, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the Court of Special Sessions for the City and County of New York convicting him of violating the statute against keeping a barber shop open for business on Sunday. Affirmed.

Statement by Vann, J.:

In June, 1895, the defendant was engaged in business as a barber at number 57 West Thirty-Third street, in the city of New York, and had been for the period of nine years. His establishment included "eleven ordinary chairs, three baths and two ladies' hair-dressing chairs." He kept his shop open on Sunday afternoon until 8 o'clock, for the purpose of shaving his customers and cutting and dressing their hair. Some of his patrons, who worked late Saturday night, and rose late the next day, were in the habit of being shaved on Sunday afternoon, as well as others who could not shave themselves and yet desired to be shaved every day as a matter of cleanliness. On Sunday, June 9, 1895, after 1 o'clock in the afternoon, the defendant's shop was open and he was present while one of his employees shaved a customer and payment for the service was made to the defendant in person.

No other material facts appeared upon the trial, which resulted in the conviction of the defendant, who was fined $5. The judgment was affirmed by the appellate division and the defendant brought this appeal.

Mr. Albert I. Sire, for appellant:

The act is void under N. Y. Const. art. 1, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

It is void under the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to the citizens of the several states.

U. S. Const. 5th and 14th Amendments.

The legislature cannot, under the guise of its police power, enact laws to suppress harmless acts which have no relation to the health, safety, or wellbeing of society.

People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389; Live Stock Dealers' & B. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 388; Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34.

All laws which impair or trammel these [constitutional] rights which limit one in the choice of a trade or profession, or confine him to work or live in a specified locality, or exclude him from his own house, or restrain him in his otherwise lawful movements are infringements upon his fundamental rights of liberty which are under constitutional protection.

Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S.

HAVNOR is the recent Illinois decision in Eden v. People, — L. R. A. —, which is not yet reported, and is at this date subject to application for rehearing.

746, 28 L. ed. 585; Live Stock Dealers' & B. Assn. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 389.

The limit to the exercise of the police power can only be this: The legislation must have reference to the comfort, safety, or welfare of society; it must not be in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution.

Potter's Dwar. Stat. 458; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121; Slaughter House Cases, supra; Coe v. Schultz, 47 Barb. 64.

When a health law is challenged in the courts as unconstitutional on the ground that it arbitrarily interferes with personal liberty and private property without due process of law, the courts must be able to see that it has at least in fact some relation to the public health, that the public health is the end actually aimed at, and that it is appropriate and adapted to that end.

Health Department v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710; People, Nechamcus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718.

The act is an instance of class legislation and should be condemned on this ground.

Mr. John D. Lindsay, with Mr. John R. Fellows, for respondent:

The work of a barber on Sunday is not a work of necessity.

Phillips v. Innes, 4 Clark & F. 234; 2 Rob. Pr. 400; Com. v. Jacobus, 1 Pa. Legal Gaz. 491, 15 Cent. L. J. 145; Com. v. Williams, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 61; Com. v. Waldman, 140 Pa. 89, 11 L. R. A. 563; Com. v. Dextra, 143 Mass. 28; Ungericht v. State, 119 Ind. 379; State v. Frederick, 45 Ark. 347, 55 Am. Rep. 555.

But even though it were necessary, in the sense and under the circumstances sought to be shown in the case at bar, that a considerable number of persons should be shaved on Sundays, the legislature might nevertheless prohibit it.

People v. Moses, 140 N. Y. 214; Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 548; Neuendorff v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557, 25 Am. Rep. 235; People, Hobach, v. Sheriff of Kings County, 13 Misc. 557.

The legislature having the unquestionable right to regulate the observance of the Sabbath, the act here in question, being an appropriate exercise of the right, will not be invalidated as an unreasonable or unwarranted interference with the defendant's right to exercise his trade, and therefore violative of N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 391; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 521, 30 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.

The statute cannot be said to be class legislation and therefore violative of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578.

Vann, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The main ground upon which the defendant asks us to reverse the judgment against him is that the statute under which he was convicted is in conflict with that provision of the Constitution which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law" (Const. art. 1, § 6). The statute in question, entitled, "An Act to Regulate Barbering on Sunday," provides that "any person who carries on or engages in the business of shaving, hair cutting, or other work of a barber on the first day of the week shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . provided that in the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs barber shops . . . may be kept open and the work of a barber performed therein until 1 o'clock of the afternoon of the first day of the week." Laws 1895, chap. 823.

The defendant claims that this statute deprives him to a certain extent of his "liberty," by preventing him from carrying on a lawful calling as he wishes, and also of his "property," by preventing the free use of his premises, tools, and labor, and thus rendering them less productive. It is not claimed that his occupation is of a noisy nature or that he so carried on his business as to disturb the peace, quiet, and good order of the neighborhood, or that the act for which he was convicted, if done on any day of the week other than the first, or at any hour of that day prior to 1 o'clock in the afternoon, would have been a violation of law. Nor is it claimed that the conviction was authorized by the common law, or that it was based upon any statute except the one above cited, and, indeed, the judgment of the court of special sessions expressly refers to that act and adjudges the defendant guilty of a misdemeanor because he violated its command.

The phrase "due process of law" is not satisfied by a judgment pronounced, after an opportunity to be heard, by a court of competent jurisdiction in accordance with the provisions of a statute, unless that statute accords with the provisions of the fundamental law. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 393. In a broad sense, whatever prevents a man from following a useful calling is an invasion of his "liberty," and whatever prevents him from freely using his lands or chattels is a deprivation of his "property." Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 105, 50 Am. Rep. 636. Yet, during the history of our state many laws have been passed which, to some extent, have interfered with the right to liberty and property but their accord with the Constitution has seldom been questioned, and, when questioned, has been generally sustained. The power of taxation, the right to preserve the public health, to protect the public morals and to provide for the public safety may interfere somewhat with both liberty and property, yet proper statutes to effect these ends have never been held to invade the guarantees of the Constitution. While the confinement of the insane or of those afflicted with contagious diseases infringes upon personal liberty, and the destruction of buildings to prevent the spread of fire, the exercise of the power of eminent domain and the prevention of cruelty to animals encroach upon the right to property, still the proper exercise of these powers, under the authority of the legislature, although constant and known of all men, gives rise to no question of moment under the Constitution. The sanction for these apparent trespasses upon private rights is found in the principle that every man's liberty and property is, to some extent, subject to the general welfare, as each person's interest is presumed to be promoted by that which promotes the interest of all. Dependent upon this principle is the great police power, so universally recognized, but so difficult to define, which guards the health, the welfare, and the safety of the public. While this power may not be employed ostensibly for the common good, but really for an ulterior purpose, when its object and effect are manifestly in the public interest, as was said in the Jacobs Case, "it is very broad and comprehensive, and . . . under it the conduct of an individual and the use of property may be regulated so as to interfere, to some extent, with the freedom of the one and the enjoyment of the other." (p. 108). In the exercise of this power the legislature has the right, generally, to determine what laws are needed to preserve the public health and protect the public safety, yet its discretion in this respect is not wholly without limit, for our courts have been steadfast in holding that the statute must have some relation to the general welfare; that the purpose to be reached must be a public purpose, and that "the law must in fact be a police law." Thus it has been held that "an act to improve the public health by prohibiting the manufacture of cigars and preparation of tobacco in any form in tenement houses in certain cases" (Laws 1884, chap. 272) was unconstitutional, because it did not tend to promote the public health, and that this was not the end actually aimed at. Re Jacobs, supra. For the same reason "an act to prevent deception in sales of dairy products" (Laws 1881, chap. 202) was declared to conflict with the Constitution, as it absolutely prohibited an innocent industry that was not fraudulently conducted, solely for the reason that it competed with another and might reduce the price of an article of food. People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34. When, however, the act was so changed as to make the substance accord with the title (Laws 1885, chap. 183), it was held to be constitutional. People v. Arensburg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483. In a recent case, an act prohibiting the sale of any article of food upon the inducement that something would be given to the purchaser as a premium or reward (Laws 1887, chap. 691), was held to be an unauthorized invasion of the rights of property, and an improper exercise of the police power of the state. People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389. It was expressly declared in that case that the courts must be able to see, upon a perusal of the enactment, that there is some fair, just, and reasonable connection between it and the common good, and that unless such relation exists the statute cannot be upheld as an exercise of the police power.

Subject, however, to the limitation that 81 L. R. A.

the real object of the statute must appear upon inspection to have a reasonable connection with the welfare of the public, the exercise of the police power by the legislature is well established as not in conflict with the Constitution. Heister v. Metropolitan Bd. of Health, 37 N. Y. 661, 669; Re Deansville Cemetery Asso. 66 N. Y. 569, 23 Am. Rep. 86; Re Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1, 7, 23 Am. Rep. 88; People v. Kemp, v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359; People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 25 L. R. A. 794; People v. Nechameus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718; Health Department v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710. When thus exercised, even if the effect is to interfere to some extent with the use of property or the prosecution of a lawful pursuit, it is not regarded as an appropriation of property or an encroachment upon liberty, because the preservation of order and the promotion of the general welfare, so essential to organized society, of necessity involve some sacrifice of natural rights. Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 14, 19 Am. Rep. 140; Prentice v. Weston, 111 N. Y. 460.

The vital question, therefore, is whether the real purpose of the statute under consideration has a reasonable connection with the public health, welfare, or safety. The object of the act, as gathered from its title and text, was to regulate the prosecution of a particular trade on Sunday by prohibiting it from being carried on as a business on that day except in two localities to which the prohibition applies only after a certain hour. It does not require the observance of the Sabbath as a holy day, or in any sense as a religious institution, as is evident from the fact that the entire day is left open to all secular employments but one, and a part of the day, in certain places, to that. There is nothing in the act to prevent the defendant from carrying on his trade "in any manner or in any place that he pleases. He is simply prohibited from carrying on that trade upon Sunday."

The peculiar character of the first day of the week, not simply on account of the obligations of religion, but as a day of rest and recreation, has been recognized for time out of mind both by the legislature and the courts. Statutes passed upon the subject while we were a colony of Great Britain, as well as under the various Constitutions in force since our organization as a state, have, so far as appears, been uniformly enforced by the courts. 29 Car. II. chap. 7; 2 Greenl. 89; Andrews, 467; 1 Rev. Laws, 194; 2 Rev. Stat. 675, § 70; Laws 1788, chap. 42; Laws 1801, chap. 34; Laws 1847, chap. 349; Laws 1883, chap. 358, Penal Code, § 263.

Similar laws in other states, and especially those which require the closing of places of business on Sunday, have generally been sustained. People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 22 L. R. A. 696; Voglesong v. State, 9 Ind. 112; Shorer v. State, 10 Ark. 259; Warner v. Smith, 8 Conn. 14; Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387; Specht v. Com. 8 Pa. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; Bohl v. State, 3 Tex. App. 683; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 589, 726; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, p. 183; Hare's Am. Const. Law, 766.

While questions have been raised as to noiseless and inoffensive occupations that can be carried on by one individual without requiring the services of others, as well as to persons who observe the seventh instead of the first day of the week, still the rule is believed to be general throughout the Union, although not generally enforced, that the ordinary business of life shall be suspended on Sunday, in order that thereby the physical and moral well-being of the people may be advanced. The inconvenience to some is not regarded as an argument against the constitutionality of the statute, as that is an incident to all general laws. Sunday statutes have been sustained as constitutional almost without exception, the most notable instance to the contrary, Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 502, decided by a divided court in an early day in California, having been subsequently overruled by the courts of that state. Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 685; Ex parte Koser, 60 Cal. 202.

The leading case in our own state upon the subject is that of Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 548, in which Judge Allen discussed the common law as well as legislation affecting the Sabbath with great force and clearness. He held, in substance, that the body of the Constitution recognizes Sunday as a day of rest and an institution to be respected, by not counting it as a part of the time allowed to the Governor for examining bills submitted for his approval; that the Sabbath exists as a day of rest by the common law without the necessity of legislative action to establish it; and that the legislature has the right to regulate its observance as a civil and political institution. That case was expressly approved in Neuendorff v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557, 561, 563, and was referred to as one "which has never been questioned in a court of higher or equal authority," and "as declaring the law of this state." It was cited with approval in People v. Moses, 140 N. Y. 214, 215, where Judge Earl, speaking for a majority of the court, said: "The Christian Sabbath is one of the civil institutions of the state, and that the legislature for the purpose of promoting the moral and physical well-being of the people and the peace, quiet, and good order of society, has authority to regulate its observance, and prevent its desecration by any appropriate legislation is unquestioned." While works of charity and necessity have usually been excepted from the effect of laws relating to the Sabbath, and sometimes, also, those persons who keep another day of the week, still quiet pursuits have not, even when they can be carried on without the labor of others, because general respect and observance of the day, so far as practicable, have been deemed essential to the interest of the public, including as a part thereof those who prefer not to keep the day, as their health and morals are entitled to protection, even against their will, the same as those of any other class in the community. According to the common judgment of civilized men, public economy requires, for sanitary reasons, a day of general rest from labor, and the day naturally selected is that regarded as sacred by the greatest number of citizens, as this causes the least inconvenience through interference with business. Lindenmuller v. People, supra.

It is to the interest of the state to have strong, robust, healthy citizens, capable of self-support, of bearing arms, and of adding to the resources of the country. Laws to effect this purpose, by protecting the citizen from overwork and requiring a general day of rest to restore his strength and preserve his health, have an obvious connection with the public welfare. Independent of any question relating to morals or religion, the physical welfare of the citizen is a subject of such primary importance to the state, and has such a direct relation to the general good, as to make laws tending to promote that object proper under the police power, and hence valid under the Constitution, which "presupposes its existence, and is to be construed with reference to that fact." Carthage v. Frederick, 122 N. Y. 268, 273, 10 L. R. A. 178.

The statute under discussion tends to effect this result because it requires persons engaged in a kind of business that takes many hours each day to refrain from carrying it on during one day in seven. This affords an opportunity, recurring at regular intervals, for rest, needed both by the employer and the employed, and the latter, at least, may not have the power to observe a day of rest without the aid of legislation. As Mr. Tiedeman says in his work on Police Powers: "If the law did not interfere, the feverish, intense desire to acquire wealth, . . . inciting a relentless rivalry and competition, would ultimately prevent, not only the wage-earners, but likewise the capitalists and employers themselves, from yielding to the warnings of nature, and obeying the instinct of self-preservation by resting periodically from labor," Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, p. 181. As barbers generally work more hours each day than most men, the legislature may well have concluded that legislation was necessary for the protection of their health.

We think that this statute was intended and is adapted to promote the public health, and thereby to serve a public purpose of the utmost importance by promoting the observance of Sunday as a day of rest. It follows, therefore, that it does not go beyond the limits of legislative power by depriving any one of liberty or property within the meaning of the Constitution.

The learned counsel for the defendant, however, criticises the act in question as class legislation, and claims that it is invalid under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to barbers who do not reside in New York or Saratoga the equal protection of the laws. That amendment does not relate to territorial arrangements made for different portions of a state, nor to legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its operation, but within the sphere of its operation affects alike all persons similarly situated. Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 30, 25 L. ed. 989, 992; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. ed. 923, 924. It was not designed to interfere with the exercise of the police power by the state for the protection of health, or the preservation of morals. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 683, 32 L. ed. 253, 256. The statute treats all barbers alike within the same localities, for none can work on Sunday outside of New York and Saratoga, but all may work in those places until a certain hour. All are therefore treated alike under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed. Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578. As was said by the learned appellate division in deciding this case: "If the legislature has power to regulate the observance and prevent the desecration of the Sabbath, it has the power to say what acts in the different localities of the state it is necessary to prohibit to accomplish this purpose. It is quite conceivable that an act in one locality, thickly settled, should be prohibited which in sparsely settled districts of the state could be allowed, and for this reason an act might be objectionable in one district, but not in another. All of these regulations have in view the proper observance of the day, and are within the discretion of the legislature."

We think that the statute violates no provision of either the Federal or state Constitution, and that the judgment appealed from should therefore be affirmed.

All concur, with Vann, J., for affirmance, except Gray and Bartlett, J.J., who dissent, each reading for reversal, and Haight, J., who concurs in both dissenting opinions.

Gray, J., dissenting:

This enactment can only find its justification, in my opinion, in an attempted exercise of the police power of the state. I cannot suppose that it is to be defended as a proper or reasonable extension of the "Sunday law" of the state. That law includes in the works of necessity, which it permits, "whatever is needful for the good order, health, or comfort of the community." The occupation of the barber has not been deemed unlawful under it, and it would look like a relapse into the narrow groove of earlier Puritanical belief if we should now regard it as inconsistent with the due observance of the Sabbath day. Conceding, as I do, to the legislature a wide range in the exercise of what is known as the police power. I think that, in this piece of legislation, it has overstepped the limits and has infringed upon the constitutional guaranties, which, in effect, assure to us the enjoyment of our liberty and of our property in all reasonable ways. While it has been frequently observed that it is difficult to define the limits of the police power of the state, it is nevertheless agreed that an enactment in that direction must be one having reference to the comfort, the safety, or the welfare of society. A line of decisions in the Federal and state courts has erected these as monuments to denote the boundaries of this extraordinary power which is deemed to reside in the legislative agents of the people of the state. We know that this power is not above the Constitution, but that it is subject to it, 31 L. R. A.

and when legislation violates any of its provisions, in the letter or the spirit, it is the duty of the courts, upon the faithful performance of which the people confidently rely, to interpose the barrier of their judgments against its enforcement. Under the constitutional guaranty every one is at liberty to follow any lawful avocation which is not injurious to the community, and to enjoy its fruits, and any interference by the legislature, under the guise of a police regulation, must be seen by the court to have some real reference to the common good. The mere declaration of the legislature is not conclusive. It cannot seriously be said that the defendant's business is one that conflicts with the comfort, safety, or welfare of the community, when carried on upon the first day of the week, called Sunday. It is in its nature a peaceable occupation, and, as usually conducted, cannot and does not interfere with the quiet of the day, or with the performance by any citizen of the duties of the day, however appointed. It is one that not merely conduces to the comfort of the individual, but promotes his decent appearance as a member of the community, and it is quite impossible to conceive of the business as, in any reasonable way, militating against the requirements of society with respect to the Sabbath day.

The learned justices of the appellate division have thought that it is discretionary with the legislature to enact laws for the regulation of the observance of the Sabbath. That discretion does exist so far as to prevent what is or amounts to a desecration of the day, as was decided in People v. Moses, 140 N. Y. 215, but it should not be deemed to exist so far as to interfere with a peaceable calling, and one more or less necessary to the comfort and decency of members of the community.

But this legislation, in my judgment, is particularly objectionable and deserving of judicial condemnation, for the reason that it discriminates unreasonably in dealing with those who are engaged in the pursuit of a lawful avocation. It certainly must be implied in our governmental system that legislation shall be equal as to all and just in its commands. If that were not so, government by the people for the people would exist but in name. The fundamental guaranties, on which rest our social structure, would be delusive. The legislature cannot act arbitrarily, and if this act is to be defended as a proper exercise of the police power, then it is without shadow of excuse in discriminating against barbers who do not reside in the city of New York or in the village of Saratoga Springs. Legislation which discriminates in this wise is not in harmony with the idea of our democratic form of government. Where it touches the pursuit by individuals of a lawful avocation, it should act with impartial hand; affecting all alike and subjecting every one interested to the same restraints for the sake of the common good. There is no sensible or plausible reason for the discrimination made by this law. It is unnecessary, unreasonable, and hostile to the true policy of the state. Regarded as an exercise of the police power, it cannot be justified as either necessary for the good of society or as conducive to its welfare; and it is violative of constitutional principles, in that it restrains unduly and unequally the liberty of those engaged in a lawful business.

I think the judgment appealed from should be reversed and that the defendant should be discharged.

Bartlett, J., dissenting:

While this court has very properly held that the Christian Sabbath is one of the civil institutions of the state, and that the legislature may regulate its observance and prevent its desecration (People v. Moses, 140 N. Y. 214), I think the case at bar presents an instance where the lawmakers have overstepped the bounds of legitimate legislation in the alleged exercise of the police power. Laws 1895, chap. 823, provides substantially that any person who engages in the business of a barber on the first day of the week shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; provided that in the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs barber shops may be kept open until one o'clock of the afternoon of Sunday.

The Penal Code provides (§ 263) that all labor on Sunday is prohibited, excepting the works of necessity or charity.

These works are then defined as including "whatever is needful during the day for the good order, health, or comfort of the community." The legislature by permitting barber shops to remain open for a portion of the first day of the week in two localities of the state necessarily proceeded upon the theory that the business of the barber is a work of necessity contributing to the comfort of the community.

I think it clearly within the power of the legislature, in order to regulate the observance of the Sabbath, to control the hours during which a barber shop may be kept open on the first day of the week, even if the comfort of the community may be to some extent interfered with in so doing.

This principle is recognized by the Penal Code (§ 267), which prohibits the public sale of any property upon Sunday, but allows articles of food to be sold and supplied before ten o'clock in the morning and certain articles of personal property to be sold during the entire day.

If, then, the business of the barber is a work of necessity contributing to the comfort of the community, can it be a reasonable exercise of the police power to arbitrarily extend the comfort of a Sunday morning shave to the inhabitants of the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs and deny it to the rest of the state, including great cities like Brooklyn and Buffalo?

I think the act under consideration is vicious class legislation and in direct violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state "shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The act is, in my judgment, a specimen of grotesque and absurd legislation resting upon no principle of public policy and utterly indefensible under any reasonable or proper exercise of the police power.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the 14th Amendment does not impair the police power of a state (Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923), and it has further decided that it does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed, or by the territory within which it is operated. Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 71, 30 L. ed. 578, 580. There is, however, nothing in these adjudications which will sustain the act under consideration. In the exercise of the police power the legislature is vested with the amplest discretion, the precise limits of which cannot be accurately defined, but there is a point beyond which that discretion cannot be exercised.

The language of Judge Peckham in delivering the opinion of this court in People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 401, is apposite. The learned judge, referring to Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 638, said: "As is also said in the last case, it is generally for the legislature to determine what laws and regulations are needed to protect the public health and serve the public comfort and safety, and if its measures are calculated, intended, convenient or appropriate to accomplish such ends the exercise of its discretion is not the subject of judicial review. But those measures must have some relation to these ends. Courts must be able to see, upon a perusal of the enactment, that there is some fair, just, and reasonable connection between it and the ends above mentioned. Unless such relation exists the enactment cannot be upheld as an exercise of the police power."

Can it be said, after a perusal of the act in question, that its provisions are a reasonable and proper exercise of the police power?

I think not; it is an arbitrary, discriminating exercise of that power which ought not to be tolerated.

The good offices of the barber, being a work of necessity needful on Sunday for the comfort of the community, should be extended to all portions of the state alike.

It is true the legislature might allow the barber shops to remain open longer on Sunday in a great city than in a country village, but subject to reasonable regulation as to hours all barbers and their customers are entitled to the equal protection of the laws.

The claim that the work of the barber is one of necessity, needful during the early hours of Sunday for the comfort of the community, rests upon years of practical construction of the various laws regulating the observance of the Sabbath.

I think that chapter 823, Laws of 1895, is void as violating the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and for the further reason that it is not a proper exercise of the police power.

The judgment appealed from should be reversed.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Jacob MAHLER and Wife, Respts.,
v.

George BRUMDER, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The express refusal of a city to accept a plat with a certain strip designated thereon as a street, and the inclosure and use of one end of the strip as private property on which the owners are compelled to pay assessments for improvements on another street, preclude a finding that this portion was a public road or street.
2. A private party cannot maintain an action to enjoin the obstruction of a public road or street which is a cul de sac by a fence between his property and the end of the road merely because he purchased his premises with reference to a plat which indicated the existence of such road.
3. Special or peculiar damages differing, not merely in degree, but in kind, from those which are deemed common to all, must be suffered in order to give a private party a right of action to abate a public nuisance.
4. Equity cannot be successfully invoked to inflict injury or damage on the defendant without securing any substantial right or benefit to the plaintiff.

(March 10, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in favor of plaintiffs in an action to enjoin the obstruction of an alleged highway. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Howard & Mallory, for appellant:

In order to create a dedication at common law there must be an intention to dedicate on the part of the owner, and actual acceptance or user by the public for such a length of time that the public accommodation and private rights would be materially affected by a denial or interruption of the enjoyment.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 628; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 153, 60 Am. Dec. 407; Connehan v. Ford, 9 Wis. 240; Tupper v. Huson, 46 Wis. 646; Trerice v. Bartau, 54 Wis. 99; Eastland v. Fogo, 66 Wis. 135; State, Lightfoot v. McCabe, 74 Wis. 481; Cunningham v. Hendricks, 89 Wis. 632; Benson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (Minn.) 64 N. W. 393; Holdane v. Cold Spring, 21 N. Y. 474; Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Co. v. Bachman, 66 N. Y. 261.

This intent to dedicate must be made to appear clearly, and if the intent to dedicate is absent there is no valid indication.

Cunningham v. Hendricks, supra.

It does not appear that Van Valkenburgh intended to dedicate this east 100 feet absolutely and irrevocably to the public use, or that he intended to dedicate it at all.

NOTE.—On the general question of damages to an abutting owner by closing a highway, see note to People, Hart, v. Marin County (Cal.) 26 L. R. A. 656; also the later case of Chicago v. Burecky (Ill.) 29 L. R. A. 568.

31 L. R. A.

Where one who has offered to dedicate land for a public street conveys such land before his offer is accepted the conveyance operates as a revocation of the offer.

Chicago v. Drezel, 141 Ill. 89; Field v. Manchester, 32 Mich. 279; White v. Smith, 37 Mich. 291; Cass County Supers. v. Banks, 44 Mich. 467; Buskirk v. Strickland, 47 Mich. 389.

Where it is sought to establish a dedication by a sale of lots with reference to a map or plat the extent of such dedication is to be determined from the consideration of the whole map, the object being to ascertain the intention.

Hogue v. Albina, 20 Or. 182, 10 L. R. A. 673; Pearce v. McClenaghan, 5 Rich. L. 178, 55 Am. Dec. 710.

This land could not become a public street until it was properly accepted. It was a mere private easement. It could only become a street by an acceptance of a plat thereof by the city of Milwaukee.

Fischer v. Laack, 76 Wis. 313; Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Co. v. Bachman, 66 N. Y. 261; Oliver v. Pitman, 98 Mass. 46; Regan v. Boston Gaslight Co. 137 Mass. 37; Dorman v. Bates Mfg. Co. 82 Me. 438; Holdane v. Cold Spring, 21 N. Y. 479.

One claiming the benefit of an estoppel must rest his claim on his own title deed, and not on the deed of another through which he has not derived his title.

Dorman v. Bates Mfg. Co., and Oliver v. Pitman, supra; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 23.

There is nothing in plaintiffs' deed, or in that of their grantors, to show that Washington Place extends or ever did extend 300 feet east, and they cannot rely on deeds to which they are strangers to show the extent of Washington Place.

Bell v. Todd, 51 Mich. 21; Fox v. Union Sugar Refinery, 109 Mass. 292.

The plaintiffs cannot maintain their action unless they can show some special injury peculiar to themselves.

Carpenter v. Mann, 17 Wis. 156; Williams v. Smith, 22 Wis. 597; Greene v. Nunnemacher, 36 Wis. 50; Larson v. Furlong, 50 Wis. 687; Clark v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 70 Wis. 593; Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 8 L. R. A. 808; Zettel v. West Bend, 79 Wis. 316; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 83 Wis. 583, 18 L. R. A. 553; Wood, Nuisances, 2d ed. § 740, p. 810; Kirch v. Davies, 55 Wis. 299.

Messrs. Miller, Noyes, Miller, & Wahl, for respondents:

Dedication or no dedication is a question of fact.

Eastland v. Fogo, 58 Wis. 274, 66 Wis. 133; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 153, 60 Am. Dec. 407.

If the facts of dedication are undisputed the question is one of law for the court.

State v. Schwein, 65 Wis. 207; Yates v. Judd, 18 Wis. 126; Sanborn v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 16 Wis. 20.

Laying out and platting lands and selling lots in reference to such plat show a dedication.

Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 21 Wis. 603; Fischer v. Laack, 76 Wis. 330.

No action by the municipality is necessary to constitute a valid acceptance of the dedication.

Buchanan v. Curtis, 25 Wis. 99, 3 Am. Rep. 23.

Here is a public highway upon which plaintiffs lived, and which plaintiffs were entitled to use. It is of more importance to them than to the public generally. People who dwell upon other streets might not care whether Washington Place was a street or whether a nuisance was maintained thereon; but to these plaintiffs it was of importance.

Pettibone v. Hamilton, 40 Wis. 415; Erens v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 597.

Where a highway is unlawfully obstructed any person who wishes to use the street may remove the obstruction and abate the nuisance.

Jones v. Davis, 35 Wis. 377; Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 266; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 492; Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray, 89.

The statute covers cases like the one at bar. Rev. Stat. § 8189.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Grand avenue runs east and west in Milwaukee. The next street north of it is Wells street, which is parallel with Grand avenue, and 486 feet from it. Washington avenue (now Twenty-Seventh street) runs north and south, and crosses those two streets at right angles. In 1883, Van Valkenburgh became the owner of all the land between Wells street and Grand avenue, from Washington avenue east for a distance of a little more than 385 feet. The land was then open and unplatted. Thereupon Van Valkenburgh platted the same with lots fronting on Grand avenue, Washington avenue, and Wells street. There was also designated upon the plat a street or roadway 46 feet wide, and running east from east line of Washington avenue 300 feet, and named thereon "Washington Place." The north line of "Washington Place," so called, was and is 210 feet south of the south line of Wells street, and the south line of Washington Place was and is 230 feet north of the north line of Grand avenue, and several lots fronted on Washington Place from either side of it, but that plat did not mention nor refer to Twenty-Sixth street, which was not then in existence, and was not established nor laid out until several years afterwards. Van Valkenburgh thereupon submitted such plat to the common council of the city for acceptance, but they declined to accept of the same, and notified him to that effect. Nevertheless, he graded and graveled the street, and put in gutters and wooden curbing and plank sidewalks, and sold lots fronting thereon. April 12, 1894, the plaintiff, Mrs. Mahler, acquired title to one of the lots fronting thereon through several mesne conveyances, the first being a deed from Van Valkenburgh to Murray, June 21, 1884, each and all of which deeds described the land as commencing at a point on the north line of Washington Place, 130 feet east of the east line of Washington avenue; thence east, along said north line of Washington Place, 40 feet to a point; thence north 105 feet, to a point; thence west 40 feet, to a point; thence south 105 feet, to place of beginning. November 18, 1889, the city resolved to open Twenty-Sixth street, and for that purpose Van Valkenburgh conveyed that portion thereof east of the defendant's premises, hereinafter described, to the city July 12, 1892. Some time prior to the acts complained of, the defendant acquired title derived from Van Valkenburgh, in 1884 and 1886, through several mesne conveyances, to two lots, each fronting on the east 100 feet of Washington place, and each running back therefrom 105 feet, and also acquired title, derived from Van Valkenburgh, May 23, 1887, through several mesne conveyances, to the east one third of Washington Place, being that portion of Washington Place between the two lots he acquired as above mentioned, and also a strip 3 feet wide and 256 feet long between said lots and Washington Place on the west, and Twenty-Sixth street on the east. The plaintiffs concede that, before they obtained their lot in question there was a wire fence entirely across Washington Place, 200 feet east of Washington avenue, and parallel with that avenue, being 30 feet east of the east line of the plaintiffs' lot; that, after they acquired such title as indicated, they tore down that wire fence; that some time afterwards the defendant caused a second fence to be built on the same line where the wire fence had stood, and which last fence was constructed of heavy plank cedar posts and clapboards, which last fence the plaintiffs cut down and removed; that two weeks afterwards the defendant rebuilt the same upon the same line, and of similar materials; that thereupon, and on November 5, 1894, the plaintiffs commenced this action in equity to abate and remove said fence as a nuisance, and to enjoin and restrain the defendant from constructing and maintaining such fence. The defendant answered by way of admissions, denials, and counter allegations to some of the facts as stated and others to be stated. At the close of the trial, the court found, in effect, some of the facts stated, and also, in effect, that Washington Place, and the whole thereof, was a public road or highway, and that such fence was a nuisance therein and ordered judgment abating the same, and perpetually enjoining the defendant from constructing or maintaining such fence. From the judgment entered thereon accordingly, the defendant brings this appeal.

81 L. R. A.

1. The finding of the trial court to the effect that that portion of Washington Place east of the fence mentioned had been a public road or highway ever since 1883 is contrary to the undisputed evidence. As indicated, the city, in 1883, expressly refused to accept the plat with Washington Place designated, thereon as a street. There is no claim or pretense that Washington Place, so designated on that plat, extended east to any street or roadway, public or private. On the contrary, it is undisputed that its east end, as designated on that plat, terminated on lands then owned wholly by Van Valkenburgh, and that his land extended still further east for a distance of more than 85 feet. So it is undisputed that, for nearly seven years prior to the time when the plaintiffs obtained their lot, Van Valkenburgh and his grantees of the land abutting upon that portion of Washington Place east of the line where the fence is so located, by conveyances and otherwise, treated that portion of Washington Place as private property, to which neither the public nor any other parties or persons had any right, title, or interest; and the city not only refused to accept the same as a public road or street, as mentioned, but compelled the owners thereof to pay assessments thereon as private property, for opening, grading, and improving Twenty-Sixth street; and there is no evidence that that portion of Washington Place east of the line of that fence was used by the public during any portion of such seven years as a road or street, public or private. The law is well settled that, to constitute a public street or highway by dedication, there must not only be an absolute dedication,—a setting apart and a surrender to the public use of the land by the proprietors,—but there must be an acceptance and a formal opening thereof by the proper authorities, or a user which is equivalent to such acceptance and opening. Holdane v. Cold Spring, 21 N. Y. 474; Fonda v. Borat, 2 Keyes, 48; Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Co. v. Bachman, 66 N. Y. 261; People v. Underhill, 144 N. Y. 324; Connehan v. Ford, 9 Wis. 240; Hanson v. Taylor, 23 Wis. 547; Eastland v. Fogo, 66 Wis. 138. Obviously, there was no such acceptance or user; and hence it was competent for the proprietors and abutting owners to revoke the same, and they did revoke the same. Holdane v. Cold Spring, supra. We must hold that the portion of Washington Place upon which such fence was located never became a public road or street, nor did any portion thereof east of the line where that fence was located become such public road or street.

2. As to the portion of Washington Place west of the line of that fence, it may be otherwise. It appears that in 1891 and 1892 Van Valkenburgh obtained certain adjudications to the effect that certain tax certificates on that portion of Washington Place west of the fence were void, for the reason that the same was a public road or street, and hence exempt from taxation. Since that portion of Washington Place opened directly upon the public avenue at its west end, it may be that, under the authorities, it was not precluded from being a public street or road by the mere fact that it was and is a cul de sac. Moll v. Benckler, 30 Wis. 584; Schatz v. Pfeil, 56 Wis. 429; Moore v. Roberts, 64 Wis. 538; People, Williams, v. Kingman, 24 N. Y. 559; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 1, and cases there cited. Assuming that that portion of Washington Place west of the fence is a public road or street, yet that would not make the fence a public nuisance; and, even if it were, still that would not give the plaintiffs, as private citizens, a right of action to abate the same, for it is well settled that, to entitle a private party to maintain an action to abate a public nuisance, it must appear that he has suffered some special or peculiar damages, differing, not merely in degree, but in kind, from that which is deemed common to all. Zettel v. West Bend, 79 Wis. 316; Hay v. Weber, 79 Wis. 591; Evans v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 603. Such being the law, it is obvious that the right of the plaintiffs to maintain this private action is no 31 L. R. A.

greater nor less by reason of Washington Place in front of their lot being regarded as a public road or street, or merely as a private road or street. In other words, the only ground upon which the plaintiffs can expect to maintain this action, if at all, is that, as owners of the lot mentioned, the fence is as to them a private nuisance.

3. It must be admitted that the only rights the plaintiffs have in or upon Washington Place, differing in kind from the rights of the public, they acquired under and by virtue of the deed of the lot which they received April 12, 1894. That deed, like the deed from Van Valkenburgh to Murray of the same lot, ten years before, and all intervening deeds, described the lot by metes and bounds, and located the south line of the lot as running along and upon the north line of Washington Place; and yet, by reason of Van Valkenburgh's plat, recognized in the deeds, it may be, and for the purposes of this case we assume, what is most favorable to the plaintiffs, that, under the adjudication of this court, their lot extends to the centre of Washington Place. Pettibone v. Hamilton, 40 Wis. 402; Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 599, 56 Am. Rep. 642. Such rights of the plaintiffs, having been acquired by the deed, are necessarily measured by the language of the deed. Goddard, Easem. (Bennett's ed.) 314; Constock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. 163; Miller v. Washburn, 117 Mass. 371; Fischer v. Lauck, 76 Wis. 313. Since the deed recognizes the plat, it must be construed with reference to the plat. Ibid. In the case at bar there was no covenant or agreement in any of such deeds, or at all, that Washington Place or any part of it should remain open for the use or benefit of such grantees, or at all; and our statute, unlike the law in some states, expressly declares that "no covenant shall be implied in any conveyance of real estate, whether such conveyance contain special covenants or not." Rev. Stat. § 2204; Ferguson v. Mason, 60 Wis. 383. The rights of the plaintiffs are based upon the grant with reference to such plat, and nothing more. "When an incorporeal right of such a nature is created by grant," says a learned author, "the question whether it is or is not appurtenant to land depends upon the nature of the right and the intention of the parties creating it. In order to make such a right appurtenant to land, the right must be in its nature an appropriate and necessary adjunct of the land conveyed, having in view the purposes for which the land is conveyed; and the conveyance must show that the parties intended the right to be made appurtenant to the land conveyed." Washb. Easem. 4th ed. pp. 8, 9. Nothing will pass as an easement to a dominant estate, although it may have been used with it, unless a right thus to use it has become consummate, and thereby made appurtenant to the granted premises, or is expressly mentioned in the deed conveying the same as an easement intended to be conveyed thereby." Id. p. 41. Another learned author is equally explicit: "A right of way appurtenant to a dominant tenement can be used only for the purpose of passing to or from that tenement. It cannot be used even by the dominant owner for any purpose unconnected with enjoyment of the domi-nent tenement, neither can it be assigned by him to a stranger, and so be made a right in gross, nor can he license a stranger to use the way when he is not coming to or from the dominant tenement." Goddard's Easem. p. 209; Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164; Thorpe v. Brumfitt, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 650. A right not connected with the enjoyment or use of a parcel of land granted cannot be annexed as an incident to that land, so as to become appurtenant to it. Linthicum v. Ray, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 241, 19 L. ed. 657. "A thing is appurtenant to something else," said Field, J., "only when it stands in the relation of an incident to a principal, and is necessarily connected with the use and enjoyment of the latter." Humphreys v. McKissack, 140 U. S. 313, 314, 35 L. ed. 476. Upon the principles stated, the plaintiffs, under and by virtue of their deed of the lot mentioned, and as incident to the grant, acquired the right to use Washington Place so far as the same was appurtenant to their lot, and to freely pass over the same to and from their lot and the public avenue on the west; and this right included the right of all persons having occasion to go to or from the premises of the plaintiffs. This is equally true of those owning lots abutting upon Washington Place east of the plaintiffs' lot, as well as such abutting owners south and west of their lot. But, as indicated, such rights of the plaintiffs did not, under the facts and circumstances stated, give them any right to remove the fence mentioned, nor to break into the defendant's premises on land not appurtenant to their lot. Had Washington Place, as originally platted, connected with any public street or roadway on the east, a different question would have been presented. The views expressed are abundantly supported by authority as well as reason. Badeau v. Mead, 14 Barb. 328; Cor v. James, 59 Barb. 144, 157, Affirmed 45 N. Y. 557; Spir v. Utrecht, 121 N. Y. 429; People v. Underhill, 144 N. Y. 316; Langmaid v. Higgins, 129 Mass. 353; Pearson v. Allen, 151 Mass. 79.

4. Besides, the case is not one calling for equitable interference. Equity should not be successfully invoked merely to inflict injury or damage to the defendant, without securing any substantial right or benefit to the plaintiff.

Atty. Gen. v. Nichol, 16 Ves. Jr. 338; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Ward, 67 U. S. 2 Black. 485, 17 L. ed. 311.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with direction to dismiss the complaint.

Winslow, J., dissenting:

There are a few well-established legal principles which seem to me to call for affirmance of this judgment. These principles I shall briefly state: (1) It is now well settled that a cul de sac may be a highway. Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 1, and authorities cited; Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460; Schatz v. Pfeil, 56 Wis. 429. (2) When a land owner surveys and plats land and sells lots with reference to such plat (as here), there results an immediate and irrevocable dedication of the streets marked on the plat which is binding on both vendor and vendee. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 640, and authorities cited in note 2; Donohoo v. Murray, 62 Wis. 100, citing and approving Bartlett v. Bangor, supra. (3) The purchaser's right extends to have all the streets remain open which were marked on the plat, and he may enforce such right: 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. supra; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 112, and cases cited in note. (4) This right is based upon the principle of estoppel, and not upon the doctrine of grant or covenant. The grantor is estopped from denying the existence of the indicated ways, because it is presumed that the indicated ways add value to the lots, and that the purchaser paid such added value. Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 113. (5) This right extends equally to a way which is a cul de sac. The purchaser has the right to have the entire cul de sac kept open, and not merely that part which is necessary for his use in reaching some other highway. Thomas v. Poole, 7 Gray, 83; Rodgers v. Parker, 9 Gray, 445; For v. Union Sugar Refinery, 109 Mass. 292. (6) The enjoyment of such a right will be protected by injunction. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. §§ 926, 927. Believing these propositions to be unassailable, I cannot agree with the conclusion reached on this case.

Marshall, J.: I concur in the foregoing dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Winslow.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

Lucian PICKERING

v.

Lydia A. MOORE.

(.....N. H.)

1. A tenant has a right to manure produced on the leased premises by stock in excess of that maintainable by the products of the premises from fodder produced elsewhere.

2. A tenant will not lose his property in manure owned by him by intermixing it without fraudulent intent with that owned by the landlord of the same quality and value without the latter's consent.

3. One of two tenants in common of a

NOTE.—Rights of landlord and tenant in respect to manure on leased premises.

In England there are few decisions upon this general question,—not enough to determine clearly what the common law is. Most of the cases in which the question has arisen there have been governed by an express covenant in the lease or by custom in the particular locality where the case arose. The few cases in which the question was free from controlling circumstances seem to conflict and are too meagerly reported to make it certain that they were not in fact governed by special circumstances.

R. A.

In Webb v. Plummer, 2 Barn. & Ald. 746, the lease expressly prohibited the carrying away of manure.

quantity of manure may rightfully take away his share without the intervention of a court to make the division.

(March 16, 1894.)

ACTION to recover damages for the alleged wrongful conversion by defendant of certain manure alleged to have been the property of plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff.

On March 31, 1883, defendant leased for a term of three years a farm to plaintiff who covenanted to consume and convert into manure to be used and left on the farm all hay and fodder raised on the farm. Plaintiff held over and continued to occupy until May 30, 1892. During the last year of his occupancy he procured large quantities of fodder not raised on the farm which upon being converted into manure, was mixed in a single heap with that produced from fodder raised on the place. Defendant prevented him from taking it away.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Leach & Stevens for plaintiff.

Messrs. Albin & Martin for defendant.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff held the farm after the expiration of three years as tenant from

In Smith v. Chance, 2 Barn. & Ald. 754, the lease required the consumption of the hay on the premises or for every load of hay removed there should be a return of two loads of manure.

In Richards v. Bluck, 6 C. B. 437, 6 Dowl. & L. 325, 12 Jur. 963, the lease contained the covenant that the tenant should during the term consume and convert into manure and spread on the premises all the green crops grown thereon, or in case he sold any part of them he should for every ton sold bring back and spread on the premises a ton of good stable manure.

In Beaty v. Gibbons, 16 East, 116, the covenant provided that the tenant should spread the manure on the farm and should sell and dispose of such as remained upon the premises at the end of the term to the succeeding tenant, and the court held that the covenant prohibited him from taking the manure off from the premises but that it was his property, and that if the succeeding tenant used it before paying for it he was guilty of trespass.

Under a covenant to use the land in a husband-like manner the tenant ought to use on the land all the manure made there, but he may carry away corn and straw not used up at the end of the term and is not bound to return the manure made from it. Watson v. Welch, 1 Esp. N. P. 131 (279), 26 Vin. Abr. 488.

In Leigh v. Lillie, 6 Hurlst. & N. 165, 30 L. J. Exch. 25, the lease provided that the tenant should not carry away any manure under the increased rent of £10 for every ton carried away.

A bond conditioned that the tenant would not remove any of the manure made on the farm is broken by his permitting a third person to remove manure made by cattle housed on the farm but belonging to such third person and fed with fodder brought upon the farm by him. Hindle v. Pollett, 6 Mees. & W. 529.

In Clarke v. Roystone, 13 Mees. & W. 752, it appeared that the custom was for the tenant to pay for the value of the manure upon going in, and to receive pay for the value of that left on going out; and it was held that an agreement to leave the manure upon the land upon going out excluded the custom and removed the liability to pay upon going in.

A covenant to expend the manure on the farm will prevent the removal of any manure which exists at the expiration of the term, but not that which is made subsequently while the tenant is holding over. Elliott v. Elliott, 20 Ont. Rep. 134.

In Massey v. Goodall, 17 Q. B. 310, 20 L. J. Q. B. 526, 15 Jur. 991, the covenant was that the tenant should not sell any manure produced on the farm without the written consent of the landlord.

In Shier v. Shier, 22 U. C. C. P. 142, there was a covenant in the lease regulating the rights of the parties as to the manure.

In Pulteney v. Shelton, 5 Ves. Jr. 147, an injunction was granted to restrain the tenant from removing manure and other products of the farm.

31 L. R. A.

And in Onslow v. —, 16 Ves. Jr. 172, an injunction was allowed against taking away manure.

But in Hilgson v. Mortimer, 6 Car. & P. 616, it seems to be conceded that the tenant has a right to carry away manure made during the term, since the action was for taking away a portion of the earth on which the manure rested.

If the lease provides that the manure shall be left on the land to be used by the landlord or the succeeding tenant it excludes the operation of a custom which required the tenant to leave the manure but entitled him to be paid for it. Roberts v. Barker, Car. & M. 808, 3 Tyrw. 945.

In New Brunswick it is not contrary to the course of good husbandry to remove manure from the farm; and in the absence of any custom or special agreement to the contrary the outgoing tenant has a right to the manure lying in heaps in the barnyard, and may take it away as a personal chattel at the end of the term. Foshay v. Barnes, 12 N. B. 450.

The mere relation of landlord and tenant is not sufficient to support an action for failure to expend a certain quantity of manure on the farm each year. Brown v. Crump, 1 Marsh. 567.

But the relation of landlord and tenant is sufficient to support an undertaking to cultivate the farm in a good and husband-like manner and not to carry away any of the manure made on the premises. Powley v. Walker, 5 T. R. 373.

American authorities.

In this country the rule is quite general that in the absence of a special agreement the manure must be left upon the premises and cannot be removed therefrom in all cases of agricultural leases.

Manure upon a farm used either for cultivation or for a dairy farm, and made partly from the products of the farm and partly from feed purchased elsewhere, cannot be removed by the tenant off from the farm. Bonnell v. Allen, 53 Ind. 130.

An outgoing tenant in agriculture is not entitled to the manure made on the farm during his term, even though lying in heaps in the farmyard, and though it was made from his own fodder and by his own cattle. Lassell v. Reed, 6 Me. 222.

In Chase v. Wingate, 68 Me. 204, 28 Am. Rep. 36, the court in considering the right of a mortgagor to take away manure made on the mortgaged premises says that as between landlord and tenant manure made in the course of husbandry on the farm is so attached to and connected with the realty that in the absence of an express stipulation or understanding to the contrary it passes as appurtenant to it. This doctrine rests upon the ground that it is for the interest of good husbandry and the encouragement of agriculture that manure produced on the farm should be consumed upon it, and that the land should not be impoverished by the removal therefrom of the material necessary for its enrichment and the growth of the succeeding crop.

year to year, upon the terms expressed in the lease. Russell v. Fabyan, 34 N. H. 218, 223; Conway v. Starkweather, 1 Denio, 118.

Manure made upon a farm by the consumption of its products in the ordinary course of husbandry is a part of the realty. It cannot be sold or carried away by a tenant without the landlord's consent. Saunders v. Twiss, 26 N. H. 345, 349; Perry v. Carr, 44 N. H. 118, 120; Hill v. De Rochemont, 48 N. H. 87, 88. The doctrine "was established for the benefit of agriculture. It found its origin in the fact that it is essential to the successful cultivation of a farm that the manure, produced from the droppings of cattle and swine fed upon the products of the farm, and composted with earth and vegetable matter taken from the land, should be used to supply the drain made upon the soil in the production of crops, which otherwise would become impoverished and barren; and in the fact that the manure so produced is generally regarded by farmers in this country as a part of the realty, and has been so treated by landlords and tenants from time immemorial."

In Gallagher v. Shipley, 24 Md. 418, 87 Am. Dec. 611, it is stated that by the general current of American as well as English authorities the tenant under a farming lease has no right to remove from the premises any manure made either wholly or in part from the products of the farm. But if the land is used for the purpose of herding cattle, and is not cultivated, there is nothing to prevent the removal of the manure produced in the course of that business.

Manure made on a farm occupied by a tenant in the ordinary course of husbandry is by usage, practice, and the general understanding so attached to and connected with the realty that in the absence of any express stipulation on the subject an outgoing tenant has no right to remove it or sell it to be removed. Daniels v. Pond, 21 Pick. 367, 32 Am. Dec. 269.

The rule of Daniels v. Pond is recognized in Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619, which was a case involving the duty of an administrator in reference to manure on the premises of his intestate.

Manure passes with the land in the absence of express agreement to the contrary. Strong v. Doyle, 110 Mass. 92.

The manure belongs to the owner of the farm. Lewis v. Lyman, 22 Pick. 437.

The lease may provide that the manure shall be left on the premises. Brown v. Magorty, 156 Mass. 209.

The manure belongs to the farm as an incident necessary for its improvement and cultivation. Plumer v. Plumer, 30 N. H. 558.

The removal of manure by a tenant is waste. Barrington v. Justice, 4 Pa. L. J. 289.

The sale and removal by a tenant at will of manure manufactured on the premises in due course of husbandry is waste. Perry v. Carr, 44 N. H. 118.

Under a lease providing that for every ton of hay not consumed on the farm the tenant should bring on a certain quantity of manure and should leave at the end of the term an amount equal to what he found there when he took possession, he cannot remove any of the manure made during the term, although he leaves the requisite amount at the end and although it is made from eel grass gathered for that purpose on the farm. Hill v. De Rochemont, 48 N. H. 87.

It is common to insert a covenant in the lease of a farm to leave the manure of the last year upon it. Middlebrook v. Corwin, 15 Wend. 169.

Where a farm is let for agricultural purposes, in the absence of stipulation or custom, the manure does not belong to the tenant but to the farm. Ibid.

Wheat straw is not embraced in the term "manure" so as to require its retention and use on the farm. Fobes v. Shattuck, 22 Barb. 567.

In case of the partition sale of a farm in possession of a tenant the purchaser of the barn and barnyard will get title to the manure lying therein, so that the tenant cannot afterwards take it and spread it on land bought by another person. Elting v. Palen, 60 Hun, 306, 31 L. R. A.

When a farm is let for agricultural purposes the outgoing tenant has no right to remove manure made on the farm during his term. The fact that the farm is used as a milk farm and not strictly for agricultural purposes in the general sense of that term does not vary the rule. Wain v. Connor, 5 Clark (Pa.) 164.

The mere fact that the tenant buys some hay and some grain to feed to the stock does not give him any title to the manure. Lewis v. Jones, 17 Pa. 382, 55 Am. Dec. 550. The court says it is implied from the letting of a farm for agricultural purposes that the tenant will cultivate the farm according to the rules of good husbandry. A course of husbandry that would permit the tenant to take away the manure would be injurious to the public interest and ruinous alike to landlord and tenants.

A tenant cannot remove the manure as against one who purchases the farm from his landlord. Wetherbee v. Ellison, 19 Vt. 379.

Exceptions to the rule.

There may be circumstances under which the manure does not belong to the lessor, and there is an occasional dissent from the rule which gives it to him generally.

A tenant who occupies a barn to keep his cattle in and feeds them from his own hay procured elsewhere will be entitled to the manure. Corey v. Bishop, 48 N. H. 146.

The landlord has no right to the manure if the produce from which it is obtained is not grown on the farm, or in case it is made in connection with a livery-stable business. Carroll v. Newton, 17 How. Pr. 189.

A lessor has no claim to manure made in buildings unconnected with agricultural property or out of the course of husbandry. Needham v. Allison, 24 N. H. 355.

An agreement between the parties may make the manure personal property, and it does not then become realty by being left upon the premises at the expiration of the term. Fletcher v. Herrick, 112 Mass. 382.

In Staples v. Emery, 7 Me. 201, the court in considering the right to take manure on execution against a tenant at will says that the rule which precludes the tenant from taking the manure after the end of the term or during its last year does not apply at earlier times during the term, and that the loss would fall on the tenant and not on the landlord if it was taken off from the farm, so that there is nothing to prevent its being done.

Manure made by an outgoing tenant may be removed by him in the absence of covenant or custom to the contrary provided it is done before he gives up possession of the farm. Smithwick v. Ellison, 2 Ired. L. 326, 38 Am. Dec. 697. In that case the court says that the contrary rule is held in some of the states as settled upon the ground of the usage and general understanding of the country, but that since no custom has been shown to exist in that state which would govern that case the question must be determined upon common-law principles.

H. P. F.

Haslem v. Lockwood, 37 Conn. 500, 505, 9 Am. Rep. 350. Whether a tenant, "where there is no positive agreement dispensing with the engagement to cultivate his farm in a husband-like manner, is bound to spend the hay and other like produce upon it as the means of preserving and continuing its capacity" (Perry v. Carr, and Hill v. De Rochemont, supra).—in other words, whether the express or implied obligation to cultivate the farm in a husband-like manner binds him as matter of law, to convert into manure all the fodder grown on the premises,—is a different, and possibly an open question. Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 261, 266, 267; Levis v. Lyman, 22 Pick. 437, 441, 445; Middlebrook v. Corwin, 15 Wend. 169, and cases cited; Brown v. Crump, 1 Marsh. 567; Legh v. Hewitt, 4 East, 154, 159; Moulton v. Robinson, 27 N. H. 550, 561; Cooley, Torts, 334, 343, 344. However that may be, no rule of good husbandry requires a tenant to buy hay or other fodder for consumption on the farm. If, in addition to the stock maintainable from its products, he keeps cattle for hire, and feeds them upon fodder procured by purchase, or raised by him on other lands, the landlord has no more legal or equitable interest in the manure so produced than he has in the fodder before it is consumed. It is not made in ordinary course of husbandry. It is produced "in a manner substantially like making it in a livery stable." Hill v. De Rochemont, 48 N. H. 87, 90; Corey v. Bishop, Id. 146, 148. It is immaterial whether the additional stock is kept for hire, or is the tenant's property. Needham v. Allison, 24 N. H. 355.

The plaintiff did not lose his property in the manure by intermixing it with the defendant's manure, of the same quality and value, without his consent. It is not claimed that the plaintiff mixed the manure with any fraudulent or wrongful intent. "The intentional and innocent intermixture of property of substantially the same quality and value does not change the ownership. And no one has a right to take the whole, but in so doing commits a trespass on the other owner. He should notify him to make a division, or take his own proportion at his peril, taking care to leave to the other owner as much as belonged to him." Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298, 306; Gilman v. Hill, 36 N. H. 311, 323; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557, 563, 75 Am. Dec. 233; Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494, 501, 502; Cheshire R. Co. v. Foster, 51 N. H. 490, 493. "Even if the commingling were malicious or fraudulent, a rule of law which would take from the wrongdoer the whole, when to restore to the other his proportion would do him full justice, would be a rule wholly out of harmony with the general rules of civil remedy, not only because it would award to one party a redress beyond his loss, but also because it would compel the other party to pay, not damages, but a penalty." Cooley, Torts, 53, 54.

Whether the parties were tenants in common of the manure is a question that need not be determined. Gardner v. Dutch, 9 Mass. 427, 430, 431; Ryder v. Hathaway, supra; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn. 418, 425; Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 330, 341, 75 Am. Dec. 334. Assuming that they were, the action may be maintained. A tenant in common has the same right to the use and enjoyment of the common property that he has to his sole property, except in so far as it is limited by the equal right of his cotenants. Where two have each an equal title to an indivisible chattel, "as of a horse, an ox, or a cowe," neither, without actual and exclusive possession of the chattel, can enjoy his moiety. Simultaneous enjoyment by each of his equal right is impossible. Hence neither can lawfully take it from the possession of the other. The one excluded from possession has no legal remedy, except to take it "when he can see his time." Co. Litt. § 323; Southworth v. Smith, 27 Conn. 355, 359, 71 Am. Dec. 72. A tenant in common of personal as well as real property has a right to partition, if partition is possible, and, if not, to a regulation of its use equivalent to partition, or to a sale. Co. Litt. 164, 165a; Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402, 411, 412; Morrill v. Morrill, 5 N. H. 184, 185; Crowell v. Woodbury, 52 N. H. 613. On partition he is entitled to no particular part of the property, but only to his due proportion in value and quality of the whole. When it consists of chattels differing in quality and value, an appraisal of the value and consideration of the qualities of the several chattels are essential to an assignment to each of his just share. In this case, as in that of a single indivisible chattel, if the parties cannot agree upon the use, sale, or division, judicial intervention is necessary. Until an adjudication of their rights, neither can assert a title in severalty to any portion of the property. When the common property is divisible, by weight, measure, or number, into portions identical in quality and value, as corn and various other articles, a different case is presented. There is no question of legal or equitable right. There is, and can be, no dispute that a court of law or equity can settle. Counting, weighing, and measuring are not judicial, but ministerial, functions. Equity could do no more than decree that each might take so many pounds, bushels, or yards, or so many of the articles in number, and enforce its decree by process,—in other words, enforce the conceded right. One may, in general, do without a decree what equity would decree that he might do. Neither law nor equity allows one, in the exercise of his own rights, to do an unnecessary and avoidable injury to another. One is entitled to the possession of the whole in those cases only where it is necessary to his enjoyment of his moiety. Here it is not necessary. There is no more difficulty in separating one portion from another than there is in selecting A's marked sheep from B's flock. Either may make the division. The law is not so unreasonable as to compel a resort to the courts in order to obtain a partition which either may make without expense, and without danger of injustice to his cotenant. Except in Daniels v. Bronen, 34 N. H. 454, 69 Am. Dec. 505, it has never been held, so far as observed, that a tenant in common is liable to his cotenant, in any form of proceeding, for taking from the latter's possession, and consuming or destroying, his just proportion, only, of the common property. The conveyance by a tenant in common of a part of the common land by metes and bounds may effect a partition, and will if it does no injustice to his cotenants,—if their just share can be assigned to them out of the remaining land. Holbrook v. Bowman, 62 N. H. 313, 321. No reason is perceived why a similar doctrine should not be applied in the case of a common tenancy of chattels. If A and B own in common 100 horses, and B sells 10 of them to C why should A be permitted to take them "when he can see his time," if he has possession of, and can have his full share assigned to him from, the remaining 90? However that may be, a tenant in common of goods divisible by tale or measure may, without the consent and against the will of his cotenant, rightfully take and appropriate to his sole use, sell, or destroy, so much of them as he pleases, not exceeding his share, and by so doing effect, pro tanto, a valid partition. To this extent, Daniels v. Brown, supra, is overruled. Haley v. Colcord, 59 N. H. 8, 47 Am. Rep. 176; Gage v. Gage, 66 N. H. 282, 288, 28 L. R. A. 829; Seldon v. Hickock, 2 Cal. 166; Lobbett v. Stowell, 51 N. Y. 70, and cases cited; Stall v. Wilbur, 77 N. Y. 158, 164; Cooley, Torts, 453; 6 Am. L. Rev. 455-459, and cases cited. The defendant by preventing the plaintiff from taking his part of the manure, exercised a dominion over it inconsistent with the plaintiff's rights. Evans v. Mason, 64 N. H. 98.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Wallace, J., did not sit. The others concurred.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Louis EICHENGREEN, Appt.,
v.
LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. False imprisonment of an innocent person on a charge of attempting to pass counterfeit money which is procured by a railroad detective while acting within the scope of his authority renders the railroad company liable in this particular matter although he exceeded his authority and acted contrary to his instructions respecting the caution to be exercised.
2. An express order of an unlawful arrest by an agent of a railroad company is not necessary to render the company liable if the arrest was procured by the agent acting within the scope of his employment.

(February 18, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Sumner County in his favor for a less sum than he demanded in an action to recover damages for false imprisonment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. F. Wilson, J. W. Blackmore, and G. W. Boddie, for appellant:

A corporation is responsible for the acts of its agents, done either in contractu or in delicto, in the business of their employment, just as an individual is liable.

Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 62 U. S. 21 How. 262, 16 L. ed. 73; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008; Orleans v. Platt, 99 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 404; Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 506, 14 L. R. A. 791; Harris v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 116.

NOTE.—For carriers' liability for false imprisonment of a passenger, see note to Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 791, also Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 14 L. R. A. 798; Palmer v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 16 L. R. A. 136; Central R. Co. v. Brewer (Md.) 27 L. R. A. 63; and Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (Kan.) 29 L. R. A. 465.
81 L. R. A.

Under this principle it may be liable for the fraud, for the assaults, and for false imprisonments done and effected by its agents.

Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 159 Pa. 248; Dexter & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146; Lynch v. Metropolitan Eler. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; Hutchinson v. Western & A. R. Co. 6 Heisk. 684; Wheelers v. Second Nat. Bank, 1 Baxt. 509, 25 Am. Rep. 783; Harris v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. supra; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101-117, 37 L. ed. 97-105.

The principal is liable to third parties for whatever the agent does and says, whether contract, representations, or admissions he makes; whatever negligence he is guilty of, and whatever wrongs he commits, provided he acts within the scope of his apparent authority, and provided a liability would attach to the principal if he was in the place of the agent.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 410, note 3; Town v. Tennessee Nat. Bank, 9 Heisk. 479; Planters' Ins. Co. v. Sorrels, 1 Baxt. 352, 25 Am. Rep. 780.

If an agent acting within the scope of his agency or apparent authority commit a wrong to the injury of a third party, the principal is liable, and in such case the principal is not relieved because the agent in the matter exceeded his authority.

Wachter v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 132 Pa. 438, 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 415, note 2; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKee, 99 Ind. 519, 50 Am. Rep. 102; Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra.

And if he employs means outside of his authority.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 804, note; Griswold v. Gebbie, 126 Pa. 353.

A master is liable for the acts of his servants performed in the course of his employment, although the master did not directly authorize the act, nor subsequently ratify it.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hanning, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 649, 21 L. ed. 220; Bay Shore R. Co. v. Harris, 67 Ala. 9; Memphis & O. River Packet Co. v. McCool, 83 Ind. 398, 43 Am. Rep. 71; Chicago, N. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Scurr, 59 Miss. 464, 43 Am.

Rep. 373; Johnson v. Central Vermont R. Co. 56 Vt. 707.

And where he acts wantonly or wilfully if within the scope or course of his employment.

Nashville v. Brown, 9 Heisk. 1, 24 Am. Rep. 289; Puryear v. Thompson, 5 Humph. 397; Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; Georgia R. Co. v. Newsome, 60 Ga. 492; Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. v. Boyce, 36 Kan. 350, 59 Am. Rep. 571.

If the wrongful acts of the agent result in the wrongful arrest of the party, the corporation is liable.

Fields, Priv. Corp. § 331; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597; Lynch v. Metropolitan Elec. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; Standish v. Narragansett S. S. Co. 111 Mass. 512, 15 Am. Rep. 66; Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 159 Pa. 248.

Whether the servant was acting in the course of his employment when he committed the wrongful or tortious act is a question of fact for the jury.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 809; Redding v. South Carolina R. Co. 3 S. C. N. S. 1, 16 Am. Rep. 681.

Any one who participates in a wrongful arrest, whether directly or by causing others to engage in it, by exciting, directing, consenting to, or encouraging, is liable therefor.

Johnson v. Tomkins, Baldw. C. C. 571; Clifton v. Grayson, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 412; Mullen v. Brown, 138 Mass. 114.

Especially if the arrest is without lawful warrant.

McGarrahan v. Lavers, 15 R. I. 302; Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 439, 54 Am. Dec. 250; Stoddard v. Bird, Kirby (Conn.) 65; Burlingham v. Wylee, 2 Root, 152; Stoyel v. Lawrence, 3 Day, 1; Cooper v. Johnson, 81 Mo. 483; Veneman v. Jones, 118 Ind. 41.

This plaintiff, if entitled to recover at all, was entitled to more than nominal damages as defined by the judge.

3 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 1077; Page v. Mitchell, 13 Mich. 63, 86 Am. Dec. 75; Duggan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 159 Pa. 248.

Messrs. J. J. Turner and Dismukes & Seay for appellee.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sued the defendant company in the circuit court of Sumner county to recover damages for an alleged false imprisonment. There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1. The plaintiff appealed, and has assigned errors.

The plaintiff, Eichengreen, was a drummer, representing a Philadelphia firm engaged in the manufacture of soaps. On reaching the town of Gallatin, Sunday evening, August 9, 1891, he was arrested by two policemen, as he stepped from the train of defendant company. The arrest was made in pursuance of a telegram, sent from Bowling Green, by one W. J. Stewart, who was in the employment of defendant in the capacity of a special agent or detective. The record discloses that the plaintiff, Eichengreen, had for several days been in Bowling Green, Ky., and desiring to go to

Gallatin, Tenn., he went to the railroad ticket office to purchase a ticket. In payment of his ticket he handed the agent a $5 bill, which the latter pronounced counterfeit. Eichengreen explained that he had received the bill from one of the banks in Bowling Green, and remarked to the agent, "You are off." He then handed the agent a $20 bill and received his change. Stewart, the special agent or detective of the company, claims that he was standing near, and overheard the conversation between the plaintiff and the ticket agent at Bowling Green, that the plaintiff was in company with one Newmark, and that plaintiff, Newmark, and himself all boarded the train at Bowling Green, going south. Stewart further stated that, on the train, the plaintiff and Newmark talked a good deal in a foreign language, that they exchanged coats, and that one of them asked him (Stewart) if there was not a train out of Gallatin that night about 10 o'clock. Stewart testified that these facts aroused his suspicions, and he came to the conclusion these men were crooks. He thereupon sent to the telegraph operator at Gallatin the following dispatch: "Tell your police authorities to meet me at the depot. A man on train with counterfeit money going to get off at your station. Tried to pass $5 of it at Bowling Green. [Signed] W. J. Stewart." As already stated, on the arrival of the train at Gallatin, Eichengreen and his companion, Newmark, were both arrested. It was claimed by plaintiff that they were pointed out by Stewart and the conductor of the train to the policemen who made the arrest. The prisoners were both taken to the city workhouse where Newmark was released upon assurances from Eichengreen that the former had nothing to do with the matter, and if anyone was guilty of attempting to pass counterfeit money, he was the man. Eichengreen, after much trouble, and possibly two hours' detention, was permitted to deposit his watch and money with the city marshal as security for his appearance at the police court the following morning. It appears that no warrant was sworn out against the defendant, and, there being no proof against him, he was, the next day, discharged. Thereupon the plaintiff commenced this suit against the company for damages for false imprisonment. On the trial, it was shown that the $5 bill Eichengreen attempted to pass at Bowling Green was counterfeit, but the latter testified that he had no knowledge of the counterfeit,—explaining that, while in Bowling Green, he had boarded with one McLure; that he (Eichengreen) drew a draft on his house in Philadelphia for $50, and McLure had it cashed for him at a bank in Bowling Green; that among the bills paid McLure by the bank, and turned over by the latter to the plaintiff, was the $5 bill in question. Stewart, the special agent or detective of the company, stated, on the trial, that he heard Eichengreen, the plaintiff, tell the ticket agent at Bowling Green, when the bill was refused, that he had gotten it from one of the banks at Bowling Green. It was insisted on behalf of the company that the arrest of plaintiff was not procured by Stewart or any employee of the company; but, if it was, such act was not within the apparent or real scope of the agent's authority, and the company is not liable. In respect of the first proposition, there was evidence tending to show that, on the arrival of the train at Gallatin, the conductor of the train pointed out the plaintiff to the policeman, who immediately arrested him. About this time, Stewart, the detective of the company, came up and said to the policeman: "Why have you not arrested the other one? There are two of them." And, pointing to Newmark, the policeman arrested him. It further appears that Stewart, after the arrest of these parties at the depot, Sunday evening, proceeded on his way to Nashville, and sent back the following telegram to the operator at Gallatin, viz.: "Let me know what the officers found on those fellows. They tried to pass $20 at Louisville yesterday. They are good stock if the officers work it. They intended to work the town to-night and get out on first train. Stewart." The record shows that Stewart also returned to Gallatin the next morning to learn, as he claims, whether any counterfeit money had been found on the prisoners. There was other evidence tending to show Stewart's complicity in the arrest of the plaintiff. On the subject of Stewart's authority to make arrests, it was shown on the trial that he was the chief of special agents or detectives employed by the company. These detectives were employed for the purpose of protecting the property of the company, and of ferreting out and prosecuting parties guilty of crimes against the company. Stewart, it seems, had general instructions from the officers of the company not to make arrests without first consulting the local attorneys of the road. It was shown, however, that he was authorized to make arrests when the proof against the party was clear, and there was not time to consult local counsel, lest the criminal might escape. The plaintiff, who was following the business of a drummer, had visited Gallatin on previous occasions, and was, as already stated, well known to some of the merchants of that city, and by them and others proved an excellent character on the trial below. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1. The result of the verdict is that the plaintiff isonerated with the payment of a heavy bill of costs, since, by the terms of our statute, the plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment recovers no more costs than damages, unless his recovery exceeds the sum of $5. This verdict practically absolves the company from all liability, and upon this basis the assignments of error will be considered.

The first assignment is that the court erred in refusing plaintiff's fourth request, viz.: "If you find, from the proof, that the plaintiff was illegally and wrongfully arrested in Gallatin, August 9, 1891, and that his said arrest was caused or procured by the agents of the company while acting within the scope of their authority, either express or implied, then the company would be responsible, although the said agents, in procuring or causing his wrongful arrest, were exceeding their authority, or acting in the matter contrary to instructions." We think this assignment well taken, and that the instruction asked should have been given, especially for the purpose of correcting an affirmative error on this subject in the general charge. The trial judge had instructed the jury that, if Stewart was not acting in the capacity of a detective for the company, the defendant would not be liable under any circumstances. He then continues: "But, if you find he was so acting, you will next proceed to inquire if he was acting within the scope of the authority conferred upon him by the company, because, if he was acting as such detective of the company, if he at the time was exceeding his authority, then he would be liable, and not the company." This instruction was erroneous, for the law is that, if the agent is acting within the scope of his employment, the master is liable although the particular act may have been in excess of his authority, and directly contrary to instructions. Says Mr. Wood, in his work on Master and Servant (§ 307), viz.: "It is not necessary, in order to fix the master's liability, that the servant should, at the time of the injury, have been acting under the master's orders or directions, or that the master should know that the servant was to do the particular act that produced the injury in question. It is enough if the act was within the scope of his employment, and if so, the master is liable, even though the servant acted wilfully, and in direct violation of his orders. A master cannot screen himself from liability for an injury committed by his servant within the line of his employment, by setting up private instructions or orders given by him, and their violation by the servant. By putting the servant in his place, he becomes responsible for all his acts within the line of his employment, even though they are wilful and directly antagonistical to his order. . . . The master can never escape liability for an abuse of authority by the servant; therefore, the question always is, whether there was any authority, express or implied, on the part of the servant to do the act." See also Id. § 309. Again, the same author, at § 299, says: "The question is not whether the particular act was authorized, but whether the act done grew out of the exercise of an authority which the master had conferred upon the servant. In other words whether it is an incident to the authority granted, and done in the line of the servant's duty." The author then illustrates the principle with a case bearing some analogy to the case at bar. "Thus," says the author, "it would be absurd to hold that a person who has employed a detective to discover and arrest persons committing certain depredations upon his property, could only be chargeable for arrests legally made by him, upon the ground that the employer must be presumed to have only employed him to act in a legal manner and upon legal grounds. Having employed the detective to make arrests at all, it intrusts him to make any arrest in the line of his duty which he deems advisable, and if he makes an illegal or improper arrest the employer is responsible therefor." Thus, in the Indiana case of Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKee, 99 Ind. 519, 50 Am. Rep. 102, the railroad company employed a detective to detect, arrest, and prosecute persons who unlawfully obstructed its railway; and, in the performance of his duties, he, without legal authority, arrested the plaintiff, who was an innocent person. It was held the company was liable for the false imprisonment of the plaintiff by the detective. Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; Williams v. Planters' Ins. Co. 57 Miss. 759, 34 Am. Rep. 494; Goff v. Great Northern R. Co. 30 L. J. Q. B. 148; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 415, note 2; Cantrell v. Cobwell, 3 Head, 471; Byram v. McGuire, Id. 530; Deihl v. Ottenville, 14 Lea, 191.

The record discloses that Stewart, the special agent or detective of defendant company, was employed to look after any irregularities that he saw on the line of the road or divisions, investigate cases of robbery, obstructions on the track, and crimes against the company; that, when a depredation of any character had been committed, it was in the line of his duty to investigate it thoroughly, get all the information he could about it in his own way, and then go to the company's attorney, and take advice in respect of the proper course to pursue. But there was also evidence tending to show that, if the detective caught parties in the act of breaking into a depot, or breaking into a car, or placing obstructions on the track, or doing any kindred act, when there was not time to consult anybody, and the party might escape, then he would have a right to make an arrest. So it is obvious, from this evidence, that this detective was especially charged with the apprehension and prosecution of parties committing offenses against the company: and while, under general instructions, it was the duty of the agent to consult the local attorney before making an arrest, it is shown that, in certain emergencies, the authority of the agent to make an arrest without such consultation was recognized. The attempt to pass a counterfeit bill upon the ticket agent was certainly an offense against the company, and, having been committed in the presence of this detective, the right to arrest or procure the arrest of the guilty party may fairly be said to have been in the line of his employment, and within the authority conferred upon him. But the agent was bound, at the peril of the company, to know that the accused party was in the act of committing a crime, and not innocently passing the bill, and not himself the victim of the counterfeit. The record discloses that this detective was in the habit of exceeding his authority in making arrests, and this fact was known to the company. In November, 1888, he arrested two persons at Birmingham, and had them lodged in jail. Mr. Harrah, at that time general manager of the company, wrote him, viz.: "You must be very careful hereafter, and not make any arrest without first consulting our attorneys, and getting their opinion as to the company's case. I would rather that the arrest should not be made than that the company should get into trouble over having made an arrest without being able to establish a case against the party or parties arrested. Please bear this in mind in future." This letter serves to illustrate the character of Stewart's employment, and the manner in which he exercised his authority, and also fixes knowledge of that fact upon the company. We are therefore of opinion the circuit judge erred in refusing the instruction asked.

Assignments of error are also made upon certain instructions given the jury at the request of defendant's counsel. The first instruction was, viz.: "If Stewart simply telegraphed the operator to notify the police that a man was on train who had passed or attempted to pass counterfeit money, then that would not authorize the police to arrest him, unless he was directed to do so by an agent who had authority to act in such a matter." This instruction in the opinion of the court, was misleading, since it does not give the entire import of the telegram. The message from Stewart, it will be remembered, begins, viz.: "Tell your police authorities to meet me at the depot." And there was evidence tending to show that, upon the arrival of the train, Stewart and the conductor pointed out the two suspects to the policemen. Again, the instruction is erroneous, in that the liability of the company for the arrest is made to depend upon the order or direction of the agent, when the company would be equally liable if the agent procured the arrest, or set in motion the machinery by which the arrest was made, although not expressly ordering or directing it. For the same reason, we think the following instruction, submitted to the jury at the request of defendant's counsel, was also misleading, to wit: "If W. J. Stewart was ordered by his employer not to arrest parties, but to report the same to the railroad authorities, unless in an urgent case of wrong to the company, and if Eichengreen simply offered to pass a counterfeit bill at Bowling Green, then, unless said Stewart ordered his arrest, or swore out a warrant against the plaintiff, the defendant would not be liable in this case." For the same reason, the ninth request of defendant's counsel should not have been given in charge to the jury. In this latter instruction, the court sets out the telegram sent by Stewart to the operator at Gallatin, and instructs the jury that it would not authorize the plaintiff's arrest, unless Stewart or some one of defendant's employees ordered it. It is not necessary that the arrest of plaintiff should have been expressly ordered by any agent of the company; but, if it appear that it was procured by any agent of the company, acting within the scope of his employment, the company would be liable.

It is also assigned as error that the circuit judge, in explaining the measure of damages, used this expression, viz.: "You will consider these things upon the question of damages, if you ever get to that point," etc. It is objected that this expression was improper, since it was calculated to convey to the mind of the jury the impression that, in the opinion of the court, there would be difficulty on the part of the jury in reaching the assessment of damages. But we do not feel called upon to determine this question, or other errors assigned, as they may not arise on a new trial in the objectionable form in which they are now presented.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

J. Milton PARKER et al.,

v.

BETHEL HOTEL COMPANY et al., and
W. J. Webster et al., Appts.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. Nonuser of the franchise of a corporation, and the sole proprietorship of all its capital stock, will not constitute a dissolution of the corporation without a judicial adjudication thereof.
2. The existence of a corporation or its title to property cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground of its dissolution or forfeiture of franchise until dissolution has been judicially pronounced.
3. A sole stockholder of a corporation has no title, legal or equitable, to its property which he can convey by a deed in his own name.
4. An entry on the books of a corporation is not necessary to vest a vendee of shares of stock with all the title which the vendor had notwithstanding a provision in the charter or by-laws that no transfer shall be complete or effectual without registration.
5. The defense of laches does not generally apply where the situation of the parties has not been altered and one has not been put in a worse condition by the delay of the other.
6. The defense of usury cannot be set up by an assignee for certain creditors among whom is not included the one claiming the usurious debt, where the assignee has no property chargeable with the payment of that debt in common with others, and the assets coming to him will not be affected by the fact that such usury does or does not exist.
7. Service of process on the persons who were last elected president and secretary of a corporation which has been defunct for several years, and one of whom has claimed to be the sole stockholder and owner of the assets where they appear and answer in a suit to wind up its affairs, must be regarded as having been made on them officially as well as individually.

(February 22, 1886.)

A PPEAL by defendants Webster et al., from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals modifying a decree of the Chancery Court for Maury County in a proceeding to annul a trust deed given by defendant corporation and to dissolve and wind up the corporation; Webster and the beneficiaries under the trust deed appealing from so much of the decree as held that the corporation was not dissolved, that the holders of stock were not barred by laches from enforcing their claims, and that the trust deed was not binding, and from so much of the decree as refused to reduce the claims of the Second National Bank and S. W. Warfield for usury. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. H. Hatcher, for appellants:

The power of building, equipping, and operating the opera house, embodied in the charter of the Bethel Hotel Company, was absolutely void.

Heck v. McEwen, 12 Lea, 97; Mill. & V. Code, §§ 1795-1800.

When Lucius Frierson became the sole owner of all the stock of this corporation it became dissolved.

Bellona Co's Case, 3 Bland, Ch. 446; Wait, Insolvent Corp. §§ 365, 370, 385.

The resolution of liquidation and the sale of all the hotel property worked a dissolution of the corporation also.

Slee v. Bloom, 19 Johns. 458, 10 Am. Dec. 273; James v. Woodruff, 10 Paige, 541; Bruce v. Platt, 80 N. Y. 379; Wait, Insolvent Corp. p. 932.

Complainants were not stockholders. They held the stock simply as collaterals and upon the back of each certificate was the following: "Transferrable only in person or by attorney, on the books of the company, upon the surrender of this certificate." This stipulation upon the back of the certificate of the stock was the regulation by the company of the manner in which alone transfers could be made, and was actual notice, to every one into whose hands the stock came, of the only method of transfer recognized as valid.

Mill. & V. Code, § 1705, subsec. 3.

The complainants as collateral holders of the stock are barred by limitations and by their laches in enforcing whatever, if any, rights they had by virtue of such holdings. Vigilantibus et non dormientibus jura subeunt.

Abraham v. Ordway, 158 U. S. 416, 39 L. ed. 1036; Harter v. Trochig, 158 U. S. 448, 39 L. ed. 1049; Evers v. Watson, 156 U. S. 527, 39 L. ed. 520; Alsop v. Riker, 155 U. S. 460, 39 L. ed. 222.

Creditors whose claims are infected with the vice of usury do not come into court with clean hands. A court of equity will leave these usurious creditors just where it found them unless they will do equity in regard to the claims which they are asking the court to enforce for them.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 301; Corby v. Bean, 44 Mo. 379; First Nat. Bank v. Stauffer, 1 Fed. Rep. 187; Guthrie v. Reid, 107 Pa. 251; Johnston v. Lasker Real Estate Assn., 2 Tex. Civ. App. 494; Lucas v. Government Nat. Bank, 78 Pa. 228, 21 Am. Rep. 17; Overholt v. First Nat. Bank, 82 Pa. 490. See also Sydney v. Mt. Sterling Nat. Bank, 94 Ky. 231.

Messrs. W. J. Webster and Figures & Padgett also for appellants.

Messrs. G. T. Hughes, Fussell & Wilkes, W. S. Fleming, Jr., Granbery & Marks, and John T. Williamson for complainants.

Bradford, Special Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 24th day of May, 1880 P. C. Bethel, W. D. Bethel, Lucius Frierson, Eugent Pillow, J. M. Mayes, and L. W. Black became incorporated, under the laws of the state of Tennessee, as the Bethel Hotel Company. The business of the corporation, as declared in its charter, was the erection, furnishing, and operation of an hotel in the town of Columbia, Tenn.; the hotel building to include store houses and a concert hall. The charter was taken out under chapter 142 of the Acts of 1875, and is in the form prescribed for hotel companies, except that words were added authorizing it to build and own storehouses and a concert hall. The corporation was duly and regularly organized, with a capital stock of $100,000, divided into shares of $50 each. After its organization the building contemplated by the charter was erected on a lot owned by the corporation. The building was so designed and constructed that the part used for hotel purposes was on the second floor, with an entrance on the first floor. The stores were on the first floor, under that part of the building used as an hotel; but the precise situation of the concert hall, or, as it is called, the "opera house," does not appear. The corporation occupied and used the building, or leased it, or both, from the date of its completion until September 1, 1885. On that date the Bethel Hotel Company and Lucius Frierson, for the consideration of $22,500, payable in ten annual instalments, evidenced by the notes of the purchasers, conveyed to Mayes & Dodson certain parts of the building, particularly described, which were designated as the "hotel proper" part of said building, including the part from the second floor up, and all appurtenances and privileges incident thereto. The deed to Mayes & Dodson was signed, "Bethel Hotel Company; W. D. Bethel, President; Lucius Frierson, Secy. & Treas.; and Lucius Frierson." The sale and conveyance to Mayes & Dodson were authorized by the stockholders of the corporation at a meeting held shortly before, at which a majority, but not all, of the stockholders were present or represented. This meeting was the last ever held by the stockholders of the Bethel Hotel Company. At the time the sale aforesaid was made to Mayes & Dodson, and at the date of the meeting of the stockholders which authorized it, the great majority of the stock of the corporation was owned by Lucius Frierson and by W. D. Bethel, individually and as administrator of the estate of P. C. Bethel, deceased. The holdings of Frierson amounted to $34,000, or thereabouts, and those of Bethel to $61,000. On the 28th day of August, 1886, Frierson purchased from Bethel all the stock held and owned by him individually and as administrator. Some time, either before or after the purchase of the stock from Bethel,—it does not appear which,—he acquired such of the stock as was not owned by him and Bethel, and thus became the owner of the entire capital stock of the corporation. The consideration Frierson paid and agreed to pay Bethel for said $61,000 of stock was the following: The transfer and assignment to Bethel of the Mayes & Dodson notes payable to the Bethel Hotel Company, aggregating $22,500; notes of McEwen & Dale for $400, payable to Frierson; and his own notes, six in number, for $658.33 each. To secure the payment of Frierson's notes and the McEwen & Dale notes, and guarantee the indorsement of Frierson and the Bethel Hotel Company on the Mayes & Dodson notes, the stock was left in the possession of Bethel, to whom was reserved "all the power usual to such a pledge in the case of default in payment and satisfaction of said notes." The contract between Frierson and Bethel was in writing. In September, 1885, immediately after the sale to Mayes & Dodson, and the stockholders' meeting authorizing it, Frierson took possession of the residue of the property of the corporation, and used and treated it as his own. He leased it, collected the rents, used them for his own purposes, and accounted to no one. He used and controlled the property in this manner, without protest or interference from any one, until January, 1892, when it was conveyed in trust to defendant W. J. Webster, as will hereafter appear. During this long period of seven years, the corporation slept, or was dead, as will be hereafter determined. No meetings of the stockholders and directors were held, no officers were elected, and no business seems to have been transacted by the corporation. The explanation of this anomalous condition of affairs will be found in the claim made by Lucius Frierson that the corporation had ceased to exist after he had acquired all its stock, and that he became and was the real owner of its property. He says and claims that it was understood by the stockholders, at the meeting which authorized the sale to Mayes & Dodson, that the corporation would go into liquidation, and that he, as the owner of all its stock, would become the owner of all its property, and that a resolution to that effect was adopted.

NOTE.—As to the sole ownership of the stock of a corporation, see note to Louisville Bkg. Co. v. Elennan Bros. & Co. (Ky.) 19 L. R. A. 884.

81 L. R. A.

Frierson appears to have been an active trading man. His business required the use of considerable money, and he was compelled to borrow largely from others. Both before and after the date of the alleged resolution of the board of directors putting the corporation into liquidation, he made a large number of loans from divers persons. To secure these loans he used as collateral his stock in the Bethel Hotel Company. On May 3, 1882, he borrowed from J. M. Mayes, trustee for Mrs. Annie Jackson and her children, $4,000, executing his note therefor, and depositing, as collateral to secure the same, 100 shares of Bethel Hotel Company stock. The note was subsequently renewed, and 40 shares more of the stock were added as collateral. This note, with the collateral (140 shares) attached, came into the hands of G. T. Hughes, who succeeded Mayes as trustee. The Second National Bank loaned Frierson $5,000 on the 2d day of August, 1882, taking his note for that amount, with $6,000 of the stock of the Bethel Hotel Company attached as collateral. This loan was renewed nine different times. At the date of the last renewal, December 31, 1887, it was increased to $6,000. The increased loan was renewed from time to time, until it was taken up on December 28, 1891, by A. N. Aiken and W. M. Mayes, who, at Frierson's request, and for his accommodation, executed four notes, three of which were for $2,000 each, and one for $325 (the latter being for interest and discount), payable to Frierson's order, which notes were delivered to the bank. The hotel company stock on the original loan was retained as collateral on the new notes executed by Aiken and Mayes. It may as well be stated here that these notes were renewed from time to time, and finally, on February 10, 1893, some payments having been made by Aiken, Mayes and Aiken executed their three notes, two of them being for $2,000 each, and one for $1,700. J. Milton Parker made Frierson a loan in October, 1888, and took as security 100 shares of the hotel company stock. Payments were made by Frierson, and it was reduced to $1,994.61, and a note was executed for that amount on November 22, 1891, with the stock attached. Mrs. S. B. Francis loaned Frierson $4,000 on November 1, 1888. This loan was secured by collateral of some kind, but what it was is not shown. In October, 1884, Frierson substituted for the original security 100 shares of Bethel Hotel Company stock. There were several payments on and renewals of this loan. The last note in renewal executed by Frierson was for $2,737, dated April 21, 1891. The hotel stock, 100 shares, was attached as security. On the 14th day of April, 1892, Mrs. Francis recovered a judgment on said note in the chancery court of Maury county for $2,901.22, and an order for sale of the stock. The order of sale was not executed. J. W. Frierson, Jr., is the administrator of the estate of Mrs. E. K. Mayes. He discovered, after qualifying, a note of Lucius Frierson for $1,750, dated April 6, 1886, payable to Mrs. Mayes, with 40 shares of Bethel Hotel Company stock, attached as collateral. A new note was executed and delivered by Lucius Frierson to the administrator, April 6, 1892, for $1,890, with the same security. W. B. Wilson holds a note of Frierson for $1,700, dated April —, 1891, for money loaned. He holds as security 30 shares of the hotel company stock. This note is in renewal of one made in 1888. On February 10, 1891, Walter Steele loaned Frierson $2,500, taking his note therefor. To secure this note, Frierson pledged 50 shares of the hotel company stock. On July 1, 1891, Frierson reduced the note, by payment, to $1,500.

On the 12th day of January, 1892, Lucius Frierson conveyed by deed, to defendant W. J. Webster, the real estate owned by the Bethel Hotel Company; and the stock of that company purchased by him from W. D. Bethel. The purpose of said deed was to secure the payment of certain debts owing by said Frierson to sundry parties, aggregating about $45,000. One of his creditors, W. C. Wooten, was preferred to the amount of $5,000, but the other creditors were to be paid pro rata. The deed directed Webster to take immediate possession of the property, collect the rents, sell the property, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debts named, in the order stated. Webster accepted the trust, and took possession of the property conveyed. None of the creditors of Frierson who had loaned him money on the stock of the Bethel Hotel Company were provided for in the deed of trust, except Aiken and Wilson, and they only in part. On the 27th day of August, 1892, J. Milton Parker, and the others of said creditors, filed the original bill in this cause against the Bethel Hotel Company, Lucius Frierson, W. J. Webster, trustee, and the creditors provided for in the deed of trust, except Aiken and Wilson. The purpose of the bill was to annul the trust deed to Webster, have the corporation dissolved and wound up, its property sold, and the proceeds distributed among the holders of its stock as they were entitled. The bill charged that Lucius Frierson had no other interest in the property of the corporation than as a stockholder; that the legal title thereto was vested in the corporation, and had not been divested by the conveyance to defendant Webster; that they are not disposed to disturb the sale and conveyance to Mayes & Dodson, but insist that the proceeds of that sale should be equally distributed among the holders of the stock in the corporation, or that the $61,000 of stock sold by W. D. Bethel to Frierson, and retained by him as security, should, upon an adjustment of the equities among the stockholders, and the final winding up of the affairs of the corporation, stand charged with the amount thereof. It was further charged that since Lucius Frierson had purchased all the stock in the corporation, and become the sole owner thereof, and there had been no meeting of stockholders, and the directors had parted with their stock and ceased to act, the corporation ought to be dissolved, its affairs wound up, its property sold, and the proceeds distributed. Complainants also charged that, by virtue of the transfer to them by Lucius Frierson of the stock severally held by them as security, title thereto was vested in them, and that they were entitled to receive all sums and dividends that may be paid or become due on account of said stock, as fully as though they were the absolute owners thereof, to the end that the several debts owing to them by said Frierson, and for the security of which said stock was hypothecated, should be paid. Complainants state that they make no objection to the transfer of the $61,000 of stock by Bethel to Frierson, but insist that the conveyance thereof by the latter to Webster shall not be so construed as to vest any interest in the real estate of the corporation in Webster further than as a stockholder in said corporation.

Defendant Webster, as trustee, and on behalf of the beneficiaries named in the trust deed, answered the bill. He says the Bethel Hotel Company erected the building known as the "Bethel Hotel," and owned and operated it until September 1, 1885, when part of it was sold to Mayes & Dodson; that Lucius Frierson owned at that time all the stock in the company, except the shares of the Bethels, which he then purchased; that at that time the corporation went into liquidation, and ceased to transact any corporate business; that, upon becoming sole owner of all the capital stock, he became the equitable owner of the company's property and assets, took charge of it as his own, gave it in for taxes in his own name, and continued to hold it as his own, adversely to all the world, until he conveyed it to defendant Webster. It is insisted that all transfers, assignments, and pledges of stock made by Frierson after September 1, 1885, the date of the sale to Mayes & Dodson, and of the "liquidation" of the corporation, were void. As to the transfers and assignments of stock made before that date, it is not claimed that they were illegal; but it is averred that the assigns and holders thereof are estopped to assert any right in the corporate property conveyed to Webster, and are barred of any recovery or relief, because of long delay and laches in asserting or claiming their rights. The statutes of limitations of six and seven years are pleaded and relied on. Lucius Frierson also answered the bill. His answer is substantially the same as that of his codefendant Webster. He says that in September, 1885, he became the owner of the stock of the Bethel Hotel Company, and that it was intended and agreed, when part of the property was sold to Mayes & Dodson, that the company should go into liquidation, and that he should be the owner of the residue not sold, and that thereafter he gave it in for taxes in his own name. He admits that he pledged some of his stock after that date, but says he thought the shares so pledged represented shares or interests in the property of the corporation. W. D. Bethel also filed an answer. The substance of it is that there was a balance of $1,640 due him from Frierson on the purchase of the $61,000 of stock, and that he holds it as security for said balance.

Pending the cause, and before final decree, the following stipulation was entered of record, viz.: "In this cause it is agreed that the case shall be tried as if Wm. J. Webster, trustee, and the creditors represented in the deed of trust from Lucius Frierson to Wm. J. Webster, had filed a cross bill as of this date against the Second National Bank, J. Milton Parker, and S. W. Warfield, individually and as administrator of Mrs. Francis, and all other complainants, setting out and claiming credit, and to recover usury, as pointed out and indicated in the depositions of S. W. Warfield, Geo. Childress, J. M. Parker, and other complainants, and that it shall be taken as if answered, and all the equities denied, and the plea of the statute of limitations and all other defenses made, but shall be determined on the proof and facts as developed in the record, without the necessity of filing a cross bill and answer thereto; this course being taken to facilitate the trial of the cause at this term on its merits." During the progress of the cause, Mrs. S. B. Francis, one of the complainants, died, and the cause was revived in the name of S. W. Warfield, her administrator; and, the Second National Bank having suspended and gone into liquidation, the original bill was amended so as to make its receiver, John T. Williamson, a party complainant. Several other amendments were made, not necessary to be mentioned.

The chancellor decreed that the Bethel Hotel Company was not dissolved by the sale of the property to Mayes & Dodson, or the purchase of the stock of W. D. Bethel by Lucius Frierson, or the passage of the resolution by the stockholders authorizing a sale of the property to Mayes & Dodson, but that the property of the corporation, other than that conveyed to Mayes & Dodson, remained the property of the said hotel company, charged with a trust for the payment of its debts, and for distribution among its stockholders; that Lucius Frierson and his assignee, W. J. Webster, were estopped to deny the validity of the certificates of stock held by complainants, which had been transferred to them by Frierson, and that the holders of said stock were entitled to share in the assets of said corporation, and were not barred by any statute of limitations, or by any laches on their part. It was further decreed by the chancellor that, in the distribution of the proceeds of sale of the property of the corporation, the stock that had formerly belonged to W. D. and P. C. Bethel, and which had been transferred to Lucius Frierson by W. D. Bethel, personally and as administrator, should be charged with the sum of $22,500, the amount of the Mayes & Dodson notes which were assigned by him to said Bethel. Frierson was relieved of liability for rents received during the time he had possession of the property. Touching the balance of the debt due W. D. Bethel, as administrator and personally, by Frierson, on the purchase of stock from him, it was ordered that the amount should be paid, first, out of the pro rata going to said stock in the distribution. This provision of the decree was assented to by all parties. The chancellor was of the opinion that the Bethel Hotel Company ought to be "wound up and dissolved," and he accordingly so decreed. He also directed that its property be sold, and the proceeds distributed. The Bethel Hotel Company owed no debts, and the proceeds of the sale of its property were accordingly ordered to be distributed among the holders of its stock. We will not stop to state the rulings of the chancellor on the question of usury. They will be adverted to later on.

Special appeals from the chancellor's decree were prayed by W. J. Webster, trustee, and the beneficiaries named in the deed of trust; by the Second National Bank and its receiver, John T. Williamson; and by S. W. Warfield, administrator of Mrs. S. B. Francis, deceased. The nature and extent of the several appeals can best be stated in the words of the decree, as follows: "From so much of said decree as adjudicates that the Bethel Hotel Company was not dissolved in 1885, and that all stock placed as collateral since 1885 were valid claims against the corporation, and all stock before 1885 were not barred by laches of the creditors holding the same as collateral, and so much of the decree as adjudicates that the Bethel stock should be charged with $22,500 of the sale to Mayes & Dodson, and so much as adjudicates that W. J. Webster, trustee, and those claiming under him, are not entitled to all of said property, the said W. J. Webster, trustee, and the creditors named in the deed of trust, except, and pray an appeal to the next term of the supreme court, but not in any wise to affect the decree in their favor. To so much of said decree as charges the Second National Bank and John T. Williamson with usury, and reduces the debt of said bank by payments of interest made on said loans, and not allowing interest on said debt, said Second National Bank and John T. Williamson, receiver, pray an appeal to the next term of the supreme court. And to so much of said decree as charges the defendant S. W. Warfield, administrator, with all interest paid in excess of 6 per cent upon his debts, and directs the same to be credited upon said debt as of the date of their payment, the said S. W. Warfield, administrator, excepts, and prays an appeal to the next term of the supreme court." The case was heard by the court of chancery appeals. That learned court, in an elaborate and extremely able opinion, affirmed the decree of the chancellor in all respects, except his rulings on the questions of usury, and that part of it which directs that the Bethel Hotel Company be dissolved, which were overruled.

It is not claimed that the legal title to the real estate conveyed in the trust deed was in Lucius Frierson at the date of that instrument, or ever was in him. The Bethel Hotel Company, it will be remembered, conveyed all that part of the building adapted to hotel purposes to Mayes & Dodson, leaving several stores and the opera house. It never made any conveyance of the residue of said property, or any part thereof. It is claimed that the corporation conveyed one of the stores to the wife of Lucius Frierson. It seems that on the 29th of August, 1886, "W. D. Bethel, president, and Lucius Frierson," made and executed a deed to one of the stores, and the lot on which it was situated, to Mrs. Kate Frierson, the wife of Lucius. According to the testimony of Lucius Frierson, this deed was authorized by the stockholders at the same meeting at which the resolution authorizing the sale of the hotel part of the building to Mayes & Dodson, and directing the liquidation of the corporation, was adopted. But the court of chancery appeals has found as a fact that the deed was executed without the knowledge of Mrs. Frierson, and was never delivered to her. It may be regarded as settled, therefore, that the legal title to the property conveyed to defendant Webster was at the date of that instrument in the Bethel Hotel Company, where it had been, unquestioned and undisturbed, since 1880, the year of its incorporation and organization. Defendants insist that, although Frierson may not have been invested with the legal title, he nevertheless had such an equitable estate and interest as entitled him to sell and dispose of the property; in other words, that he was the real owner of the property, and as such had the absolute right to use or dispose of it. This alleged equitable estate was not the creation of any deed or written contract executed by the Bethel Hotel Company, or of any corporate act or resolution adopted by the stockholders or directors, which in terms referred to or defined it, but is rather the result and consequence of certain facts and conditions, the existence of which is affirmed by the defendants.

It is said that the Bethel Hotel Company, by the alienation of that part of its property built for and adapted to the uses and purposes of an hotel, deprived itself of the means of conducting an hotel business, and that since 1885, the date of the sale to Mayes & Dodson, it had ceased to exercise its corporate franchises; that the stockholders, at the meeting held in September, 1885, passed a resolution, or agreed among themselves, that the corporation should go into liquidation; and that Lucius Frierson, being then the owner of all the capital stock of the corporation, became in consequence the equitable owner of all its property, with full power to use it or dispose of it in such manner as he might choose to do. The position of the defendant seems to be that all rights of the corporation in the property were extinguished, that it had ceased to be affected with any corporate uses, and that it belonged absolutely to Frierson. The facts affirmed by defendants are not, all of them, exactly as found by the court of chancery appeals. It is true that the corporation sold and conveyed the hotel part of its building to Mayes & Dodson, retaining only the stores and opera house, and never afterwards engaged in the business of owning and operating an hotel. Lucius Frierson was not the sole stockholder in 1885, when the hotel was sold, and did not become such until August 28, 1886, when he purchased the Bethel stock. His stock, or a large part of it, at that time, and subsequently, was held as collateral security by other parties. It is not true that a resolution was ever adopted by the stockholders directing the liquidation or winding up of the affairs of the corporation, or that they were ever wound up. The facts, as found by the court of chancery appeals on this point, are stated in its opinion in the following words: "It may be fairly inferred, though it does not distinctly appear in terms in the proof, that, when the deed was made to Mayes & Dodson, it was then understood between W. D. Bethel and Lucius Frierson (they then owning practically all, or nearly all, of the stock) that Bethel should take the proceeds of the sale to Mayes & Dodson, amounting to $22,500 and a sufficient amount in addition from Lucius Frierson, personally, to make $30,000, and for this he would transfer his stock, $61,000, to Frierson, and that this arrangement was consummated, so far as it could be done without direct corporate action of the corporation itself, by the paper of August 28, 1886, made by Bethel to Frierson; and this is what they understood by the resolution to go into liquidation, there being no debts due by the corporation; and, following out this idea from the date of the sale to Mayes & Dodson, Lucius Frierson proceeded to treat the property as his own, on the idea that he himself constituted the corporation. We do not think that he entertained the idea that the corporation was defunct, but simply that he was himself the corporation, and could do what he wished with the assets." In considering the position of the defendants, that Frierson became the equitable owner of the assets of the corporation, we must therefore leave out of view the idea that there was any corporate action looking to a dissolution of the corporation and winding up of its affairs. Frierson's estate or interest in the property, if he had any, rests on the postulate that in consequence of the nonuser of its franchises, and his sole proprietorship of all its capital stock the corporation was dissolved, and he became the equitable owner of all its property.

A corporation can be dissolved, and its existence wholly terminated, only by the extinguishment of the corporate franchises conferred by the state. An ordinary business corporation, where its charter specifies no definite time for its continuance, may sell its property and wind up its affairs whenever a majority of its stockholders may deem it advisable. Treadwell v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 7 Gray, 393, 66 Am. Dec. 490; Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 22 N. J. Eq. 416. But the franchises conferred upon the stockholders by the state are not extinguished by the cessation from business thus brought about. 3 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1004. In the case of State, Memphis, v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614, 623, this court said the mere insolvency of a corporation would not work a dissolution, nor would the assignment of all its property nor the appointment of a receiver extinguish the franchises with which the company had been invested, where there had been no proceedings for forfeiture inaugurated by the state, nor surrender by act of the stockholders. And so, also, the omission to elect directors or other corporate officers does not of itself work a dissolution of a corporation. The board of directors or other managers or officers do not form an integral part of a joint-stock corporation, and therefore the omission to elect them operates to suspend the powers of the corporation for the time being, since it cannot act without them, but a subsequent election will restore its functions. Rose v. Roseburg & M. Turnp. Co. 3 Watts, 46; Boston Glass Mfg. Co. v. Langdon, 24 Pick. 49, 35 Am. Dec. 292. And where the charter of a corporation, as in the present case, expressly provides that, in case of the failure to elect directors at the prescribed time, the old directors shall continue in office until their successors are elected, it is unavoidably true that the corporation will not be dissolved. Slee v. Bloom, 5 Johns. Ch. 366; Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co. 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 124, 43 Am. Dec. 457; Lehigh Bridge Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nar. Co. 4 Rawle, 9, 26 Am. Dec. 111. Nor is a corporation ipso facto dissolved by merely neglecting to exercise its corporate powers, so long as the possibility remains of resuming them. Brandon Iron Co. v. Gleason, 24 Vt. 228; Russell v. M'Lellan, 14 Pick. 63; Atty. Gen. v. Bank of Niagara, Hopk. Ch. 354. And the sale or disposal by a corporation of its real property, though it have the effect of substantially destroying the object for which it was created, does not of itself work its dissolution. New Jersey Zinc Co. v. New Jersey Franklinite Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 322, 335; Brinckerhoff v. Brown, 7 Johns. Ch. 217; Barclay v. Talman, 4 Edw. Ch. 123. Thus, it has been held that suspending active operations, resolving to go into liquidation, depositing with the United States treasurer money to redeem its outstanding circulation, and receiving a reassignment of its bonds, are acts insufficient to operate as a final dissolution of a national bank. Ordway v. Central Nat. Bank, 47 Md. 239, 28 Am. Rep. 455. In Bache v. Nashville Horticultural Soc. 10 Lea, 436, 443, it was said that "the nonuser of its franchises by a corporation will not alone work a dissolution, or affect the title or right of its property." And in Maryville College v. Bartlett, 8 Baxt. 231, it was held that the nonuser by the trustees of a corporation of its franchises and property did not affect the title of the corporation.

It is claimed by the defendants that the dissolution of the corporation was effected by the fact that Lucius Frierson became the sole owner of all its capital stock. Admitting it to be true that he was the owner of all the stock of the corporation, it by no means follows that the corporation was thereby dissolved and forfeited its franchises. On this question the latest text-writer on Corporation Law has this to say, viz.: "Contrary to early opinion, it is now generally held that the fact that all the shares in a joint-stock corporation have passed into the hands of two members, or even into the hands of a single person, does not, ipso facto, work a dissolution of the corporation; since such sole owner may so dispose of the shares as, by the election of the necessary directors and officers, to continue the corporate existence." 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6653. And in 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1009, it is said: "It is well settled that all the shares in a corporation may be held by a single person, and yet the corporation continue to exist; and, if the charter or by-laws should require certain acts to be done by more than one shareholder, the sole owner may transfer a portion of his shares to other persons, so as to conform to the letter of the rule." It has been held that a corporation which has sold all its assets, with the intention of putting an end to its business, whose officers had all resigned, and whose stockholders had all transferred their shares to a single person, was nevertheless not dissolved, and that its existence could be terminated only by judgment of forfeiture, or by surrender accepted by the state. Russell v. M'Lellan, 14 Pick. 69, 70; Newton Mfg. Co. v. White, 42 Ga. 148; Baldwin v. Cunfield, 26 Minn. 43. The dissolution of a pecuniary or business corporation is effected in one of the following ways, viz.: (1) by the expiration of its charter; (2) by act of the legislature, where power is reserved for that purpose, or there is no constitutional inhibition; (3) by surrender of charter, which is accepted; (4) by forfeiture of the franchises and judgment of dissolution pronounced by a court having jurisdiction. 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1004; Taylor, Priv. Corp. § 430. It is not pretended that the Bethel Hotel Company was dissolved in either of the ways indicated. The charter of the corporation has not expired, neither has it been repealed by the legislature, or been surrendered to the state by its members of stockholders. It may be true that there was a nonuser of its franchises by the corporation for a period of seven years or more, occasioned by the sale of the only property it owned which could have been used for hotel purposes. Undoubtedly, the nonuser of its franchises by a corporation is ground for dissolution and forfeiture of its charter, at the instance of the state; but until sentence of dissolution has been pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a proper proceeding instituted for the purpose, the corporation will continue to exist, notwithstanding its failure to use its franchises. And forfeiture can only be decreed in a proceeding directly instituted for the purpose by the state granting it. Mill. & V. Code, § 1712; State v. Butler, 15 Lea, 104, 110; Jersey City Gas-light Co. v. Consumers' Gas Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 427; Broadwell v. Merritt, 87 Mo. 95. Until dissolution has been thus judicially pronounced, neither the existence of the corporation, nor its title to its property, can be questioned collaterally. We are bound to conclude, therefore, that the Bethel Hotel Company was not dissolved, or its franchises extinguished, for any of the reasons alleged by the defendants; and it is now a corporation indued with life, with authority to own property and exercise all the powers conferred on it by its charter.

Defendants insist that the alleged equitable estate of Lucius Frierson in the property of the Bethel Hotel Company did not depend alone upon the dissolution of the corporation, but resulted also from the fact that he was the sole owner of all its capital stock. The proposition is that, if one person owns all the shares of stock of a corporation which owes no debts, he, in virtue of such ownership, becomes the equitable owner of all its property, or at least may sell and dispose of it by deed, if he choose to do so. This proposition is argued by counsel for defendants with force and ability, and is supported by some authority. It has found favor with the supreme court of Maryland. Swift v. Smith, 65 Md. 428, 433, 57 Am. Rep. 386. But the decision of that learned court is opposed by the current of authority, and seems to us to overlook and ignore certain principles that are fundamental. A corporation and its shareholders are distinct legal entities. In Keith v. Clarke, 4 Lea, 718, this court held that, notwithstanding the state owned all the stock in the Bank of Tennessee, "the bank and the state are entirely different legal entities;" and in Lillard v. Porter, 2 Head, 177, it was said: "Stockholders are totally distinct from the corporation." Important consequences result from this rule. The shareholders are neither responsible for the debts, nor for the torts of the corporation. In the absence of special circumstances, the shareholders cannot be parties, either plaintiffs or defendants, in actions respecting corporate rights, nor have they any title or direct interest in the property of the corporation. "Shareholders," says Thompson, "are not joint tenants, or in any other sense co-owners of the corporate property, either before or after its dissolution. The title to it rests exclusively in the legal entity called the corporation. A share of the capital stock merely gives the right to partake according to the amount put into the fund, of the surplus profits of the corporation, and ultimately on the dissolution of it, of so much of the fund thus created as remains unimpaired, and is not liable for debts of the corporation." 1 Thomp. Corp. § 1071. As the shareholders have no direct interest in the corporate property, they cannot convey the real estate of the corporation, though all join in the deed. In Wheelock v. Moulton, 15 Vt. 519, Redfield, J., stated the reasons for the rule in his usual clear and accurate style. In that case Moulton and Hutchinson, sole proprietors and owners of all the stock of a corporation, conveyed its real estate, in mortgage, to secure the repayment of money borrowed of the plaintiff, Wheelock. He brought suit to enforce his mortgage. Judge Redfield said: "The fact that the signers of this deed owned the whole of the shares, will make no difference in regard to the necessity of a vote of the corporation, in order to convey the land. The title to the land was in the corporation, not in the individual shareholders. The deed of one, or of any number of the stockholders will not affect the title of the land. The share owners are not tenants in common of the land. They have no title whatever to any of the property of the corporation. It is true that one who owned all the shares might control the corporation, and so he could if he owned a majority of the shares; 31 L. R. A.

but he could in either case do it only by a vote of the corporation, at a meeting held in strict accordance with the statutes of the corporation." And in Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 35 L. ed. 473, Mr. Justice Field, discussing the same question, said: "The property of a corporation is not subject to the control of individual members, whether acting separately or jointly. They can neither encumber nor transfer that property, nor authorize others to do so. The corporation—the artificial being created—holds the property, and alone can mortgage or transfer it; and the corporation acts only through its officers, subject to the conditions prescribed by law." A very instructive case on this question is Baldwin v. Canfield, 26 Minn. 43. The facts of that case were very similar to those of this case, and the direct question now under consideration was passed upon. The opinion of the court was in accord with the cases above cited. See also Button v. Hoffman, 61 Wis. 20, 50 Am. Rep. 131.

We are thus led, both by reason and authority, to the conclusion that Lucius Frierson, as sole stockholder of the Bethel Hotel Company, had no title, legal or equitable, to its property. The title to the property was in the Bethel Hotel Company, and could only be conveyed by it. The conveyance of its real estate is one of the most solemn acts of a corporation, and it can only be done in pursuance of a vote of the corporation, and by deed executed in the form and mode prescribed by law. Thomp. Corp. § 5096. At common law a corporation could not execute a deed to realty, except under seal; and the general corporations act of 1875, under which the Bethel Hotel Company was organized, provides that, if the corporation have no seal, it shall be bound by the signature of its name by a duly-authorized officer. To have made a valid conveyance of the real estate of the company, it was necessary, therefore, that the deed should have been executed in the name of the corporation, under seal, if it had one; and, if not, its name should have been signed by an agent duly authorized by its governing agency, its board of directors. Garrett v. Belmont Land Co. 94 Tenn. 460. As we have seen, nothing of this kind was done. The deed to defendant Webster was executed by Lucius Frierson in his own name, and under his own signature. The Bethel Hotel Company, although it owned the property, was in no sense a party to it. For this and other reasons given, the deed of Lucius Frierson, conveying the real estate of the Bethel Hotel Company to defendant W. J. Webster, was void, and conveyed to him no title or interest therein.

We have assumed as a fact, in the preceding discussion, that Lucius Frierson was in truth the sole owner of all the shares of stock of the Bethel Hotel Company at the date he executed the deed to Webster. But was he? It will be remembered that Frierson assigned most of his stock in the Bethel Hotel Company to complainants as security for money borrowed of them by him. Some of the loans were made before September 1, 1885, the date of the conveyance to Mayes & Dodson, and the time, it is claimed by him, that the resolution directing the liquidation and winding up of the corporation was passed; and some of them were made subsequently. All of the loans and transfers of stock were made prior to the date of Frierson's deed to Webster. The stock owned by W. D. Bethel, personally and as administrator, was never transferred to him in fact. It was retained by W. D. Bethel as security for the payment of the purchase money agreed to be paid therefor by Frierson in the contract of August 28, 1886, between them. The certificates of stock had attached to them blank transfers and powers of attorney in the usual form. All of the certificates were not issued in the name of Lucius Frierson. He purchased from different persons, and, when they assigned their shares to him, they signed the transfers and powers of attorney. Frierson seems not to have surrendered the certificates and taken from the corporation others in his own name, but, when he pledged them as collateral, simply transferred them by delivery. For the purpose of defense, defendants have separated the complainants in two classes, viz., those who acquired stock before September, 1885, the date of the alleged dissolution of the corporation, and those who acquired stock after that date. As to the latter, it is argued that, the corporation being dissolved, transfers of stock to them were inefficacious, and conveyed no interest. But this argument is built upon a false predicate. There was no dissolution of the corporation. The argument therefore fails to the ground.

As to those of complainants who obtained certificates of stock before September, 1885, it is said, they took them with notice of a by-law of the company that no transfer of stock would be good unless made on the books of the company, and, the by-law not having been complied with, the transfers were void. It is not claimed by complainants that transfers of the stock to them were made on the books of the company. Indeed, two of the complainants, Steele and Wilson, hold their certificates by simple delivery: Frierson, in whose name the certificates were made out, not having signed the transfer and power of attorney on the back. Although it is claimed that there was a by-law of the company requiring transfers on the books, it is probably no more than a presumption from the words on the certificates. But it may be assumed that there was such a by-law. A sale or transfer of stock, to be valid, need not be in writing. The certificate need not, in fact, be delivered. A transfer is perfectly good, although the seller of the stock never had a certificate at all, and although no certificate is issued to the transferee. An indorsement on the certificate, while not necessary, is the preferable and most convenient form of transfer, because the same instrument then combines the evidence of the seller's right to the stock, and of his transfer to the purchaser. Lowell, Transfer of Stock, §§ 43, 44. There is no longer any doubt that the transfer and assignment of certificates of stock in a corporation, either by absolute sale or by way of pledge or security for debt, passes to the vendee or pledgee the title thereto. Cornick v. Richards, 3 Lea, 25; Cherry v. Frost, 7 Lea, 1; West Nashville Planing-mill Co. v. Nashville Sav. Bank, 86 Tenn. 252; Caulkins v. Memphis Gaslight Co. 85 Tenn. 683.

31 L. R. A.

Provision in the by-laws of the corporation, requiring the transfer to be made on the books of the company, is solely for the benefit of the corporation. When shares of stock are transferred, there is a complete substitution of one person for another in all the rights and duties attaching to the interest forming the subject of their contract. An entry on the books is not necessary to vest the vendee with all the title which the vendor had. By the sale and assignment, the vendor divests himself of not only the equitable, but the legal, title; and this principle applies, notwithstanding a provision in the charter or by-laws that no transfer shall be complete or effectual without registration. 1 Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 498. In Smith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 91 Tenn. 221, 238, Lurton, J., says: "The rule requiring transfer on the books of the company, by the well-settled line of decisions in this state, and by the great weight of authority in the courts of America, is a rule made solely for the benefit of the company. By it the company is enabled to know who are entitled to vote, and to whom it may pay dividends." The title of the transferee is perfect, as between himself and the former holder; and he is entitled, upon presentation to the corporation of his certificate, to have himself registered on its books as the real owner. It is inchoate as to the corporations only until the transfer and registry on the books of the corporation have been made. What are the possible consequences of an omission to register the transfer of stock on the books of a corporation, it is unnecessary here to inquire, because nothing was done by the Bethel Hotel Company which in any way affected the rights of those holding the stock, and complainants, as the assignees of Frierson, acquired such title to and interest in the stock as could not be affected or impaired by any act or omission of his.

Defendant Webster, both for himself and for the other defendants represented by him, relies in his answer upon laches as a defense to the relief asked by those of the complainants who obtained the certificates of stock they hold prior to September, 1885. It is difficult to see how this defense can avail them. It is argued that Frierson having claimed, used, and managed the property of the Bethel Hotel Company as his own, with the knowledge of complainants, and without objection from them for about seven years before the institution of this suit, they are subject to the imputation of laches, and cannot for that reason, have relief. It is an old principle that a court of equity will not enforce stale demands, where a party has slept on his rights and acquiesced for an unreasonably long time. Laches and neglect are always discountenanced. Lord Camden, in Smith v. Clay, 3 Bro. Ch. 640, note. The doctrine rests upon the broadest principles of equity. Lapse of time obscures all human evidence, and often makes it impossible to discover the truth. Where the chances of establishing the truth are greatly impaired by lapse of time, it would be obviously unjust to enforce a demand after many years of acquiescence and delay. And so, where a party had done something, or had spent money, or altered his situation, in the belief, generated by the delay and acquiescence of his adversary, that he had the right so to act, a court of equity will not interfere. But delay alone, unaccompanied by other circumstances, will not necessarily preclude relief. In every case where the defense is founded on mere delay, that delay, of course, not amounting to a bar of any statute of limitations, the validity of that defense must be tested upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are the length of the delay, and the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party, and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy. The doctrine of laches, as understood in courts of equity, implies injury to the party pleading it as a defense. Where the situation of the parties has not been altered, and one has not been put in a worse condition by the delay of the other, the defense of laches does not generally apply. In Paschall v. Hinderer, 28 Ohio St. 568, 580, it was said: "What constitutes a stale equity is a vexed question, hardly susceptible of an accurate definition. Length of time alone is not a test of staleness." "Laches," says the supreme court of Virginia, "in the assertion or prosecution of a claim, is not always enough to defeat it. The laches must be such as to afford a reasonable presumption of the satisfaction or abandonment of the claim, or such as to prevent a proper defense by reason of the death of parties, loss of evidence, or otherwise." Tazewell v. Saunders, 13 Gratt. 354, 362. In Wollaston v. Tribe, L. R. 9 Eq. 44, 50, a bill was brought in 1868 to set aside a marriage settlement executed in 1858 on the ground of fraud and mistake. Lord Romilly, M. R., said: "Great stress was laid on the lapse of time, but I think nothing of that, because all the persons are in the same state now as they were then. If there had been any dealing which had altered the state of matters, that might have raised a question; but there is nothing of the sort." So, in the present case, we are not dealing with "an altered state of matters." The status is unchanged. Frierson was not induced to do anything or to omit anything, to his hurt, by the alleged acquiescence or delay of complainants. In truth, it seems to us that Frierson's use and management of the company's property was in no sense inconsistent with the rights of complainants as transferees and holders of its stock. His repeated renewals of the debts for which the stock was pledged were a recognition on his part of the continued existence of the corporation and of its title to the property. Its property was what gave value to the stock, and it was undoubtedly in reliance on the continued ownership thereof by the Bethel Hotel Company that the complainants consented to renew their loans, and retain the stock as collateral. After what has been said, it is hardly necessary to notice the plea of the statute of limitations interposed by defendants.

There are a number of assignments of error by defendants, based upon the idea that the Bethel Hotel Company was dissolved. It suffices to say that, having found that the corporation was not dissolved, these assignments must be overruled.

The debts of the Second National Bank and of S. W. Warfield, administrator of Mrs. Francis, were attacked by defendant Webster for usury. The notes held by the bank were executed by Aiken and Mayes, but the debt was really owing by Lucius Frierson. These gentlemen were original indorsers, but after a number of renewals of the paper, and some payments, Frierson became insolvent, and they then executed their own notes for the balance, without his name appearing on them. It was understood by all parties, however, that the debt was Frierson's. It was found to be a fact that interest had been paid on both debts in excess of the legal rate. As to the debt due the Second National Bank, the chancellor decreed that by charging and accepting usury the bank had forfeited all right to interest, and the payments made by Frierson on account of interest were applied in reduction of the principal. The chancellor decreed, also, that the usurious interest paid on the Francis debt should be applied on the principal. The chancellor was wrong. It is settled by a multitude of decisions that the right to plead usury is a privilege personal to the debtor. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 949, note 4. In one case the defense of usury was likened to that of infancy. Ransom v. Hays, 39 Mo. 445. The exception to the rule stated embraces the debtor's sureties, guarantors, heirs, devisees, and personal representatives, and they are permitted to plead usury on the grounds of privity or common interest. Cole v. Hills, 44 N. H. 227; Loomis v. Eaton, 82 Conn. 550; Goodhue v. Palmer, 13 Ind. 457; Cramer v. Lepper, 26 Ohio St. 59, 20 Am. Rep. 756; Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Commercial Warehouse Co. 49 N. Y. 635. In the last case [note] the exception to the general principle is stated in these words: "All privies to the borrower, whether in blood, representation, or estate, may, both in law and equity, by the appropriate legal and equitable remedies and defenses, attack or defend against a contract or security given by the borrower which is tainted with usury, on the ground of such usury, where such contract or security affects the estate derived by them from the borrower." It would seem that an assignee under a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors, or an assignee in bankruptcy, would fall within the exception, and could plead usury to a debt which was entitled to participate in the assets conveyed to them, on the ground of privity in estate. Stein v. Swensen, 44 Minn. 218, 222. Nance v. Gregory, 6 Lea, 343, 40 Am. Rep. 41. By Code, § 2712, a judgment creditor is also allowed to sue for and subject usury paid by his debtor to the satisfaction of his debt. But no other than a judgment creditor can do so. McKinney v. Memphis Overton Hotel Co. 12 Heisk. 104. The exception does not seem to have been extended beyond the limits above indicated. The reason and policy of the statute against usury is the protection of borrowers against the oppressive exactions of money lenders; and, to promote and sustain that policy, it is not necessary that other persons than the victim, or those standing in legal privity with him, should be given the benefit of the statute. Defendant Webster does not fall within the exception to the general rule that a debt can be purged of usury only by the debtor. He is not a creditor of Frierson, but simply a trustee for certain creditors, none of whom appear to be judgment creditors. He is not such an assignee as, upon the ground of privity with the assignor, might have the right to attach a debt for usury. He holds, as assignee, no property chargeable with the payment of the usurious debts in common with other debts. If the debts owing to the Second National Bank and Mrs. Francis were included in the deed of trust to Webster, in might be his duty to relieve the trust property, to the extent of the usury paid on those notes. The assignee in such case holds the trust property for the benefit of the creditors named in the assignment, and it might be his duty to them to protect it from illegal burdens. But, as we have seen, the deed of trust executed by Frierson conveyed to Webster nothing except his interest in the W. D. Bethel stock. Webster became thereby the assignee of $61,000 of stock in the company for the benefit of the creditors named in the trust deed, but acquired no interest in the property of the corporation itself. Neither did he acquire any interest in the surplus value of the stock held by the bank and Mrs. Francis as security for their debts. That belonged to Frierson. It was a matter of no concern, therefore, to Webster, trustee, whether the debts of the bank and Mrs. Francis were tainted with usury or not. The amount going to him, as assignee of the Bethel stock, upon a final winding up of the Bethel Hotel Company, and distribution of its assets among the stockholders, could not be affected one way or the other by the fact that the debts of the bank and Mrs. Francis were tainted with usury. Any surplus that might remain after paying them in full would go to Frierson. It is clear, therefore, that Frierson alone was interested, and no one but him could raise the question of usury, and this he has not done. There is also another ground upon which it must be held that the debt of Mrs.

Francis cannot be attacked for usury. This debt was reduced to a judgment in April, 1892. It has been held in this state that relief against usury will not be granted in equity after a judgment at law upon the debt. If the debtor has had his day in court, and failed or neglected to set up the defense of usury, the judgment is final and conclusive. McKoin v. Cooley, 3 Humph. 561; Goff v. Dabbs, 4 Baxt. 300.

It is hardly necessary to add, after what has been said, that the chancellor was in error when he decreed that the Bethel Hotel Company be dissolved. He had no power in this case to decree a dissolution. That could be done only in a suit instituted by the state for the purpose. The most that the chancellor could do was to wind it up and distribute its assets.

It was thought by the court of chancery appeals that the Bethel Hotel Company had not been brought before the court by proper service of process; and it being deemed necessary, for complete relief that this should be done, it was ordered that steps be taken, on the remand of the cause to the chancery court of Maury county, to bring the company before the court. We think the court of chancery appeals is mistaken. The Bethel Hotel Company has been sufficiently served with process, and is now before the court. The executive officers of the company last elected were W. D. Bethel, president, and Lucius Frierson, secretary. They hold over until the election of their successors, and were the president and secretary, respectively, of the company, when the original bill was filed, and are yet. Process was served on them, and they have severally filed their answers. We think service of process on them was all that could be had, and must be regarded as having been made on them officially as well as individually. We hold, therefore, that the Bethel Hotel Company was properly before the court.

In all other respects the decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals is affirmed.

The cause will be remanded to the chancery court of Maury county for further proceedings.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, NINTH CIRCUIT.

THE WILLAMETTE.

Jacob NELSON et al.
v.

THE STEAMSHIP WILLAMETTE, OREGON IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
Claimant, and L. S. J. HUNT et al., Stipulators, Appts.

(70 Fed. Rep. 874.)

1. The right of a defendant to be sued in

NOTE.—The power of a court of admiralty to entertain jurisdiction of a proceeding in rem against a vessel for damages resulting from the death of a person caused by a collision has not yet been sustained by any decision in the Supreme Court of the United States. The decision in the present case at first sight seems to be in conflict with that of Barton v. Brown ("The Corsair"), 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727, 31 L. R. A.

the division of the district of Washington in which he resides is waived by appearing in another division and having the action transferred to that of his residence.

2. A court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by personal representatives of a passenger killed by collision between vessels, under a state statute giving a right of action for death by negligence, and making it a lien on the vessel, since, if the statute can preserve the right of action, it can give efficiency to the lien to be enforced in the appropriate tribunal.

in which the right to a libel in rem is denied, although the local law gave a right of action for the death where it did not expressly create any lien on the vessel. It is in the latter particular that the present case is distinguishable, as it appears from the Oregon statutes quoted by the court that such demands constitute liens and have preference over all other demands.

3. Recovery for personal injuries or death due to collision cannot be had by libelants intervening after the vessel has been released on stipulation under the original libel.

(September 18, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendants, stipulators for the Steamship Willamette, from a judgment of the District Court of the United States for the District of Washington, Northern Division, in favor of libelants and intervening libelants in a proceeding to enforce the liability of the steamship for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by its negligence. Reversed in part. Affirmed in part.

Before McKenna and Gilbert, Circuit Judges, and Knowles, District Judge:

The libel was filed in the western division of the district of Washington by Jacob Nelson. Subsequently intervening libels were filed by Philip L. Reese, administrator of John E. Moe, and by D. J. and Ella E. Wyncoop and also D. J. Wyncoop, individually. The ship was seized by the marshal. The Oregon Improvement Company claimed it, and it was released upon a bond for $1,000,000 with L. S. J. Hunt and John Collins as stipulators. After the release of the ship further intervening libels were filed by Thomas Foran, Emma D. Miller, John Rankin, E. W. Vest, and Ida F. Richardson. The ship was held in fault and the following damages were awarded:

To the libellant, Jacob Nelson, for personal injuries sustained by himself, $2,500; to the intervener, Philip L. Reese, for the death of John E. Moe, $5,000; to the intervener Emma B. Miller, for the injuries sustained by herself, $2,500; to the interveners D. J. Wyncoop, and Ella E. Wyncoop for the death of their son, Frank C. Wyncoop, $3,500; for the injuries sustained by D. J. Wyncoop, $2,500; for the injuries sustained by Ella E. Wyncoop, $1,000; for loss and injury to baggage and property, $300; to the intervener E. W. Vest, for the injuries sustained by him, $700; to the intervener Thomas Foran, for the injuries sustained by him, $3,500; to the intervener John Rankin, for the death of his son Joseph Rankin, $3,500; and to the intervener Ida F. Richardson, for the death of her husband, W. N. Richardson, $5,000.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Andrew F. Burleigh for appellants. Messrs. A. R. Tetlow and John H. Elder for Nelson and Reese.

Mr. Ben Sheeks for Richardson.

Mr. A. H. Garretson for Miller and Vest.

Messrs. D. J. Crowley and P. C. Sullivan, for the Wyncoops, appellees:

An action can be maintained in rem against a steamship, for the wrongful death of a person.

At common law there was no right of action for damages occasioned by reason of the death of an individual by a wrongful act. This rule, however, has been modified by statute, and in the state of Washington is controlled by statutory regulations.

2 Hill's Code, §§ 138, 139, 148; 1 Hill's Code, § 1678; Atropa v. Costello, 8 Wash. 149; Graetz v. McKenzie, 3 Wash. 194; Northern P. 31 L. R. A.

R. Co. v. Ellison, Id. 225; Hedrick v. Ithaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400; Southern P. Co. v. Lafferty, 57 Fed. Rep. 536, 15 U. S. App. 193.

The decisions must be accepted by the court of appeals as an interpretation of the state statute by the highest court of such state. This rule is in consonance with that announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in discussing a similar statute.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591; Re Humboldt Lumber Mfrs. Asso. 60 Fed. Rep. 423; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McCloskey, 23 Pa. 526; Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 349, 68 Am. Dec. 553.

As to the amount of damages, see—

The Raleigh, 41 Fed. Rep. 527; The Mincola, 44 Fed. Rep. 143; Withcofsky v. Wier, 32 Fed. Rep. 302.

As to rules for amount of damages in the cases of minors, see—

Birkett v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 110 N. Y. 504; Ihl v. Forty-Second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 320, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1; Brunswick v. White, 70 Tex. 504; Oldfield v. New York & H. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 310.

Where a statute gives a remedy, it can be enforced by the courts of admiralty.

The Oregon, 45 Fed. Rep. 62; The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 99; Re Humboldt Lumber Mfrs. Asso. supra; Boden v. Demicolf, 56 Fed. Rep. 846; Barton v. Brown ("The Corsair"), 145 U. S. 345, 36 L. ed. 730; The Willamette, 59 Fed. Rep. 797.

An administrator may intervene in a suit in rem for the recovery of damages for the death of his intestate, caused by the wrongful act or omission of the persons in charge of res.

The Oregon, 42 Fed. Rep. 78; The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 102; The St. Nicholas, 49 Fed. Rep. 671.

In courts of admiralty, in the absence of legislation by Congress, legislation of states will be enforced in at least three different cases, viz.: (1) in the establishment of the general rights of persons and property within the state limits; (2) in the exercise of the police power; (3) in certain local regulations of a maritime nature.

The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 108.

The Willamette alone was within the jurisdiction of the court, and the damages were properly assessed against the Willamette.

United States v. The Juniata ("The Juniata"), 93 U. S. 337, 23 L. ed. 930; The Washington v. Cavan ("The Washington & The Gregory"), 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 513, 19 L. ed. 787.

The discharge of the vessel on a stipulation does not change the character of the suit. The stipulation took the place of the vessel.

The Oregon, 45 Fed. Rep. 62; United States v. The Haytian Republic ("The Haytian Republic"), 154 U. S. 118, 38 L. ed. 931; The T. W. Snook, 51 Fed. Rep. 244; Morrison v. United States Dist. Ct. for S. D. of N. Y. 147 U. S. 14, 37 L. ed. 60; The Antelope, 1 Ben. 521.

Messrs. Stratton, Lewis, & Gilman for Foran and Rankin, and Ben Sheeks for Richardson, filed the following brief in support of motion to modify decree:

When merits clearly appear on the records, it is the settled practice in admiralty proceedings not to dismiss the libel, but to allow the party to assert his rights in his newly claimed allegations.

The Adeline, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 244, 3 L. ed. 719; Parsons, Shipping & Admiralty, § 17; La Tourrette v. Burton, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 43, 17 L. ed. 609; Re McNiel, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624; Meyer v. Tupper ("The St. Lawrence"), 66 U. S. 1 Black, 522, 17 L. ed. 180; The General Smith, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 438, 4 L. ed. 609; Peyroux v. Howard, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 324, 8 L. ed. 700; Rules of Admiralty Practice, Nos. 12 and 92; The Moses Taylor v. Hammons ("The Moses Taylor"), 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397.

The right to treat this libel, if the allegations are sufficient to show an action in tort and in personam, as a libel in personam irrespective of any other allegations, is sustained by an abundance of authority.

Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626, 26 L. ed. 1192; Chamberlain v. Ward, 62 U. S. 21 How. 564, 16 L. ed. 217; The Charles Morgan v. Kouns ("The Charles Morgan"), 115 U. S. 69, 29 L. ed. 316; Betts, Adm. Pr. p. 99; Burton v. Brown ("The Corsair"), 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727; Roberts v. The Huntsville, 3 Woods, C. C. 386; The Union, 4 Blatchf. 90; The White Squall, 4 Blatchf. 103; The Zenobia, 1 Abb. Adm. 55; The St. Johan, 1 Hagg. Adm. Rep. 334; 2 Brown, Civil & Adm. Law, p. 400; The Triune, 3 Hagg. Adm. Rep. 114; The Cephalonia, 29 Fed. Rep. 332, Affirmed 32 Fed. Rep. 112; Hrebrik v. Carr, 29 Fed. Rep. 298.

Such course is not only proper but in justice will be taken whenever the same may or can be under the forms of the libel.

The Tonawanda, 34 Phila. Leg. Int. 394; The Garland, 5 Fed. Rep. 924; The Clatsop Chief, 8 Fed. Rep. 163; The E. B. Ward, Jr., 17 Fed. Rep. 456; The Manhasset, 18 Fed. Rep. 918; The Highland Light, Chase, Dec. 150; Rusk v. The Charles Morgan, 18 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 624; Hollyday v. The David Reeves, 5 Hughes, C. C. 89.

Mr. Ben Sheeks, in support of motion to modify:

When the company appeared and answered the intervening libel the court had jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against it and such judgment should stand.

McKenna, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The record in this case consists of many hundred pages, but we have reviewed and considered it carefully, and, being satisfied with the conclusions of the learned judge of the district court as to the cause of collision and the culpability of the Willamette, adopt his statement. It is as follows:

"This is a suit in rem by passengers who were injured and personal representatives and heirs of passengers who were killed by a collision between the passenger steamer Premier and the steam collier Willamette, on Admiralty inlet, about midway between Marrowstone point and Bush point. The Premier is a steel propeller, and was, at the time of the collision, plying as a regular passenger steamer on the route from Tacoma to Whatcom, via Seattle, Port Townsend, and Anacortes. The 31 L. R. A.

Willamette is an iron propeller built for the coal trade, and was, at the time of the collision, bound from Seattle to San Francisco, with a cargo of about 2,700 tons of coal. The collision occurred at 2:05 P. M., October 8, 1892. Admiralty inlet is wide. No other vessel or obstructions impeded either of the colliding vessels. The sea was smooth. The machinery of each vessel worked well, and both were in all respects properly equipped and easily controlled. And although fog hung over the place, and enveloped both vessels at the time of the occurrence, the collision could not possibly have happened if due care and the rules prescribed by law for the prevention or collisions, had been observed by the commanders of both vessels. The Premier has not been arrested or brought within the jurisdiction of the court. I shall therefore in this decision refrain from expressing any opinion upon the question as to whether she was in fault. If the collision was caused by culpable negligence on the part of the Willamette, she is liable for resulting injuries to passengers of the Premier, notwithstanding any fault on the part of the latter which may have been a contributing cause of the same injuries. The Atlas, 93 U. S. 302, 23 L. ed. 863. From the testimony of the Willamette's officers, I find that she left Seattle at 10:50 A. M., in a thick fog. When off West Point she was overtaken and passed by the passenger steamer City of Kingston, bound from Seattle to Port Townsend. She passed Point No Point at 1:10 P. M., and from that time until the moment of the collision her engines were working full speed, or nearly so. I do not accept as true the statements of her officers as to the course of the Willamette from Point No Point to the place of the collision. I find, according to the preponderance of all the evidence, that the Willamette took a course from Point No Point which brought her very near to Bush point, on the east side of the inlet. A few minutes before the collision she was actually seen by persons residing there. The Premier was then around Marrowstone point, and had passed the Kingston, and was heading S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ E., which was her proper course. Being in the fog, she was sounding one blast of her whistle at frequent intervals, and said signals were heard on board of the Willamette, and also by people on Bush point. The Willamette, instead of pursuing her proper course,—keeping on the east side of the inlet,—deviated to the westward, and took a course aimed with fatal accuracy towards the approaching Premier. The master of the Willamette, in his testimony, swears that when he heard the Premier's whistle he mistook her for the City of Kingston, and it is altogether probable that he changed the course of the Willamette with the intention of following the Kingston's wake, and that, on account of his stupidity or perversity, he failed to discover that the vessel whose notes of warning were constantly sounding was approaching, instead of being overtaken. It is proved by the testimony of the assistant engineer in charge of the Willamette's engine room at the time of the occurrence that the first and only order occasioned by the meeting was 'Astern full speed,' and this he has recorded as being given at 2:05, the very moment of the collision. The Willamette rammed the Premier at an angle of about 45 degrees, on her port side, just abaft the foremast, with such force as to cut into her hull nearly or quite to the latter's keel, the Willamette's bow being so firmly wedged into the structure of the Premier as to render her unable by her own efforts to pull away. After towing the Premier across the inlet to the beach near Bush point, and making her fast to the shore, her repeated efforts to back away and separate from the Premier, resulted in parting a hawser, and still the two vessels remained united, until, with the assistance of a tug, the Willamette was finally liberated, and the Premier sunk. The Willamette was in fault for deviating from her proper course, and for continuing at a dangerous rate of speed when the near proximity of another vessel was in fact known to her officers, instead of stopping until the position and course of the other vessel had been made out, and proper signals for passing had been given by both vessels as the law prescribes, and understood. As the direct result of this casualty, John E. Moe, who is represented in this suit by Philip L. Reese, as administrator of the estate of said Moe; Frank C. Wyncoop; W. N. Richardson, who is represented in this suit by his widow, Ida F. Richardson; and Joseph Rankin,—were killed; and Jacob Nelson, Emma B. Miller, D. J. Wyncoop, E. W. Vest, and Thomas Foran suffered personal injuries; all of said deceased and injured persons being passengers on board the Premier.

"The statutes of this state provide as follows: 'When the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs, or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the persons causing the death. . . . 2 Hill's Code, § 138. 'A father, or in case of his death or desertion of his family, the mother, may maintain an action as plaintiff for the injury or death of a child, and a guardian for the injury or death of his ward.' Id. § 139. 'No action for a personal injury to any person occasioning his death shall abate, nor shall such right of action determine by reason of such death if he have a wife or child living, but such action may be prosecuted, or commenced and prosecuted, in favor of such wife, or in favor of the wife and children; or if no wife, in favor of such child or children.' Id. § 148. 'All steamers, vessels, and boats, their tackle, apparel, and furniture, are liable . . . for injuries committed by them to persons or property within this state, or while transporting such persons or property to or from this state. Demands for these several causes constitute liens upon all steamboats, vessels, and boats, and their tackle, apparel, and furniture, and have priority in their order herein enumerated, and have preference over all other demands; but such liens only continue in force for the period of three years from the time the cause of action accrued.' 1 Hill's Code, § 1678."

Judgments were rendered against the Oregon Improvement Company in favor of the libelants, respectively, and subsequently summary judgments against it and L. S. J. Hunt and John Collins, stipulators. From these judgments the company and the stipulators appeal, and assign as error:

31 L. R. A.

(1) That the court had no jurisdiction, because the action was commenced in the western division of the district, and that the cause occurred in the northern division, and claimant resides and the ship was seized in the latter division. (2) The court erred in its decree in favor of the intervening libellant Reese, administrator, for the death of his intestate, John E. Moe, and in favor of D. J. and E. E. Wyncoop for the death of their son, and for John Rankin for the death of his son, and for Ida F. Richardson for the death of her husband, for the reason that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain suits or actions in admiralty in rem to recover damages for death, brought by heirs or personal representatives of deceased persons. (3) That the court erred in decreeing that the libelants recover from the Oregon Improvement Company and said stipulators the sum of $34,686.16. (4) That it did not make a decree dismissing the libels.

These assignments of error will be considered in order.

1. The act to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the state of Washington provides as follows:

"Be it enacted," etc. "That the state of Washington shall constitute one judicial district.

"Sec. 2.

"Sec. 3. That for the purpose of holding terms of the district court, said district shall be divided into four divisions to be known as the eastern, southern, northern, and western divisions.

"Sec. 4. That all civil suits not of a local character, which shall be brought in the district or circuit courts of the United States for the district of Washington, in either of the said divisions against a single defendant, or where all the defendants reside in the same division of said district, shall be brought in the division in which the defendant or defendants reside, or, if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions, such suit may be brought in either division, and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or all of said divisions. All issues of fact in civil causes triable in any of the said courts shall be tried in the division where the defendant or one of the defendants reside, unless by consent of both parties the case shall be removed to some other division." 26 Stat. at L. 45.

Against the contention of appellants the respondents urge that this act is not applicable to suits in admiralty, and cite the case of Ile Louisville Underwriters, 134 U. S. 488, 33 L. ed. 991. This view is not without plausibility, but we do not think it is necessary to definitely pass upon it, as we have based our decision upon other grounds. The record shows that the claimant made no objection to the jurisdiction of the court, but appeared in the action, prayed to be permitted to defend it, claimed and secured the release of the vessel upon giving a bond and signing stipulation. Afterwards, it filed exceptions to the libels, but this point was not taken, but claimant moved and obtained an order transferring the case to the northern division, its domicile, and the case was there tried. It will be observed that the act constitutes the state one district, and there is nothing to affect its substantial jurisdiction. Mesne and final process issued in either division may be served and executed in all, and that the venue in either was not imperative against the consent of defendants is evident from the following provision of section 4:

"All issues of fact in civil causes, triable in any of said courts, shall be tried in the division in which the defendant or one of the defendants reside, unless by consent of both parties the case shall be removed to some other division."

The venue of actions under statutes like the Washington statute has always been held to be a privilege which the defendant could exact or waive, even as to districts. The right of a defendant to be sued in that of his domicile may be waived, and is waived by not objecting. Central Trust Co. v. McGeorge, 151 U. S. 129, 38 L. ed. 98. If to be sued in the district of one's domicile (usually the state in which one resides) is in the nature of a personal exemption, which may be waived, surely to be sued in a division of a district is of like nature, and may be waived. Under the act of February 18, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 316, 320, chap. 80), which exempted national banks from suits in state courts in counties other than the county or city in which the bank was located, it was held in First Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 132 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 282, that such exemption was a personal privilege, which could be waived and was waived by appearing in such suit brought in another county, and not claiming the immunity granted by Congress. Nor do we conceive that it makes any difference, in the circumstances of this case, that it is in rem. If the owner had not appeared, a different question would have arisen. By its appearance, claimant became a party (The J. W. French, 13 Fed. Rep. 916), and assumed the situation of defendant, as regards the original libellant, Nelson, and the then intervening libellants, and answered; and on its motion, as we have seen, the action was transferred to and tried in the division of its residence, and in which the ship was seized, and judgments rendered against it. As to the effect of this, in addition to the cases cited, see also Barry v. Foyles, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 314, 7 L. ed. 158; Pollard v. Dwight, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch. 421, 2 L. ed. 666; Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476, 25 L. ed. 237; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McBride, 141 U. S. 127, 35 L. ed. 659; Eddy v. Lafayette, 49 Fed. Rep. 807, 4 U. S. App. 247.

2. The question presented in the second assignment of error—that is, the power of a court of admiralty to entertain jurisdiction of suit by the representatives of a deceased person when the right of action survives by the local law—has not been passed on definitely by the supreme court, though it has come up incidentally in several cases. Whenever it has arisen in the district courts, with but few exceptions, the jurisdiction has been entertained, and by a few eminent judges it has been asserted without the aid of local law. The reasoning of the latter has been left unsubstantial by the decision of the supreme court in Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754, 24 L. ed. 580, but it shows the disposition of judges. The research of other courts has made it unnecessary to review or especially cite these cases. This has been ably and accurately done in American S. B. Co. v. Chace, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369; The Harrisburg v. Rickards ("The Harrisburg"), 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 358; Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 515, 26 L. ed. 814; Barton v. Brown ("The Corsair"), 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727, and no disapproval is expressed of the cases reviewed. It may not be unnecessary repetition to refer to the case of The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. Rep. 98, in which Judge Brown, of the southern district of New York, comments on previous decisions, and vindicates the jurisdiction of the district court with great strength of reasoning; and the cases Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 75, and The Clatsop Chief, 8 Fed. Rep. 163, in which Judge Deady, in the Oregon district, sustained, respectively, an action in personam and an action in rem, a statute in Oregon giving the right of action; and Re Humboldt Lumber Mfrs. Assn. 60 Fed. Rep. 428, decided by Judge Morrow, of the northern district of California, following and approving Judge Brown's reasoning. The case of The City of Norwalk was affirmed on appeal by the circuit court of appeals, and the conclusion and reasoning of Judge Brown approved. 20 U. S. App. 570, 9 C. C. A. 521, and 61 Fed. Rep. 364. The court, speaking by Judge Lacombe, said: "The case of the administratrix against the owners of the two vessels presents some further questions. It is contended that a libel in personam, for damages for loss of life under the state statute (N. Y. Laws 1847, chap. 450, as amended by Laws 1849, chap. 256, and Laws 1870, chap. 78) cannot be maintained in admiralty. This objection has been most exhaustively discussed by the learned district judge, and all the authorities bearing upon it stated and analyzed. There is nothing to add to his disposition of the question in the subdivision of his opinion which deals with it, except to say that we fully concur therein. The damages were the result of a tort committed on navigable waters of the United States; the tort was by place and circumstance a maritime one; the locality was within the waters of a state, which by its statute gave to the administrator of the person killed a right to receive for the benefit of the next of kin a sum of money by way of damages for the death of the intestate. The supreme court has expressly held that such statutes are valid, even when the tort was committed on navigable waters, in the absence of any regulation of the subject by Congress. American S. B. Co. v. Chace, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369; Sherlock v. Alling, 98 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819. There is no question here of an attempt to create a maritime lien by a state law; that law simply gives in certain cases a legal right to damages for a tort, which survives the person injured, and passes, as do other rights of property, to the legal successor to his estate. The admiralty courts, before the passage of the statute, exercised jurisdiction over precisely such claims for damages, when brought in his lifetime by the person injured, and there seems no sound reason why they should not exercise like jurisdiction when the tort is committed in a locality where the municipal law preserves the right to redress beyond the life of the injured person. It is not logically an enlargement of jurisdiction so as to cover a general subject not cognizable before, but a mere increase of the varieties of cases embraced within that subject."

This action was in personam, but the reasoning of the court and of Judge Brown applies as well to actions in rem. If a collision is culpable, it is undoubtedly a marine tort, and the supreme court said in The City of Panama v. Phelps ("The City of Panama"), 101 U. S., on pages 453-464, 25 L. ed. 1061-1065:

"Injuries of the kind [the case was of injuries not resulting in death] alleged give the party a claim for compensation, and the cause of action may be prosecuted by a libel in rem against the ship; and the rule is universal that if the libel is sustained, the decree may be enforced in rem, as in other cases where a maritime lien arises. These principles are so well known and so universally acknowledged that argument in their support is unnecessary." Page 462, L. ed. 1064.

If a claim for compensation, if the party die, can be made to survive by statute to his representatives, it would not be very complete reasoning to hold that the remedy cannot also be made to survive. Indeed, there is language of Justice Gray in the case of The H. E. Willard, 52 Fed. Rep. 387, which supports the view that, the right being created, the admiralty courts of the United States will enforce it by their own rules of procedure. The learned justice said: "When a right maritime in its nature has been created by the local law, the admiralty courts of the United States may doubtless enforce that right, according to their own rules of procedure;" citing a number of cases, among which is Barton v. Brown ("The Corsair"), 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727. In the case at bar, however, it is enough to say that, the tort being a maritime one, it would seem on principle and authority, if the local law is competent to preserve the right of action, it is competent to give it the efficiency of a lien to be enforced in the appropriate Federal tribunal. Rodd v. Heartt ("The Lottawanna"), 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 558, 581, 22 L. ed. 654, 664.

3. The fourth assignment of error is not very clear. If it means that the judgments are excessive as to amounts, it is not well taken. We cannot say the judgment of the court was not well exercised, and that the amounts awarded are excessive compensation for the injuries inflicted. If it means more than this, it is covered by the fifth assignment of error, which we shall now proceed to consider. The assignment is general, and it is not certain that the points specifically urged here were drawn 31 L. R. A.

to the attention of the district court. However, the right of the libelants who intervened to recover after the ship was released is discussed by both parties in their briefs, and submitted for decision. At the time judgments were rendered the construction of admiralty rule 34, and the extent of the jurisdiction to entertain petitions of intervening libelants, was disputable, but has since been settled by the supreme court in The Oregon (decided May 6 of this year) 158 U. S. 186, 39 L. ed. 943, in which it is held that a stipulation given for the release of a vessel upon the original libel to recover damages done to a vessel with which she collided does not bind the sureties to respond to claims set up by intervening petitions filed subsequently to the release, and hence the court should not entertain jurisdiction of such intervening petitions.

It follows, therefore, that the judgments of the District Court in favor of the intervening libelants, Emma E. Miller, and E. W. Vest, Ida F. Richardson, Thomas Foran, and John Rankin, should be reversed, and that the judgments in favor of Jacob Nelson, D. J. Wyncoop, and Ella E. Wyncoop, and D. J. and Ella E. Wyncoop, and Philip L. Reese, administrator, are affirmed; and it is so ordered.

A petition for rehearing and modification of the decree was subsequently filed and on October 31, 1895, the following additional decree was entered:

The decree heretofore entered is hereby modified so as to read as follows:

The judgments of the district court in favor of Jacob Nelson, D. J. Wyncoop, and Ella E. Wyncoop, and D. J. and Ella E. Wyncoop, and Philip L. Reese, administrator, etc., be and they hereby are affirmed with costs to the said appellees; and that the judgments in favor of intervening libelants, Emma B. Miller, E. W. Vest and Ida F. Richardson, be and they are hereby affirmed, as against the Oregon Investment Company, with costs, and that they be and they are reversed as against L. S. J. Hunt and John Collins, with costs to said stipulators; and that the judgments in favor of the intervening libelants, Thomas Foran and John Rankin, be and they are hereby reversed with costs to the appellees, and that as to them this cause is remanded to the district court for further proceedings, without prejudice to the right of the court below in its discretion to treat the intervening petitions of said Foran and Rankin as independent libels, and to issue process thereon against the steamship Willamette, or upon amendment against her owners, or to take such other proceedings therein as justice may require.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Montana, ex rel. THOMAS
CRUSE SAVINGS BANK, Appt.,
v.

Alexander P. GILLIAM, Sheriff of Jefferson County.

(.....Mont.....)

A statute extending the time for redemption upon the sale of mortgaged premises does not impair the obligation of the contract made by a pre-existing mortgage.

(March 16, 1896.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the District Court for Jefferson County denying a writ of mandamus to compel the delivery of a deed to property which it had purchased at sheriff's sale. Affirmed.

Statement by De Witt, J.:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the district court rendered in favor of the respondent, upon dismissing the relator's application for a writ of mandamus. Relator in the district court, asked for the writ commanding the respondent, who was sheriff of Jefferson county, to execute and deliver to it a deed of real estate sold upon judgment foreclosing a mortgage upon the same. The petition set forth that on January 5, 1892, George S. Kennedy and wife executed to relator, to secure an indebtedness, a mortgage upon the real estate described in the petition; that on March 5, 1895, relator commenced an action to foreclose the mortgage, in which action judgment was rendered July 2, 1895. The judicial sale took place August 3, 1895. Six months having expired on February 4, 1896, the relator demanded a deed from the respondent, the sheriff. The respondent refused to make the deed, alleging as a reason that the time for redemption was one year instead of six months, and that the deed was not due until August 3, 1896. These facts were all set up in the petition, and were by the district court considered insufficient upon which to issue the writ of mandamus. The contention is based upon the fact that, when the mortgage was given, the redemption period under the law was six months. On July 1, 1895, the law went into effect which made the redemption period one year. The respondent, the sheriff, stood upon the statute as enacted, and refused to make the deed. The appellant's contention was that the statute of July 1, 1895, was unconstitutional and void as to this mortgage, in

NOTE.—Statutes extending mortgagor's right of possession on foreclosure of pre-existing mortgages.

The above case, following that of Beverly v. Barnitz (Kan.) ante, 74, clearly recognizes that the question involved is a Federal one on which the decision of the United States Supreme Court is the ultimate authority. After the publication of Beverly v. Barnitz the Supreme Court of the United States, in Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. —, 41 L. ed. —, reversed the decision of the Kansas supreme court and held the Kansas statute unconstitutional.

The Montana statute considered in the above case of STATE, THOMAS CRUSE SAV. BANK, v. GILLIAM is like the Kansas statute in extending the time for redemption upon a sale of mortgaged premises. It extended the time, which under the previous law was six months, to one year, while the Kansas statute extended it to eighteen months, but the principle involved in the two cases is the same. If, as we suppose, the Montana statute extended also the mortgagor's right to the possession and use of the premises without compensation. That was the effect of the Kansas statute, but is not expressly stated in the above case respecting the Montana statute.

The conclusion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Barnitz v. Beverly is expressed in the opinion of Mr. Justice Shiras as follows: "We hold that a statute which authorizes the redemption of property sold upon foreclosure of a mortgage where no right of redemption previously existed, or which extends the period of redemption beyond the time formerly allowed, cannot constitutionally apply to a sale under a mortgage executed before its passage." The opinion proceeds to discuss the subject as follows: "Under the law, as it existed at the time when the mortgage was made, after a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, the purchaser was given actual possession as soon as the sale was confirmed and the sheriff's deed issued. Thereafter the mortgagor or the owner had no possession, title, or right in any way to the premises."

The Kansas statute contained another provision which does not appear in the Montana statute, or at least is not discussed in the above case of STATE, THOMAS CRUSE SAV. BANK, v. GILLIAM. That section in the Kansas statute provided that real estate once sold upon order of sale, special execution, or general execution should not again be liable for sale for any balance due upon the judgment or decree upon which the same was sold or any judgment or lien inferior thereto and under which the holder of such lien had a right to redeem. Upon this the opinion of Mr. Justice Shiras says: "Obviously, this scheme of foreclosure renders it necessary for the mortgagee to himself bid, or procure others to bid, the entire amount of the mortgage debt, and thus, in effect, release the debtor from his personal obligation."

Proceeding to discuss both provisions of the statute, the opinion further says: "It seems impossible to resist the conviction that such a change in the law is not merely the substitution of one remedy for another, but is a substantial impairment of the rights of the mortgagee as expressed in the contract. Where, in a mortgage, an entire estate is pledged for the payment of a debt, with right to sell the mortgaged premises free from redemption, can that be valid legislation which would seek to substitute a right to sell the premises subject to an estate or right of possession in the debtor or his alienees for eighteen months?"

"Martha Barnitz held Kirtland's notes secured by a mortgage. Of course, under the contract thus created, she had a right to resort to other property of the debtor to make up for any deficiency remaining after the sale of the real estate mortgaged. As the law stood at the time the contract was made, if Kirtland, either by purchase at the sale or by subsequent transactions, became the owner of the real estate, Mrs. Barnitz had a legal right to again levy thereon, and subject it to the payment of the remnant of her debt. But this law, that it was enacted after the mortgage was given, and thus impaired the obligation of the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee. Mont. Const. art. 3, § 11, and U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10.

Mr. T. J. Walsh for appellant.

Messrs. Toole & Wallace for respondent.

De Witt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As noted in the statement, the only question in this case is whether the statute, having been enacted after the mortgage was executed, and which extended the time for redemption, is constitutional. Does the statute impair the obligation of the contract, or does it reach the remedy only? This case has been very ably briefed by learned counsel on each side. Appellant's counsel opens the discussion with the following appropriate remarks: "This vexed question, involving the subtle distinction between the obligation of a contract and the remedy for its enforcement, after slumbering for a period, has gained prominence on account of recent legislation in some of the Western states looking to some extent to the relief of the debtor classes. The great financial distress that has led to the enactment of these laws has inclined the courts to carefully examine the decisions heretofore made upon the subject, the provisions of the Federal and state Constitution in relation to it, and solve the question in favor of the just and humane objects sought to be accomplished, if the same comes within the domain of legitimate legislation. Hence we keenly appreciate the desire of this honorable court to maintain in letter and spirit the salutary provisions of the fundamental law of the land, by preserving intact the obligations of a contract, and at the same time avert the disappointment of reasonable expectations that would result from declaring such laws invalid. The important question here to be determined is whether the act of the legislative assembly of this state in extending the time of redemption upon the sale of mortgaged premises impairs the obligation of the contract, or so operates upon the remedy, only, as to afford suitable and proper means for its enforcement." It is quite true, as counsel suggests, that we are deeply sensible of the importance of the constitutional question here involved; and, furthermore, we may add that we approached its consideration with a strong preconception against the constitutionality of the statute. Chief Justice Martin, of the supreme court of Kansas, said, in his able discussion of a similar statute: "From causes upon which all do not agree, and that we need not discuss, the burden of a private debt has been enormously increased of late as we have seen, in express terms declares that this real estate shall not again be liable for sale for any balance due upon the judgment or decree under which the same is sold. This cannot be held to mean merely that the land is sold free from existing liens, for such would be the legal effect of the sale at any rate. It plainly means that the balance of the debt shall not be made out of the lands, even if and when they became the property of the debtor. Nor can it be said that such a question is not now before us. What we are now considering is whether the change of remedy was detrimental to such a degree as to amount to an impairment of the plaintiff's right; and, as this record discloses that the sale left a portion of the plaintiff's judgment unpaid, it may be fairly argued that this provision of the act does deprive the plaintiff of a right inherent in her contract. When we are asked to put this case within the rule of those cases in which we have held that it is competent for the states to change the form of the remedy, or to modify it otherwise, as they may see fit, provided no substantial right secured by the contract is thereby impaired, we are bound to consider the entire scheme of the new statute, and to have regard to its probable effect on the rights of the parties.

"It is contended that the right to redeem, granted by the new statute, only operates on the purchaser, and not on the mortgagee as such. This very argument was foreseen and disposed of in Bronson v. Kinzie (42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143), where this court said:

"It [the new act] declares that, although the mortgaged premises should be sold under the decree of the court of chancery, yet that the equitable estate of the mortgagor shall not be extinguished, but shall continue for twelve months after the sale; and it moreover gives a new and like estate, which before had no existence to the judgment creditor to continue for fifteen months. If such rights may be added to the original contract by subsequent legislation, it would be difficult to say at what point they must stop. An equitable interest in the premises may, in like manner, be conferred upon others; and the right to redeem may be so prolonged as to deprive the mortgagee of the benefit of his security, by rendering the property unsalable for anything like its value. This law gives to the mortgagor, and to the judgment creditor [meaning creditors other than the mortgagee], an equitable estate in the premises, which neither of them would have been entitled to under the original contract; and these new interests are directly and materially in conflict with those which the mortgagee acquired when the mortgage was made. Any such modification of a contract by subsequent legislation, against the consent of one of the parties, unquestionably impairs its obligations, and is prohibited by the Constitution."

"The judgment of the supreme court of Kansas is reversed, and the cause remanded to that court, with directions for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

There can be no doubt from this opinion that the Supreme Court of the United States condemned the provision extending the time for redemption and for the mortgagor's possession and use of the premises as unconstitutional, irrespective of the other provision of the statute exempting the property from subsequent sale for the same debt, although the latter made a further and independent impairment of the mortgagee's rights. The result must be that the Montana case here reported is in effect overruled by Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. —, 41 L. ed. —.

The case of State, German Sav. & L. Soc., v. Sears (Or.) 43 Pac. 485, which is cited in the above Montana case, is reported to be still before the court on application for rehearing. This case, like the Montana and Kansas cases, is in effect overruled by the decision of the United States Supreme Court, while the Idaho case of Wilder v. Campbell, 43 Pac. 677, is thereby established as correct, since the Idaho court held a similar statute unconstitutional as to pre-existing mortgages.

B. A. R.

years. Farms valued five years ago both by borrower and lender at $3,000 or $4,000, and mortgaged for $1,000, are now knocked down under the sheriff's hammer for less than the mortgage debt, the accumulations of a lifetime being often swept away by the shrinkage, and this through no fault of the mortgagor." Beverly v. Barnitz, 55 Kan. 466, ante, 74. The commercial and political conditions mentioned by the Kansas decision did not exist in this state to any such extent as they did in Kansas, and we do not know that the considerations which, it seems, moved the Kansas legislation, influenced ours. Our statute came in with the new Codes of 1895. But the suggestion even of the existence of any sentiment such as that expressed in the Kansas decision causes a court to hesitate and scrutinize closely, lest it may be that a statute passed in times of financial depression has overridden the fundamental law of the Constitution; for the Constitution is for good times and bad times, for adversity as well as prosperity. Entertaining such views, and having planted them in the decisions of this court upon the constitutional questions which we have heretofore considered, we approached the present matter with the apprehension that perhaps the legislature had yielded to some sentiment of commiseration for the present debtor, and forgotten the chart and compass of the Constitution. But this apprehension has been gradually and effectually dissipated by a renewed study of the cases from Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529, to Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, and in the state courts, the cases of State, German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Sears (Or.) 43 Pac. 482, and Beverly v. Barnitz, supra. The learning and reasoning upon this question have recently been thoroughly collected in the cases from Kansas and Oregon above noted.

While the question here presented is one under the state Constitution, it is also a Federal question, under the Constitution of the United States; and so viewing it, we are of opinion that the Kansas and Oregon decisions are sustained by the cases in the United States Supreme Court decided subsequent to Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143; McCracken v. Hayward, 43 U. S. 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397, and Howard v. Bugbee, 65 U. S. 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 753. The Kansas and Oregon cases above mentioned ably review the history of this question as it has been treated in the United States decisions, especially the following cases: Sturges v. Crowninshield, and Bronson v. Kinzie, supra; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365; Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 27 L. ed. 466; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 215, 6 L. ed. 606; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. ed. 132; Curtis v. Whitney, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793; Seibert v. United States, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161; Clark v. Reyburn, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 318, 19 L. ed. 354; United States v. Quincy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 403; Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415.

Cordially concurring, as we do, with the decisions of the Kansas and Oregon courts, and finding our reasons for such concurrence in the same United States Supreme Court cases discussed by them, and they having so thoroughly occupied the field before we reached it, it would seem, perhaps, to be an affectation of original research to write at much length in this opinion. But the importance of the case probably demands some setting forth of our reasons for holding that the United States Supreme Court decisions are to the effect that our law of 1895 is not unconstitutional.

While our Constitution forbids the legislature from passing a law impairing the obligation of contracts, the same inhibition is found in the Constitution of the United States; and therefore the Supreme Court of the United States is the court of final resort upon this question. That being true, we now base our decision upon the doctrines as announced by the United States Supreme Court since Bronson v. Kinzie and some of the cases immediately following it. Passing that early landmark in the history of the construction of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, to wit, Sturges v. Crowninshield (1819) 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529, in which Chief Justice Marshall, as said by Chief Justice Martin of Kansas, "well-nigh exhausted the subject," we encounter Bronson v. Kinzie (1843) 42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143, that much quoted, canvassed, approved, and criticised case. There were two points in that case, but there is only one with which we have now to do. It was there held that a law passed subsequent to the execution of the mortgage in question, which law gave the mortgagor twelve months in which to redeem, was void under article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the United States. The case came from the state of Illinois, where the common-law view of the nature of a mortgage fully obtained. Upon this point, Chief Justice Taney, in rendering the decision, said: "We proceed to apply these principles to the case before us. According to the long-settled rules of law and equity in all of the states whose jurisprudence has been modeled upon the principles of the common law, the legal title to the premises in question vested in the complainant, upon the failure of the mortgagor to comply with the conditions contained in the proviso, and at law he had a right to sue for and recover the land itself." Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 318, 11 L. ed. 145. There was nothing new in McCracken v. Hayward, 43 U. S. 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397, or Howard v. Bugbee, 65 U. S. 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 753. They were decided upon the authority of Bronson v. Kinzie. But the common-law view of a mortgage no longer obtains in most of the states of the Union. As shown in Beverly v. Barnitz, and State, German Sav. & L. Soc., v. Sears, supra, that idea is "cut up by the roots;" and with us, in these days, a mortgage is simply a security for a debt. It is so in Montana. Therefore, whatever reason, if any, Bronson v. Kinzie obtains from the fact that the legal title to the real estate vested in the mortgagee upon failure of the mortgagor, disappears from the case when it is sought to apply it as an authority upon the modern commercial view that a mortgage is simply a security. Therefore, the contract between mortgagor and mortgagee, before us for examination, was not in any way a conveyance of the real estate, but was simply a contract that the mortgagor would pay a certain sum of money. The mortgage was given as security for such payment. The payment was not made. The foreclosure of the security was had. The relator here bought on foreclosure sale. The relator then ceased to be a mortgagee, and became a purchaser, and the debt was extinguished in whole, the sale being for a sum sufficient to pay the whole debt. Then, and then only, did the relator approach the relations of owner of the real estate. Never before did it have anything like a title. Therefore it was simply a creditor of the mortgagor, having a security upon the mortgagee's real estate. By purchase at the foreclosure sale, it first came into proprietary relations to the real estate; and at the same time its position as mortgagee ceased wholly, and its position as creditor as well. Therefore, we must proceed to look at the relator, formerly a mortgagee, as now a purchaser, and ascertain whether a law had been passed impairing the obligation of the contract of purchase. We are satisfied that the decisions of the United States Supreme Court hold that the obligation of that contract was not thus impaired. The law was passed before relator purchased, and he purchased under the law of 1895, existing upon the day of his purchase. Upon this subject the opinion in the Kansas case above cited says: "The act of 1893 does not operate upon the rights of the mortgagee until his claim as such has been extinguished, either wholly or to the full extent of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor, it is true, may redeem the land within a certain time by payment of the sale price and interest thereon; but this is a matter wholly between him and the purchaser. If the mortgagee or judgment creditor has deemed it best to become the purchaser, and thus voluntarily change his relation, it is difficult to see how he has any just cause of complaint. By the mortgage contract, the real estate was pledged for the payment of the debt, subject to the equity of redemption. The state, by its proper officer has, at his instance, sold the property for its payment, and after he gets the proceeds of the sale he has no further claim upon that property, although he may proceed by general execution to obtain any balance due by seizure and sale of other property." Beverly v. Barnitz, 55 Kan. 466, ante, 74. See also the following remarks in the Oregon case: "The relator obtained no title or interest in the mortgaged premises by its contract, but only a lien thereon, and the right to subject the property to sale to satisfy its claim; and this right has in no way been altered, abridged, or postponed by the act of 1895. How can it be claimed, then, that this act impairs any of the obligations of the contract? It is true 'the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement' forms part of the obligations of the contract, but the act of 1895 does not postpone or lessen the duty of performance by the mortgagor. It does not diminish his duty to pay his debt at the time and in the manner agreed upon, or take away or interfere with any of the mortgagee's remedies to enforce its lien by subjecting the mortgaged premises to sale.

The statute existing at the time the mortgage was given, prescribing the time in which the mortgagor shall redeem from the purchaser at a foreclosure sale, if one should be made, had no relation whatever to the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee. The purchaser's right depends upon the law in force at the time of the sale, and why shall he be permitted to appeal to the contract between the debtor and creditor? He is not a party or privy to such contract in any sense; and it does not alter the case that the purchaser and mortgagee are one and the same person. The relator ceased to be a mortgagee when the sale occurred. Thenceforward its interest in the property was as purchaser, and not as mortgagee; and to require it, as such purchaser, to conform to the law in force when the purchase was made, does not in any way impair the obligations of the mortgage contract." State, German Sav. & L. Soc., v. Sears (Or.) 43 Pac. 485.

But, as this is finally a Federal question, the decisions of the United States Supreme Court are more important as authority. We therefore turn to Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648. In that case the court had under consideration a statute which reduced the rate of interest on redemption of the real estate sold on a mortgage foreclosure from 10 per cent to 8 per cent. Mr. Justice Harlan, rendering the opinion, said: "The statute in force when the mortgage was executed, prescribing the rate of interest which the amount paid or bid by the purchaser should bear, as between him and the party seeking to redeem, had no relation to the obligation of the contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The mortgagor might, perhaps, have claimed that his statutory right to redeem could not be burdened by an increased rate of interest beyond that prescribed by statute at the time he executed the mortgage. But, as to the mortgagee, the obligation of the contract was fully met when it received what the mortgage and statute in force when the mortgage was executed, entitled it to demand. The rights of the purchaser at the decretal sale, if one was had, were not of the essence of the mortgage contract, but depended wholly upon the law in force when the sale occurred. The company ceased to be a mortgagee when its debt was merged in the decree, or at least when the sale occurred. Thenceforward its interest in the property was as purchaser, not as mortgagee. And to require it, as purchaser, to conform to the terms for the redemption of the property as prescribed by the statute at the time of purchase, does not, in any legal sense, impair the obligation of its contract as mortgagee. It assumed the position of a purchaser, subject, necessarily, to the law then in force defining the rights of purchasers." A kindred subject is treated later in the United States Supreme Court, as to which Chief Justice Martin, of Kansas, says: "In Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, it was held that a state was not forbidden by the clause of the Federal Constitution under consideration from legislating, within its discretion, to reduce the rate of interest upon judgments previously obtained in the courts, the judgment creditor having no contract whatever in that respect with the judgment debtor. The court held that the state law regulating the rate of interest on judgments formed no part of the contract." Beverly v. Barnitz, 55 Kan. 466, ante, 74.

The United States Supreme Court decision in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, seems to us to be conclusive. It holds that, when the relator became a purchaser, it was like any other purchaser, and had been divorced from its character as mortgagee, and must be treated as a purchaser solely; and, as such purchaser, the law does not impair the obligation of any contract which it as such had. That the whole history of decision in the United States Supreme Court since the time of Bronson v. Kinzie has been to the effect that the law which we are now considering does not impair the obligation of the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee when the latter becomes the purchaser is ably shown by Mr. Chief Justice Martin in his review of the history of the question in the United States Supreme Court. After reviewing in detail and quoting from the decisions of that court (listed above in this opinion) which have treated a large number of statutes, and held them not to be within the inhibition of article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the United States, the learned chief justice of Kansas makes the following able summary of the position of the United States Supreme Court upon this subject: "If a state legislature may totally abolish imprisonment of the debtor as a means of enforcing payment; if it may shorten the statutes of limitation; if it may reasonably extend and enlarge exemptions of property from sale for the payment of debts; if, where coupons are by law made receivable in payment of taxes, it may require such payment in the first instance in cash, to be afterward refunded, and the coupons taken up; if it may reduce the rate of interest on redemption from decretal sales; if it may lessen the interest on former judgments; if it may require the holder of a tax-sale certificate to give three months' notice of the time when a tax deed will be applied for; if it may require transcripts of judgments against a particular city to be filed in a certain office as a prerequisite to payment, and deplete the courts of the power to grant remedies in force when the judgments were rendered; if it may reduce the terms of court, in number and duration; if it may amend the laws as to attachments, garnishments, and receivers so as to take away causes therefor which were before sufficient; if, in short, 'it may regulate at pleasure the modes of proceeding' in the courts, and all this as to existing obligations,—it is difficult to frame a process of reasoning which would forbid it from so regulating the procedure upon the foreclosure of mortgages as to define and make more certain the indefinite estate impliedly reserved by every mortgagor of real property, and called into active existence only by the foreclosure, and which indefinite estate is extended by the Federal courts of equity for six months in the first instance, and afterward 'once or oftener,' in the discretion of the chancellor, according to the circumstances of the case. Even if the statute in question should impair the remedy formerly grantable upon a foreclosure, yet it should not for this reason be held invalid, for there is no constitutional inhibition against an impairment of the general remedies for the enforcement of broken contracts; and each and every of the special examples just cited is an instance of the impairment or abolition of a remedy allowable and in force when the obligation was incurred. Upon the whole, it does not appear that any judgment or decision of the Supreme Court of the United States requires this court to hold said chapter 109 unconstitutional, whatever may have been remarked by judges in delivering their opinions; for it is quite impossible to harmonize all that they have said, although the judgments or decisions may not be in conflict. Even doubt of the constitutionality of said chapter is not sufficient to warrant its judicial condemnation, especially by this court. In such case it seems better to leave such condemnation to the final arbiter,—supreme court of the union." Beverly v. Barnitz, 55 Kan. 466, ante, 74.

It thus appears to us that, if the precise question now before us should come to the United States Supreme Court for decision, that court would, by force of its own prior decisions, hold that this law under consideration is not unconstitutional. That seems to us to be settled by the later cases, notwithstanding the case of Bronson v. Kinzie. Indeed, we are wholly unable to distinguish Bronson v. Kinzie from Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, so that both decisions can stand together. We do not understand why extending a redemption period and reducing the rate of interest upon redemption are not exactly alike as to the impairing or not impairing the obligation of the mortgage contract. We venture the suggestion that, if one statute impairs the obligation, the other does also. The United States Supreme Court, in the later case of Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, does not attempt to distinguish its decision from the earlier decision in the case of Bronson v. Kinzie. In fact, the opinion in the later case does not mention the earlier case. We can reach no other conclusion than that Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman overrules the principle of Bronson v. Kinzie. If our view in this respect is correct, then the force of the Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman case is the stronger as a present authority, by reason of the existence of the modern view that a mortgage is security only. Therefore, under the views promulgated by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, the statute which we are considering does not impair the obligation of the contract, unless it be upon one other ground which we have not before mentioned, and which we will now examine.

It is suggested that the obligation of the contract is impaired, in that the extending of the time for redemption would tend to reduce the number of bidders and the amount of bids at the mortgage foreclosure sale. This contention of the relator was decided adversely to him in the Kansas and Oregon cases above discussed. But, without quoting from them, we will again seek the authority which must be final with us on this question. The same contention was made in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, and was disposed of by

Mr. Justice Harlan in the following language: "But it is insisted that the value of the mortgage contract was impaired by a subsequent law reducing the interest to be paid to a purchaser at decretal sale; this, upon the assumption that the probability of the debt being satisfied by the decretal sale of the property was lessened by reducing the interest which any purchaser could realize on his bid in the event of redemption. In other words, the reduction by a subsequent statute of the interest to be paid to the purchaser would, it is argued, necessarily tend to lessen the number of bidders seeking investments, and thereby injuriously affect the value of the mortgage security. In support of this proposition counsel cites several decisions of this court in which it is ruled that the objection to a law, as impairing the obligation of a contract, does not depend upon the extent of the change it effects; that the laws in existence when a contract is made, including those which affect its validity, construction, discharge, and enforcement, enter into and form a part of it, measuring the obligation to be performed by one party and the rights acquired by the other; and that one of the tests that a contract has been impaired is that its value has been diminished, when the Constitution prohibits any impairment at all of its obligation. Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547; McCracken v. Hayward, 43 U. S. 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397; Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 47 U. S. 6 How. 301, 12 L. ed. 447; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793. These decisions clearly have no application to the case now before the court. The laws with reference to which the parties must be assumed to have contracted when the mortgage was executed were those which in their direct or necessary legal operation controlled or affected the obligations of such contract. We have seen that no reduction of the rate of interest, as between the purchaser of mortgaged property at decretal sale and the party entitled to redeem, affected, or could possibly affect, the right of the insurance company to receive, or the duty of mortgagor to pay, the entire mortgage debt, with interest as stipulated in the mortgage up to the decree of sale; and the result of the sale in this case shows that the company, as mortgagor, has received all that it was entitled to demand. The reduction of the rate of interest by the act of 1879 was by way of relief to the mortgagor and his judgment creditors, and in no sense an injury to the mortgagee. When that act was passed there was no person to answer the description or to claim the rights of a purchaser; consequently, no existing rights were thereby impaired. That the reduction of interest to be paid to the purchaser would lessen the probable number of bidders at the decretal sale, and thereby diminish the chances of the property bringing the mortgage debt, are plainly contingencies that might never have arisen. They could not occur unless there was a decretal sale, nor unless the mortgagee became the purchaser, and are too remote to justify the conclusion, as matter of law, that such legislation affected the value of the mortgage contract." Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 65, 27 L. ed. 653.

Having thus satisfied ourselves that the question before us is practically settled against the relator by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and that Bronson v. Kinzie has by later decisions lost all of its authority upon the question at bar, we shall affirm the judgment of the district court in dismissing the petition for a writ of mandamus, and shall hold directly, upon the merits, that the sheriff's deed in this case can be demanded only at the expiration of one year after the sale. Code Civ. Proc. 1895, § 1235.

We have not omitted to examine the case of Wilder v. Campbell, in the supreme court of Idaho, January 31, 1896 (43 Pac. 677). That case took a view the opposite to that which we here hold. There is nothing in the Idaho case to cause us to change our views. In fact, we are of opinion that this important question was not fully or fairly presented to the Idaho court. The opinion seems to approve Bronson v. Kinzie, but does not mention Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman or Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925. It also cites with approval Watkins v. Glenn, 55 Kan. 417, ante, 82, but does not mention the overruling of that case in Beverly v. Barnitz, 55 Kan. 466, ante, 74.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hunt, J., concurs.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

William L. DENNY et al., Appts.,
v.
STATE of Indiana, ex rel. Ferd E. BASLER.

(.....Ind.....)

1. An unconstitutional apportionment law may be declared void by the courts notwithstanding the fact that such statute is an exercise of political power.

NOTE.—For constitutionality of apportionment acts, see State, Morris, v. Wrightson (N. J.) 22 L. R. A. 548, and cases cited in footnote thereto; also Fletcher v. Tuttle (Ill.) 25 L. R. A. 143; State, Guerguin, v. McAllister (Tex.) 28 L. R. A. 523, and People, Henderson, v. Westchester County Supers. (N. Y.) 30 L. R. A. 74.
31 L. R. A.

2. A valid apportionment law can be passed only once for each enumeration period under Const. art. 4, § 4, providing for an enumeration every six years, and § 5, requiring an apportionment at the session next following the enumeration.

3. The court can take notice of its own records in another case either on suggestion of counsel or upon its own motion.

4. An unconstitutional apportionment law, even if it has been declared constitutional by one of the lower state courts, will not preclude the enactment by the legislature of a valid apportionment law.

5. The approximation to the dual constitutional requirements of county representation and proportionate popular representation in the enactment of an apportionment law by the legislature is not reviewable by the courts except for gross abuse of discretion, providing both objects contemplated in the Constitution are kept in view.

6. The requirement that legislative apportionment shall be according to the number of inhabitants, in Const. art. 4, § 5, is no less binding than the provision that counties united in a district must be contiguous, or that no county for senatorial apportionment shall be divided.
7. Judicial notice will be taken of a census or other enumeration made under the authority of the state or of the United States, and also of the location, boundaries, and juxtaposition of the several counties of the state.
8. The obligation of observing a constitutional requirement as nearly as possible in an apportionment act becomes a binding force under the Constitution when the exact requirement cannot be observed.
9. The injustice of allowing but one representative to a county while other counties having a similar population are given a voice in the election of more than one representative must be avoided wherever possible.
10. A judgment in an action brought by an individual is not conclusive in a subsequent action to which he is not a party nor even a relator, although both cases turn on the constitutionality of a statute.
11. The people of the state cannot be estopped from asking for a determination of the validity of an apportionment law by failing to bring the matter to a decision until after a legislature has been chosen in pursuance of the act.
12. The rule of stare decisis does not bind the court in deciding the constitutionality of a statute where no property right or contract between the parties is involved.
13. Double districts in which two or more counties are grouped and given a voice in the election of more than one senator or representative, when neither of them has a voting population equal to the ratio for one senator or representative cannot be created under Const. art. 4, § 5, requiring apportionment among counties according to the male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age, and § 6, providing that where more than one county shall constitute a district they must be contiguous.

(January 30, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Sullivan county in favor of relator in a proceeding brought to enjoin defendants from proceeding with an election under the law of 1895, and to compel them to do so under the law of 1893. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harris & Douthitt, W. A. Ketcham, Attorney General, A. W. Wishard, W. D. Bynum, Miller, Winter, & Elam, and M. E. Forkner for appellants.

Messrs. David Turpie, Jason B. Brown, Alonzo G. Smith, Lamb & Beasley, Elliott & Elliott, and Charles A. Korbly, for appellee:

The time when, or within which, a thing may lawfully be done, even when fixed by an ordinary statute, is mandatory and of binding 31 L. R. A.

force and obligation where the rights and interests of the public, the people at large, are affected or concerned therein.

Potter's Dwar. Stat. p. 255.

There are no circumstances, either of law or fact, which could warrant an act of apportionment by the legislature of 1895.

Every general assembly from 1851 to 1891 has uniformly acquiesced in the limitation of time as to the apportionment act, confining it to the "session next following each period of such making such enumeration." And this construction concerning the time of apportionment, so long approved and obeyed, is a thing of the highest moment to be considered in this decision.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. p. 74, § 67.

Constitutional provisions are always presumed to be mandatory—not directory, unless expressly made so by their terms.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. p. 86, § 79.

The enumeration at the short period of six years was intended to secure a readjustment and correction of the inequalities which might arise from the growth or shifting of the population within that period.

Parker v. State, Powell, 133 Ind. 189, 18 L. R. A. 567, 579.

It cannot be tolerated that a legislature, by a mere omission to perform its constitutional duty at a particular session, could thereby prevent for another period the apportionment provided for by the Constitution.

People, Carter, v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 491, 16 L. R. A. 836.

The legislature of 1893 in enacting an apportionment law, did not do so upon mere presumption, inference, or conjecture, or upon their own opinion or judgment. Their action was based upon a decision of the highest court of judicature in this state,—that the last act of apportionment, that of 1891, was unconstitutional and void, and that the duty of passing another such act devolved upon the next succeeding legislature, which was that of 1893.

The legislature of 1895 could not lawfully repeal an existing apportionment law for the purpose of enacting another at a time not authorized by the Constitution.

Where parties sought to be enjoined are public officers, acting under the color of lawful authority, their declarations as to their purpose are sufficient to warrant the writ of injunction. The complainant need not wait until steps are taken or any acts are done in the premises.

McArthur v. Kelly, 5 Ohio, 154; Erwin v. Fulk, 94 Ind. 237; Caulbe v. Hultz, 118 Ind. 16.

The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit or controversy.

State, Lamb, v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 17 L. R. A. 145; People, Carter, v. Rice, and Parker v. State, Powell, supra.

The express mention of the time is a constitutional command excluding the performance of the act at any other time or in any other mode than that prescribed, for the reason that the express mention of one time implies the exclusion of all others.

Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 328, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93; Williamsport v. Kent, 14 Ind. 306.

If the action of the various departments of government, acquiesced in by the people, with reference to the passage and enforcement of such laws, has been uniform, unbroken, and long continued, it will form a contemporaneous construction of the Constitution, which the courts are bound to respect.

Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 203; Slavson v. Racine, 13 Wis. 393.

There is no room for an argument that the provisions of our Constitution are anything less than limitations upon the legislative authority of the state.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 78.

A provision of the Constitution will be held mandatory and binding upon the legislature when its terms leave no room for the exercise of discretion.

Greencastle Twp. v. Black, 5 Ind. 566; Potter's Dwarr. Stat. 220-230; Weyer v. Second Nat. Bank, 57 Ind. 198.

Howard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action brought by the appellee to enjoin the appellants, as clerk of the circuit court, sheriff, and auditor of Sullivan county, from proceeding in their several official capacities to hold the election for 1896, for the senators and representatives in the general assembly, under or pursuant to the provisions of the apportionment act of 1895, and for a writ of mandate to compel said officers to proceed to hold said election for senators and representatives under the apportionment act of 1893. The material allegations of the complaint are: That the appellee's relator is a citizen, taxpayer, and voter of said county, and appellants are the proper officers to give notices, and furnish forms and ballots, and take other steps for the holding of general elections in said county; that the general assembly of 1891, that being the proper time therefor, passed an apportionment act for the election of members of the general assembly, which act was afterwards declared unconstitutional by the supreme court; that afterwards the general assembly of 1893 passed an apportionment act, which is still in force, and is the only valid law on the subject; that in 1895 the general assembly passed another apportionment act, which is unconstitutional, and at the same time, by a second act, repealed the apportionment act of 1893, which repealing act is also unconstitutional and void; that by the act of 1893 said Sullivan county was entitled to one representative in the general assembly, and, conjointly with Vigo and Vermillion counties, was entitled to one additional representative, which said provision was useful and beneficial to said relator; that by the pretended act of 1895 Sullivan county is entitled to but one representative in the general assembly, and the relator is thereby deprived of the rights, privileges, and benefits of said act of 1893; that, before bringing this action, said relator made demand of appellants that they proceed under and in accordance with the apportionment act of 1893 in performance of their duties in regard to the election of senators and representatives at the general election in November, 1896, but that appellants refused so to act, and asserted that they would proceed under said apportionment act of 1895; and that the appellants will so proceed unless enjoined therefrom, and will, unless commanded so to do by the court, fail, neglect, and refuse to proceed under and in accordance with that act of 1893, to the great and irreparable damage of appellee's relator. It is further expressly alleged that the provisions of the act of 1893 "are constitutional and valid enactments," and that the act of 1895 "is unconstitutional, fraudulent, abortive, void, and of no validity or effect for any purpose whatever." The prayer was that injunction and mandate might issue. There was a waiver by appellants of service of process, and of the issuing of an alternative writ of mandate, and thereupon they tendered their demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. Appellants refusing to plead further, the court entered judgment against them upon the demurrer. By the terms of the decree the appellants were enjoined from proceeding for the election of senators and representatives under the apportionment act of 1895, and were commanded to exercise their official duties in relation to said election under the provisions of the act of 1893. The overruling of the demurrer to the complaint is the only error assigned on the appeal.

L. R. A.

Appellee asserting the invalidity of the apportionment act of 1895, and asserting the validity of the act of 1893, and asking for an injunction against the enforcement of the former, with a mandate compelling an enforcement of the latter, it becomes necessary, in order to decide what, if any, relief appellee is entitled to, first to determine the constitutionality of the act of 1895. If that is found to be a valid law, the case is at an end, for the appellee is not entitled to any relief. If, however, the act of 1895 should be found invalid, then it would become necessary to determine the constitutionality of the act of 1893; for, unless the act of 1893 should be found constitutional, the appellee would not be entitled to the writ of mandate in favor of its enforcement, even though he might be entitled to have an injunction against the enforcement of the act of 1895. The first reason given for the demurrer is that the court has no jurisdiction over or of the subject-matter of the action. The basis for this contention is that the making of an apportionment for membership in the general assembly is an exercise of political power, which has been committed by the people to the wisdom of the legislative branch of the state government; that the courts may not, therefore, interfere with the exercise of this power by the general assembly. This, no doubt, speaking in broad terms, is true, but only to the extent provided by the people in framing the Constitution. The courts cannot say how an apportionment shall be made, nor even whether any apportionment shall be made. The province of a court, however, is to say what the law is. If, then, a law is enacted, and its validity is brought in question in a proper proceeding, and before a court of competent jurisdiction, the court must render judgment. That is the proper and necessary function of a court. The sole standard by which the validity of a law is to be tested is the fundamental law of the land. The Constitution is the supreme law, to be respected alike by legislators and by courts. The people, through their Constitution, having thus set up the courts as the tribunals to pronounce upon the validity of all laws, and having made the Constitution itself the standard by which such laws shall be tested, the courts must determine whether any given law is in conflict with the Constitution or not. They have no choice in the matter, but must pronounce judgment; and it can make no difference what the law may be. An apportionment law that violates the Constitution must be held invalid, quite the same as any other. The question is, not what is the character or subject of the law, but whether it is in conflict with the Constitution. In recent years, the validity of apportionment acts has been before the courts of last resort in at least four states, besides our own. In two of these cases, in Wisconsin and Michigan, the courts held the acts unconstitutional. In the other two cases in New York and Illinois, the acts were held constitutional. But in all four cases, as well as in this state, the courts, without hesitation, assumed jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the controversy. State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561; Id., 83 Wis. 90, 17 L. R. A. 145; Houghton County Supers. v. Blacker, 92 Mich. 638, 16 L. R. A. 432; Giddings v. Blacker, 93 Mich. 1, 16 L. R. A. 402; People, Carter, v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 16 L. R. A. 836; Parker v. State, Powell, 133 Ind. 173, 212, 18 L. R. A. 567, 579; People, Woodyatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451. See, in particular, the forcible argument of Elliott, J., in his concurring opinion in Parker v. State, Powell, here cited. In State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, supra, citing Houston v. Moore, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 19, the power and duty of American courts to determine the constitutionality of all laws is asserted in this clear and vigorous language: "By a course of judicial decisions, reaching from the earliest history of American government to the present day, without a dissenting voice, it has been adjudged that courts of justice have the right, and are in duty bound, to test every law by the Constitution, as the fundamental and paramount law of the land, governing all derivative power and the exercise thereof. The judicial department, with us, is the proper power under the Constitution to declare the constitutionality of a law; and every act of the legislature contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Constitution will be declared by the courts null and void, and of no effect whatever." In so far, then, as an apportionment law violates the provisions of the Constitution, it will, as in the case of any other act of the legislature, be declared void. It need hardly be said, however, that, in so far as the Constitution itself has made the apportionment of the state discretionary with the legislature, that discretion, as in any other case, will be scrupulously respected by the courts. Yet more, since the subject of apportionment is, in general, in charge of the legislative department of the government, wherever there is no positive injunction in relation to this matter laid upon the general assembly by the Constitution, there, also, the courts will refrain from substituting their discretion in place of the discretion of the legislature. Where, however, the Constitution has spoken, and the voice of the legislature is heard in conflict with the voice of the Constitution, there the courts will interfere, and will sustain the paramount law of the land as against its violation by the legislature; and to determine whether, in any given case, the Constitution has been violated by an act of the general assembly, the courts will always take jurisdiction, whether the act be one for legislative apportionment, or for any other purpose.

The remaining reason given for the demurrer is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against appellants. The main question in the case as made by the pleadings, and as discussed by counsel in their briefs and in the oral argument, arises under this head, namely, whether, under the Constitution, any apportionment act could be passed at the time when the alleged apportionment law of 1895 was enacted. The appellee contends that, since the Constitution has fixed a time, once in six years, when an enumeration of the voters of the state shall be taken, and an apportionment of senators and representatives made by law, there is thereby created a limitation upon the power of the legislature to make such apportionment at any other time. The appellants argue, on the contrary, that, since the making of an apportionment is an exercise of political power, and hence committed to the legislative department in the general grant of power to that department, therefore the legislature may exercise this function at any time, and that the provisions of the Constitution requiring the enactment of an apportionment law at the beginning of each period of six years were inserted in the fundamental law so that such apportionment should be made at least once in six years, but were not intended as a prohibition upon the general assembly from making other apportionments as often as that body might deem best. This question, we think, notwithstanding the elaborate and able arguments of counsel for appellants, must be decided in favor of the contention of appellee. It is provided, in section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, that "the legislative authority of the state shall be vested in the general assembly, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives." If there were no particular provisions in the Constitution in regard to the subject of legislative apportionment, there is little doubt that, under the foregoing full and unrestricted vesting of legislative power in the general assembly, that body might in its discretion, and at any time, enact laws for the apportionment of its members among the several counties or other districts of the state, or might, perhaps, provide that all the members of the legislature should be chosen by the people at large. But § 4 of the same article provides that "the general assembly shall, at its second session after the adoption of this Constitution, and every six years thereafter, cause an enumeration to be made of all the male inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years." And § 5 of said article contains the following provision: "The number of Senators and representatives shall, at the session next following each period of making such enumeration, be fixed by law, and apportioned among the several counties, according to the number of male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age in each." We think the legitimate and necessary conclusion to be drawn from these two sections is that an enumeration of the voters shall be taken once every six years, and that, upon such enumeration as a basis, the apportionment of members of the legislature shall be made at the next ensuing session of the general assembly, and only then. Otherwise, and (as said by this court in Parker v. State, Powell, supra) "unless the general assembly is to be governed by the enumeration, when made, in the matter of districting the state for legislative purposes, the enumeration is a useless ceremony, and an unnecessary expense. The purpose in requiring the enumeration is to fix the number of voters in each county, at the time the apportionment is made, in order that the legislature may form districts so as to secure to each voter, as nearly as may be, an equal voice with every other voter in the state, in the selection of senators and representatives.

The enumeration at the short periods of six years was intended to secure a readjustment and correction of the inequalities that might arise from the growth or shifting of the population within that period." In case, then, there is in existence a valid apportionment law, and one passed within the proper enumeration period, it may be confidently affirmed that an attempt to make another apportionment, and at a time further removed from the time of taking the enumeration, is a violation, not only of the spirit, but of the letter, of the Constitution, all of whose provisions are mandatory, unless by their own terms made directory or simply permissive. The fixing, too, by the Constitution, of a time or a mode for the doing of an act, is, by necessary implication, a forbidding of any other time or mode for the doing of such act. So it was said, in Morris v. Powell, 125 Ind. 281, 9 L. R. A. 326: "Where the Constitution commands how a right may be exercised, it prohibits the exercise of that right in some other way,"—citing Cooley, Const. Lim. 64. See also Williamsport v. Kent, 14 Ind. 306; Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272.

It follows, then, that counsel are in error when they argue that, because the legislature is not expressly forbidden to pass an act of apportionment at a time different from the time fixed for that purpose, therefore it may, by virtue of its general power to legislate, enact apportionment laws whenever it pleases. The Constitution of the state of Wisconsin, in its provisions for enumeration and apportionment, directs that, "at their first session after such enumeration, and also after each enumeration made by the authority of the United States, the legislature shall apportion and district anew the members of the Senate and assembly, according to the number of inhabitants." It was said by the supreme court of that state, in Slauson v. Racine, 13 Wis. 398: "In our Constitution there is no express prohibition against an alteration of assembly districts. And whatever limitation exists upon the power of the legislature in that respect is to be derived from the general scope and objects of the provisions of the Constitution concerning the apportionment of senators and representatives. But it may well be said that these furnish such a limitation, and that, when the instrument provides for an apportionment and organization of districts once in five years, this implies that it shall not be done at any other time. This would seem clear with respect to a general apportionment, and perhaps the same implication would extend to any particular reorganization of assembly or Senate districts, by any law passed directly for that purpose." Under our Constitution, an enumeration is provided for every six, instead of every five, years; and the implication that an apportionment law can be passed only once for each enumeration period, thus found by the supreme court of Wisconsin to be necessarily drawn from the words of the Constitution of that state, must also be drawn from the like words of our own Constitution. Since the Constitution thus provided that an enumeration of the voters of the state shall always be made as preliminary to the enactment of an apportionment, it is evident that the theory of the framers of the Constitution was that the valid apportionment can be made only after the taking of such enumeration, and that, when such valid apportionment is once made, it should stand until after the making of the next enumeration. They do not, of course, contemplate the enactment of an invalid apportionment, or one made in violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution. If, however, a valid apportionment were once made, it could not be made over again. Being a valid apportionment, to change it before another enumeration of the voters could but result in an invalid apportionment. Hence, it was provided that enumeration and apportionment should go together,—the one to be the complement of the other. When the enumeration should be taken, and the consequent apportionment made, the work would be complete, and would not, therefore, be repeated, in whole or in part, until the succeeding six-year period should come, when the dual work would again be done.

But counsel for appellants say that, even if it be true that an apportionment law can be passed but once for each enumeration period, yet, if no valid law has in fact been enacted, the continuing duty to pass such a law at the earliest time practicable always rests upon the lawmaking power until such valid apportionment is finally made. People, Carter, v. Rice, supra. Counsel says, further, that the last enumeration was taken in 1889; that at the next session of the general assembly thereafter, in 1891, an apportionment law was passed; that this law was adjudged unconstitutional by this court (Parker v. State, Powell, supra); that thereafter, in 1893; the legislature passed another apportionment law; that this apportionment law of 1893 was invalid for the same reasons for which the act of 1891 was held invalid; that the legislature of 1895 found this invalid act of 1893 upon the statute book, declared it unconstitutional, and repealed it, and then passed the act of 1895, now under consideration; that, the act of 1893 being unconstitutional, it was as if no apportionment law was in existence. Therefore, the continuing duty of enacting a valid apportionment law rested upon the legislature of 1895, and hence the act of 1895 was passed at a proper time, and is valid and constitutional. Whether the legislature of 1895 had authority to enact an apportionment law must depend, as we have already seen, upon the fact as to whether there was then in existence a valid apportionment law, passed within the current enumeration period. That legislature could not, by any act of its own, create the necessity for the enactment of another law on the subject, as by repealing the law already in existence. If the apportionment act of 1893 were, indeed, a valid law, it could not be repealed by the legislature of 1895; for, in case of the validity of the act of 1893, it would most certainly have been unlawful to enact any other apportionment law until the next enumeration period, and the legislature could not change this condition by an attempt to repeal such valid apportionment to make room for another law on the subject. Such further law on the subject would have been premature, and out of due time, as fixed by the constitutional mandate. The repealing act, therefore, which was passed in 1895, as preliminary to the enactment of the apportionment act of that year, was itself either a violation of the Constitution or else a vain and useless act, being the repeal of an invalid law. But, if the legislature of 1895 could not repeal a valid apportionment act passed in 1893, the question arises whether the legislature of 1895 could in any case pass an apportionment law. It certainly had the power to do so if there were, at that time, no valid apportionment,—if the act of 1893 were, in fact, an unconstitutional law. The ordinary and proper course to be taken to determine whether the act of 1893 was unconstitutional, or not, was, as in other cases, to apply to the courts. These tribunals were open for the consideration of the validity of this, as of any other, act of the legislature. As it is the province of the legislature to enact laws, and of the executive to enforce them, so it is of the courts to determine their validity. This would have been the fitting course, rather than to have the legislature itself cry out against the good faith of its predecessor, and to declare against the constitutionality of the very law under which it was itself elected. In this case the indelicacy of the legislative criticism of a preceding legislature is the more marked when we reflect that, as shown by the files of this court in the case of Wishard v. Lenhart (No. 17,385) 42 N. E. —, appealed from the Marion circuit court, that court had already found the act of 1893 to be a valid and constitutional law. It would have been more seemly, as well as more effective, to have passed that case to a final hearing, rather than to have acted in defiance of the decision already rendered by the circuit court.

31 L. R. A.

Some question having been made as to whether we can thus take notice of other records in this court in considering a case at bar, we may here remark that we have no doubt that this may be done, whether the court make such inspection of its own motion, or on the suggestion of counsel. See Washington & I. R. Co. v. Cœur d'Alene R. & Nav. Co. (No. 1) (decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, December 2, 1895) 160 U. S. 77, 40 L. ed. 346. But, apart from any consideration of propriety, the question recurs, Could the legislature of 1895 assume to determine for itself the constitutionality of the act of 1893, and, on such assumption of responsibility, proceed to pass another act of apportionment, leaving the courts to pronounce finally upon the question as to which of the two acts was constitutional? We have no doubt that the legislature of 1895 had this power. The members of that body took the oath taken by all those who perform official duties, namely, that they would support the Constitution. If those legislators believed, under their oaths, that there was no valid apportionment law in existence, based upon the last enumeration, it was their solemn duty to pass such a law. Their enactment of such a law was in itself, in effect, an appeal to the courts to decide whether they were mistaken or not, and to say which of the acts, if either, was the valid and constitutional law of the state. "Every department of the government," says Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations (chap. 4), "and every official of every department, may at any time, when a duty is to be performed, be required to pass upon a question of constitutional construction." And again, in the same connection, he says: "We shall find the general rule to be, that whenever action is taken which may become the subject of a suit or proceeding in court, any question of constitutional power that was involved in such action will be open for consideration in such suit or proceeding, and that as the courts must finally settle the particular controversy, so also will they finally determine the question of constitutional law." It may be admitted, then, that, as both the acts of 1895 and that of 1893 are before the court as acts of the legislature, in due form and duly authenticated, and the constitutionality or right of both is questioned, we must determine the validity of each. If, on such examination, one act is found valid, and the other invalid, the case is ended; so, also, if both are found invalid. If, however, both acts should, in all respects, except as to the date of enactment, be found to comply with the constitutional requirements, then it would follow, from what we have heretofore said, that, the act of 1893 being in itself a valid apportionment law, the legislature, in 1895, or at any other time prior to the next enumeration, could have no warrant, under the Constitution, to enact another apportionment law, and the act of 1895 would, for that reason alone, be void; while the act of 1893, being valid, would, during the enumeration period when it was passed, and until the passage of a valid apportionment act after the ensuing enumeration, be the sole law upon the subject of apportionment. It therefore becomes necessary, apart from any question as to the time of the making of either apportionment, to determine the constitutionality of the act of 1895 and also of the act of 1898. By section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution as we have seen, an enumeration of the voters of the state is to be taken once every six years. The ensuing sections (5 and 6) of the same article provide for apportionment as follows: "Sec. 5. The number of senators and representatives shall, at the session next following each period of making such enumeration, be fixed by law, and apportioned among the several counties, according to the male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age in each: provided, that the first and second elections of members of the general assembly, under this Constitution, shall be according to the apportionment last made by the general assembly before the adoption of this Constitution.

"Sec. 6. A senatorial or representative district, where more than one county shall constitute a district, shall be composed of contiguous counties; and no county, for senatorial apportionment, shall ever be divided."

It is clear, from these sections, that, in providing for an apportionment of members of the general assembly, two main objects were kept in view by the framers of the Constitution,—one being local county representation; the other, proportionate representation of all the people. The counties, as governmental subdivisions of the state, and the inhabitants, according to their number in each county, were to be represented. The striking and comprehensive language of the Constitution is: "The number of senators and representatives shall . . . be fixed by law, and apportioned among the several counties, according to the number of male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age in each." Either of these objects—county representation, or proportionate popular representation—might be attained in perfection, were it not for the necessity of also attending to the other object; but the design was that neither be neglected or sacrificed for the other. The most exact proportionate representation would be secured by making a single district of the state, and electing all the members by the people at large. Each voter would thus have his absolute and equal weight with every other voter in selecting the members of the general assembly. But, besides resulting in the admitted evil of making the general assembly solidly of one political party, at least so far as elected at the same time, and thus wholly stifling the voice of the minority, this exactness of proportionate representation would also be attained at the total sacrifice of local county representation. On the other hand, if county representation only should be considered, then proportionate representation of population in large and in small counties would be wholly lost sight of. To secure the fullest possible local county representation with the nearest proportionate representation of the voters in each county is the approximate result to be reached from these two requirements of the Constitution. The working out of this approximation is a practical problem, to be left to the patriotism and good judgment of the legislature, and hence not reviewable by the courts, except for gross abuse of discretion, and provided, only, that both objects contemplated in the Constitution be kept in view in the law enacted by the general assembly. People, Woodyatt, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451. By section 3 of article 4 of the Constitution it is provided that senators shall be elected for a term of four years, and representatives for a term of two years, from the day next after general election. And in section 3 of article 15 it is declared that whenever, either in the Constitution or in any law thereunder, it is provided "that any officer, other than a member of the general assembly, shall hold his office for any given term the same shall be construed to mean that such officer shall hold his office for such term and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified." Construing these two provisions of the Constitution together, it is apparent that the members of the general assembly remain in office only during the terms for which they were elected. Senators can under no circumstances hold office after four years, nor representatives after two years, from the day next after general election. So jealous were the people, in framing the Constitution, of the possible usurpation of power on the part of the legislature, that they thus expressly excepted members of the general assembly from that provision according to which all other officers are authorized to hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified. But, while the general assembly is thus prevented from any attempt at perpetuating its existence by extending the terms of office of its members, yet there would be but little thus gained or saved to the people if the legislature might, through an unequal apportionment, perpetuate its power by insuring the re-election of its members, or the election of new members who should be in sympathy with those engaged in usurping and perpetuating power against the will of the majority of the people.

The principle of proportionate representation has always obtained in Indiana, even from a time preceding the formation of the Constitution of the United States. From the passage of the ordinance for the government of the Northwestern Territory, July 13, 1787, out of which territory our commonwealth was afterwards formed, this principle of proportionate representation has been of the very essence of our local self-government. The ordinance of 1787 names proportionate representation in the same category with the writ of habeas corpus, trial by jury, and due process of law, as fundamental rights to which the people of this territory shall always be entitled. On the formation of our state government, in 1816, the Constitution then adopted retained, in article 3, the same principle of proportionate representation, based upon an enumeration of the inhabitants every five years. Finally, on the adoption of the present Constitution, in 1851, the principle was still continued. So that for over 100 years, the unvarying law of this territory and state has been, as affirmed by the Fathers of 1787: "The inhabitants of said territory shall always be entitled to the benefit of . . . a proportionate representation of the people in the legislature." It is true that the ordinance of 1787, and the Constitution of 1816, are no longer in force, only in so far as provisions of those instruments have been retained in our present Constitution. The principle of proportionate representation in the legislature has, however, been so retained, and consequently has been the law here during the whole period covered by those three charters of free government in Indiana. It is provided in the 2d section of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States that "the number of representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000, but each state shall have at least one representative." Under the first census, Congress, in obedience to this provision of the Constitution, fixed the number of representatives at 120. By this apportionment, Massachusetts was entitled to 15 representatives, with an excess of 25,327, for which an additional representative was given. Other states, also, having large fractions of population left after supplying their respective quotas of representatives, based on the given ratio, were each awarded an additional representative, while states having but a small excess were each denied an additional representative. President Washington, with the advice of Jefferson, Madison, and others, vetoed the bill, as in violation of the constitutional provision above set out, that "the number of representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000." The exact mathematical rule of apportionment, thus insisted upon in the beginning, proved unsatisfactory, inasmuch as it resulted in leaving a number of representatives unassigned, owing to the fractions of population left unrepresented after filling the quota to which the several states were entitled by reason of their full ratios of representation. The question continued to trouble Congress until 1832, when the rule adopted was that after each state was given one representative, and also the full number to which it should be entitled by reason of its population,—being one representative for each ratio,—the remaining representatives should be assigned, one each, to those states having the largest fractional remainders of population. This has since continued to be the law. In advocacy of the rule of approximation thus adopted, Mr. Webster, then in the United States Senate, said: "The Constitution, therefore, must be understood, not as enjoining an absolute relative equality, because that would be demanding an impossibility, but as requiring Congress to make an apportionment of representatives among the several states according to their respective numbers, as near as may be. If exactness cannot, from the nature of things, be attained, then the nearest practicable approach to exactness ought to be made. Congress is not absolved from all rule merely because the rule of perfect justice cannot be applied. In such a case, approximation becomes a rule. It takes the place of the other rule, which would be preferable, but is found inapplicable, and becomes itself an obligation of binding force." The Constitution of this state, like that of the United States, provides for an absolute rule of apportionment; not, as in some of our sister states, that the apportionment shall be "as nearly as may be," or "as nearly as practicable," according to the inhabitants of each county, but that it shall be, simply, "according to the number of male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age in each." Much, therefore, of what is said by the court of appeals of New York and the supreme court of Illinois in People, Carter, v. Rice, and People, Woodyatt, v. Thompson, supra, as to the discretion of the legislature in making apportionments, is inapplicable to the case before us. Our Constitution requires that legislative apportionment shall be according to the number of inhabitants, and that requirement is quite as binding as the injunction that a district formed of two or more counties "shall be composed of contiguous counties," or that "no county, for senatorial apportionment, shall ever be divided." One mandate of the Constitution must be respected as well as another, and, as Webster said, if the mandate cannot be absolutely obeyed, it should be observed at least as nearly as may be. "The nearest approximation to exact truth or exact right, when that exact truth or exact right cannot be reached, prevails in other cases, not as matter of discretion, but as an intelligible and definite rule, dictated by justice, and conforming to the common sense of mankind." While it is true, therefore, as already said, that the legislature has, and, in the nature of things, must have, large discretion in making an apportionment, yet, as held in Parker v. State, Powell, supra: "It cannot be successfully maintained that the incumbents of any department of the government have a discretion to disregard the Constitution of the state. . . . It is safe to say that when the acts of either of the three departments are in violation of the Constitution of the state, such acts are not within the discretion confided to that department."

Considering, then, the act of 1895 in the light of these principles, the main objection urged against it is what are called the "double districts;" that is, the grouping of two or more counties, neither or none of which has a voting population equal to the ratio for a senator or a representative, and giving to the district so formed more than one senator or representative. The court will take notice of a census or other enumeration made under the authority of the state or of the United States; also, of the location, boundaries, and juxtaposition of the several counties of the state. State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, supra. By the act of 1895 the counties of Randolph, Delaware, and Madison are grouped into one district, which is given two senators. By the enumeration of 1889, under which the apportionment of 1895 was made, there were in the county of Randolph 7,250 male inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years; in Delaware, 7,138; and in Madison, 8,010. The ratio, or average number of such voting inhabitants in the state entitled to be represented by one senator in the general assembly, was 11,020. None of the counties in this double district, therefore, had a voting population equal to the ratio for a senator, and yet each of them is allowed to vote for two senators. It was said in Parker v. State, Powell, supra, in speaking of Clark county, and also of Brown county, in relation to the apportionment of 1891,—each of those counties having a voting population less than the ratio for a senator: "When a county of that size has been assigned to a senatorial district, and given a voice in the election of one senator, it ceases, in our opinion, to be a factor in any legitimate scheme of apportionment for senatorial purposes." That, in the act of 1895, the scheme of apportionment by which this double representation was secured differed from the scheme or plan adopted in the act of 1891, can make no difference. The end attained is the same, whether it be done by a double district, or by two single districts. In either scheme a county having less than the ratio entitling it to be represented by one senator is nevertheless given a voice in the election of two senators. Indeed, the scheme adopted in the act of 1891 is the less objectionable. In that apportionment the counties of Clark, Scott, and Jennings, none of them having a population equal to the ratio, were joined in one district, and given a senator. So the counties of Clark and Jefferson neither with a population equal to the ratio, were formed into another district, and given a senator. If the four counties were put into one district, and given two senators, as they might have been, according to the scheme adopted in the act of 1895, the result could have been no more unjust than it was,—the four counties controlling the election of two senators by either plan. But in truth the plan adopted in the act of 1891 is the more nearly equitable, for the reason that, by making two single districts, instead of one double district, it might be possible for each district to elect a senator of its choice, notwithstanding the vote of the common county thrown in to control each district, whereas, if the four counties were thrown together, the combination would be sure to carry both senators. The plan of the act of 1891, condemned as it was (and rightfully so) by this court in Parker v. State, Powell, was yet nearer to the constitutional standard (local county representation) than is the double-district system of the act of 1895. So odious, indeed, has this double-district system been regarded, that in the Constitutions of many of the states it has been specifically forbidden, and the single-district system alone authorized, even so far as to require that a county entitled to more than one member should be divided into as many districts as there are members. The observations made in regard to the double senatorial district of Randolph, Delaware, and Madison apply also to the district made up of the counties of Clinton, Boone, and Montgomery, and also to that composed of the counties of Miami, Wabash, and Huntington. None of those counties had a voting population equal to the number fixed for one senator, and yet each is given a voice in the election of two senators. What is said of the double senatorial districts is likewise true of the double representative districts. The ratio for the election of a member of the house of representatives, according to the enumeration of 1889, was 5,510. The county of Perry had 4,152; Crawford, 3,076; and Orange, 3,454. None of these counties, therefore, had a voting population equal to the ratio for one representative; yet, by throwing the three into one district, each county was given a voice in the election of two representatives. The same may be said of the double representative district of Brown, Johnson, and Morgan, and that of Monroe, Lawrence, and Martin.

L. R. A.

It may be replied that, by thus throwing counties into a double district, equality of proportionate representation is more nearly secured, and the fractions of population over and above even ratios are reduced in number and amount. If this argument were good, it should be pushed further. The greater the number of counties grouped into one district, the fewer will be the fractions of excess in population, and the more exact will be the proportionate representation of the people in the general assembly. If the number of counties in a senatorial district, and likewise in a representative districts, were increased to 92,—being the whole number in the state,—the perfection of equal proportionate representation would be attained. But if the senators and representatives were thus elected by the people at large, and on one ticket for the whole state, there would, as we have already seen, be a total loss of local representation,—the most precious right of free government. The counties would be obliterated. Yet, as we have also seen, the Constitution provides for county representation, quite the same as for proportionate representation. The words used in section 5 of article 4, as already quoted, are: "The number of senators and representatives shall . . . be fixed by law, and apportioned among the several counties, according to the number of male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age in each." Local representation was deemed by the framers of the Constitution to be as necessary as proportionate representation. So the members of the general assembly were not only to be apportioned "according to the number" of inhabitants, but were to be apportioned "among the several counties," and according to the number of inhabitants "in each." The rule, as stated by Pinney, J., in State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, supra, citing Sedgwick, Stat. & Const. L. 200, and Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, § 23, is "that effect is to be given to every clause or word of a statute, and no word is to be treated as unmeaning if a construction can be legitimately found which will preserve it and make it effectual . . . and this rule is applicable with special force to written constitutions, in which the people will be presumed to have expressed themselves in careful and measured terms, corresponding with the immense importance of the powers delegated, leaving as little as possible to implication;" citing also Cooley, Const. Lim. 72, and numerous other authorities. In the section quoted from our Constitution, not only are "the several counties" named as entitled to representation, but particular attention is drawn to the representation of the inhabitants "in each" of the counties. And in section 6 of article 4 it is further provided that "no county, for senatorial apportionment, shall ever be divided." Regard for the integrity of the county, as a governmental subdivision of the state, is thus made an essential feature in every valid plan of apportionment.

The people of a county have common interests and objects, peculiar to themselves, and intimate public relations with each other. Hence, when the Constitution was formed, it was deemed of vital importance that the integrity of counties, in the formation of legislative districts, should be thus carefully guarded, "to the end that each county having sufficient population should have its own representatives in the legislature, chosen by its own electors, and them only, and owing no divided, perhaps conflicting, allegiance to any other constituency." True, because of the sparse population in certain parts of the state, it was, and is, necessary, in some cases, to include more than a single county in one district. This, however, is but a partial, though necessary, exception to the rule that each county is entitled to its own representative. See Chief Justice Lyon, in State, Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, supra. Each county, and each district consisting of two or more counties, and being the least number having a population equal to the numerical unit for representation in the general assembly, is entitled, absolutely, to one member in the legislature. Ibid. See also Parker v. State, Powell, supra. It is therefore apparent that in all the double districts formed by the act of 1895, although any one of the three counties so joined did not have a voting population equal to the ratio for a member in the general assembly, yet that any two of such counties being adjacent, and having together such sufficient population, were quite as much entitled to their senator or representative as any single county with such population would be. The Constitution protected those with such population from being overwhelmed by the unfriendly population of another county.

It may be urged that cases might arise where double districts would be necessary, in order to secure approximate equality in proportionate representation. It is certain, however, as we are satisfied, that other methods, less obnoxious to the requirement of the Constitution, can be resorted to in such extreme and exceptional cases, should they arise. In case of counties having a less voting population than the ratio of representation, and also in case of fractions of population left after giving the county the representation to which it is itself entitled, great discretion must, of course, be left to the legislature, in grouping such counties for representation. But in no case can a county having less than the ratio be so grouped with other counties as to have a voice in the election of more than one member of the general assembly, whenever it is possible to avoid it. And in disposing of such counties with population less than the ratio, and also in disposing of the fractions of excess of population over the ratio or ratios in other counties, as said by Chief Justice Morse in Houghton County Supers. v. Blacker, 92 Mich. 638, 16 L. R. A. 432: "There can be no legislative discretion, under the Constitution, to give a county of less population than another a greater representation." As in the apportionment for members of Congress, when the several counties have been given the representation to which they are severally entitled by reason of their full ratios, then the largest excesses over such ratios should receive first consideration. These are salutary rules, to be applied in every case where it is practically possible to do so.

But it may be said, when the legislature, in the exercise of its best judgment and discretion, has formed the several counties into single senatorial and representative districts, there may still remain large excesses of population over the ratios unrepresented. To this it may be answered, as said in Parker v. State, Powell: "When it is found that exact equality cannot be attained, where the integrity of the counties is preserved, approximation becomes a rule as binding upon the general assembly as any other rule fixed by the Constitution. . . . The Constitution requires that the state shall be reapportioned every six years according to the male inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years in each county. It contemplates the formation of districts, each embracing as nearly as possible an equal number of the electors of the state. But the rule requiring an approximation to equality forbids the formation of districts containing large fractions unrepresented where it is possible to avoid it, while other districts are largely over-represented." This rule of approximation, thus prominently set out in Parker v. State, Powell, as it is also repeated and insisted upon in this case, must, of course, be understood as entering into every rule laid down in relation to apportionment. As said by Webster, when the exact requirement of the Constitution cannot be observed, then the obligation of observing such requirement as nearly as possible becomes, itself, of binding force under the Constitution.

It is further urged against the apportionment law of 1895 that it violates sections 2, 3, and 7 of article 4 of the Constitution, by placing in districts having "holdover" senators certain counties which, under former apportionment, voted four years previously for senators, and should vote at the next election for successors to such senators, but which, under this apportionment, could not vote until two years later for senators; thus depriving the electors of such transferred counties from voting for senators oftener than once in six years, whereas they are entitled, under the Constitution, to vote for senators every four years. There can be little doubt that the transfer of counties from districts which would have elected senators at the next election thereafter to districts which would not elect until two years thereafter might become a source of great abuse of legislative discretion; and if it appeared that such abuse of discretion were gross or wanton, or indulged in merely to disfranchise voters of certain counties, allowing them to vote for senators but once in six years, while voters in other counties were permitted to vote for senators once in two years, the apportionment thus made might be declared invalid. While it cannot be said, as an abstract proposition, that such transfer of counties into "holdover" senatorial districts is, in itself, unconstitutional, because, if it were so held, it might be quite difficult, or even impossible with a due observance of other provisions of the Constitution, ever to rearrange the senatorial districts in any six-year period, yet, on the assumption that such an outrageous act of injustice had been attempted and carried out in an apportionment, merely to give to the people of one set of counties an undue advantage over the people of other counties, we could find no words too strong to express our condemnation of such abuse of legislative discretion, and for this reason alone would not hesitate to declare such a law invalid. But, having found it necessary to pronounce the act before us unconstitutional for reasons that admit of no uncertainty or doubt, we deem it unnecessary to further consider the abuse here suggested.

Some further unfair features of the act of 1895 are quite noticeable. For example, the county of Marshall, with a voting population of 6,150, or 640 over the ratio, is given but one representative, while the counties of Noble, Gibson, Daviess, and Hamilton, each with a population less than that of Marshall, are yet given, not only one representative, but also a voice in the election of another; thus violating the principle that a county of less population than another should not be given a greater representation. It need hardly be added that such favoritism and injustice should be avoided wherever possible. In the case of Daviess county, the additional representative was secured at the sacrifice of at least two other elements of a fair apportionment. The small excess in that county, 331, is merely to make contiguous, and so control the vote of, Knox and Dubois counties. Yet Dubois alone had nearly enough population to be entitled to a representative, and, with the excess in Knox, had more than enough to give the two counties such representative. The placing of Daviess with those two counties, being itself already assigned one representative, and throwing it between those counties, in a forced union, so as to control the election of a second representative, has in it no element of justice or fairness, provided only such result could possibly be avoided. A like wrong is done in thrusting Gibson between Pike and Vanderburgh, which could be justified only on the plea of absolute necessity. Other instances may be found, not so objectionable, perhaps, but which would be absent from a perfectly fair apportionment. Thus, it may be noted that the county of Tippecanoe had one full ratio, for which it was given a representative, with an excess of 4,340, for which it was given another representative, while the county of Tipton, with 4,886 voting inhabitants, was refused a separate representative.

The unconstitutionality of the apportionment act of 1895 being therefore evident from the provisions of the Constitution, and from the principles established by the courts, and particularly by this court in the case of Parker v. State, Powell, supra, it remains, in order to determine whether the relator was entitled to the relief demanded by him, to inquire as to the constitutionality of the act of 1893.

The unconstitutionality of this act is readily apparent, both from what we have said as to the act of 1895, and also from the decision in the case of Parker v. State, Powell. In the first place, there are two double representative districts. Neither Dubois, Martin, Orange, nor Lawrence county had a population equal to the ratio for a separate representative, yet each of them, by being joined in one district, was given voice in the election of two representatives. By simply applying the principles and arguments urged by counsel for appellee against the double districts formed by the act of 1895, we could but make a like holding as to the unconstitutionality of this double representative district formed by the act of 1893. The district of Adams, Jay, and Blackford is even more objectionable. Neither Adams nor Blackford was alone entitled to a representative, though both together would have been entitled to one, while Jay alone was entitled to a representative, yet all these were joined, and given two representatives. So, in the senatorial apportionment, the county of Clark, which did not have a voting population equal to the ratio for one senator, was yet joined in one district to Scott and Jennings, and in another to Jefferson, and thus given a voice in the election of two senators. This act, also, as does that of 1895, offends against the principle that a county of less population than another should not be given a greater representation, unless it should be absolutely necessary to do so. The county of Shelby, with a voting population of 6,545, being 1,035 over the ratio, and the county of Dearborn, with a voting population of 6,382, being 872 over the ratio, are each given one representative, and also a voice in the election of another, while the counties of Randolph, Delaware, Boone, Wabash, Huntington, and Grant, each with a greater voting population than either Shelby or Decatur, are given each one representative only. A graver violation of this principle is found in the case of the counties of Harrison, Ripley, Franklin, Sullivan, Putnam, and Tipton, each having a voting population less than the ratio, but each of which is given a representative, being all that they could be entitled to; yet each of those counties is also given a voice in the election of an additional representative. The district consisting of Ripley, Franklin, and Union is the most objectionable of this class, for the reason that Union, the only county of the district not already fully represented, had only 1,976 voters, and could not, therefore, by its own slight population, uphold the representative.

The offense of the legislature of 1893, as also of the legislature of 1895, against the commands of the Constitution, is the more reprehensible from the fact that the decision of this court in Parker v. State, Powell, had then been made, and many of the violations of the Constitution made in both those acts are shown to be such in that decision. Much, therefore, of what we have said as to the assumption of unlawful power by the legislature of 1895 is equally applicable to the legislature of 1893.

To all the objections thus made to the constitutionality of the apportionment act of 1893, counsel for appellee make but one reply. They gravely contend that the constitutionality of the act of 1893 has been adjudicated, and the act declared constitutional. This contention is based upon the judgment of the Marion circuit court in the case of Wishard v. Lenhart, to which we have heretofore referred and the appeal from which judgment (No. 17,385) was dismissed in this court, on motion of the appellant, November 27, 1894. The purpose of that action was to test the constitutionality of the apportionment act of 1893; and by the judgment of said circuit court, rendered upon demurrer to the complaint, the act was, in effect, held to be a valid law. At furthest,—and we should hesitate to give it that force without special plea,—that decision could be controlling only within the jurisdiction of the court making it, and between the parties to that suit. The binding force of such a decision, as said in 5 Chicago L. J. 863, quoting from Judge Cooley, goes only to this extent, namely: "A decision once made in a particular controversy, by the highest court empowered to pass upon it, is conclusive upon the parties to the litigation and their privies;" and again: "The doctrine of stare decisis, however, is only applicable in its full force within the territorial jurisdiction of the court making the decision." Indeed, it is by no means clear how it was intended by counsel that the judgment here referred to should be treated as a former adjudication of the questions at issue in the case at bar. In the first place, the judgment has not been set out in the complaint, nor has it been in any way specially pleaded. Neither has it been pleaded on appeal, even if such plea could be made on appeal. Eckert v. Binkley, 134 Ind. 614, 623. But, even if such judgment were pleaded, it would seem that there could be no question of former adjudication entertained, as counsel urge. "Before the rule of former adjudication can be invoked it must appear that the thing demanded was the same; that the demand was founded upon the same cause of action; that it was between the same parties, and found for one of them against the other in the same quality. The party must not only be the same person but he must also be suing in the same right." Kitts v. Willson, 140 Ind. 604. See the learned work of Judge Van Fleet on Former Adjudication (chap. 11), and generally. It is enough, on this feature of the question, that in the case in the circuit court, Albert W. Wishard was the party plaintiff, while in the case at bar 31 L. R. A.

the plaintiff was the state of Indiana, on the relation of Ferd. E. Basler. The parties plaintiff were not the same, and for this reason alone the rule of former adjudication cannot apply. See Glenn v. State, Clore, 46 Ind. 368; Maple v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51. In the former of these cases it was held that a judgment in an action brought by Margaret Close against William Glenn could not be considered as a former adjudication of the issue in an action brought in the name of the state of Indiana, on the relation of Margaret Close, against William Glenn, although the facts were precisely the same in both cases. In the two cases now under consideration, it will be remembered that Albert W. Wishard, the plaintiff in the former action, is not a party, nor even a relator, in the case at bar. Neither do we think there is any estoppel here, as in the case of Vickery v. Hendricks County Comrs. 134 Ind. 554, to which we are referred. There, the party bringing suit to enjoin a levy of taxes to pay for bonds issued on purchase of a toll road, had waited until he received the benefit of the bonds before asking the court to declare unconstitutional the law under which they were issued. Here, while there may be some question of private or personal benefit, yet the issue before the court is much broader. The action concerns all the people of the state, in their most enlarged and sacred relations of citizenship and government, and the case cannot be tied up with the purely private rights of any one. It is true that an action to test the constitutionality of the law, if brought at all, should have been pressed to a final determination in the first place, and before the election of the present legislature, which is but a de facto body, in case the law of 1893, under which it was chosen, is invalid. Yet the people of the state, in their sovereign capacity, cannot for such reasons be estopped from asking for a determination of the validity of a law under which it is now proposed that they shall elect their next legislature. When the people of the state appear at this bar with such an issue, there can be no question of estoppel. The inquiry is one reaching to the foundations of government. While, then, all respect will be given to the judgment of the circuit court in this, as in every other, case, yet we cannot seriously entertain the contention that such adjudication of a constitutional question is of binding force in this court. More than this, no property right or contract between the parties being involved, it will not be considered that the rule of stare decisis requires that, in deciding so grave a matter as that of the constitutionality of an act of the legislature, we should be bound by even our own former decisions. In such a case, as forcibly said by Chief Justice Bleckley in Ellison v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 691, the maxim for a supreme court, "supreme in the majesty of duty as well as in the majesty of power," is not stare decisis, but fiat justitia. Let this decision be right, whether other decisions were right or not. In Walsh v. State, Soules, (at last term) (Ind.) 41 N. E. 65, involving the constitutionality of the fee and salary act of 1891, this court did not hesitate to overrule its own decision, as to the validity of the same law, in State Board of Comrs. v. Boice, 140 Ind. 506, when satisfied that the decision first rendered was erroneous. See further Robinson v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307; also, the exhaustive discussion of this subject in State, George, v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 222, 26 L. R. A. 345, and authorities there cited.

We are therefore of opinion that both the apportionment act of 1895, and also that of 1893, are unconstitutional and void, and, consequently, that the appellee was not entitled to the relief demanded by him in his complaint, and which was awarded him by the decision of the trial court. This court, in the case of Parker v. State, Powell, while deciding that the apportionment acts of 1891 and 1879 were both invalid, yet expressly held that the constitutionality of the intermediate act of 1885 was not before the court for adjudication, and accordingly refrained from making any decision in regard to it. Neither has the constitutionality of the apportionment act of 1885 been questioned in the case at bar. Consequently, that act is the last, and perhaps the only, expression of the legislative will upon the subject of apportionment, and under which senators and representatives may be chosen at the general election of 1896, unless the governor should see fit to call a special session of the legislature to pass a new apportionment law.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the circuit court to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Hackney, Ch. J., concurring:

While giving my full concurrence to the conclusion of the principal opinion, it is my purpose to add one or two thoughts to what my associate has well said:

This suit, in form and effect, disaffirmed the constitutionality of the apportionment act of 1895, and affirmed the constitutionality of that of 1893. The decree of the lower court, by forbidding steps under the act of 1895, and commanding that such steps, towards the biennial election of this year, be taken under the act of 1893, held the law of 1895 to be void, and that of 1893 to be valid. The question of the correctness of this holding of the trial court, thus involving both of said laws, is before this court. The act of March 5, 1895, repealing that of 1893, and the other act of that date, reapportioning the state, have been considered in the principal opinion—and properly, in my judgment—as one act, since by the Constitution it was not contemplated that the general assembly could, by repealing an apportionment act, deprive the people of the right to choose their representatives, and could not supplant an apportionment act, properly enacted, excepting at the sexennial periods. The two acts mentioned were passed concurrently, and could have been separated only in the hope that, if the second should not stand, the first should have the effect to repeal the law of 1893, and require the next general assembly to be chosen under some prior law, or under some law which might be enacted by a special session made necessary by the absence of any apportionment law. The only remaining alternative would be that the people should be without a law under which to choose the next general assembly,—an alternative probably not contemplated when these acts were passed, and one which the framers of the Constitution certainly never intended should arise. That it was intended to carry down the act of 1893 at all hazards is manifest, not only from the express repeal of that act, but also from the language of the preamble to the repealing act. It is declared therein that the act of 1893 is unconstitutional, and was intended by the general assembly which passed it to be unfair, unequal, in violation of the Constitution and in disregard of a decision of this court. While thus assuming the judicial function of declaring an act of the general assembly unconstitutional, and while assuming the effect of that declaration to carry down the law of 1893, it is, by the last paragraph of the preamble, expressly conceded and declared to be the province of the courts to pass upon the constitutionality of laws. The effect of this preamble is the question in this case. It voices the conclusion of its authors that the power to enact an apportionment law, out of the sexennial period, depends upon the nonexistence of a constitutional law apportioning the state; hence, the express declaration that the law of 1893 was unconstitutional. There is but one other possible construction of the preamble, and that is that its authors desired simply to challenge the integrity of those who had preceded them in the high office of legislators, and who had taken an oath to support that Constitution, which is said by this preamble to have been wilfully violated. This latter construction is not essential to the principal object,—the passage of a new apportionment act. The former construction was regarded as essential to that end, and stands in this case as the justification for reapportioning the state before the period contemplated by the Constitution. As said in the principal opinion, and as practically conceded by the closing paragraph of the preamble, the declaration that the law of 1893 was void was beyond the authority of the general assembly, was the exercise of judicial power, and is now without force. It is even more than this: It is a declaration that those who made it held their places as members of the general assembly alone by virtue of the very law declared by them to have been void and of no effect. These considerations are pertinent, not only to a decision of the question of the power of the general assembly to exercise judicial functions, but they are of moment in looking to the consequences which may follow such exercise of power, and the possible consequences of this proceeding. All tribunals of organized society accord to precedent respectful observance, and general obedience, unless such precedent is palpably at variance with justice, morals, or the fundamental law. Especially do the members of society owe this observance and obedience to the written laws. None rest under this obligation more fully than those who make and those who execute the laws. It is the precedent established by this court in the Parker Case, 138 Ind. 178, 212, 18 L. R. A. 567, 579, which is urged by the appellants to overthrow the law of 1893, and by which, in a great measure, we are controlled in passing upon that and the act of 1895. No tribunal can maintain long the respect of society, if it may wantonly, or even with indifference, reverse to-day its action of yesterday. This is true whether that tribunal is judicial or legislative. The same rule which is certainly our guide should be the guide of other co-ordinate departments of the government. Finding the act of 1893 upon the statute books, and bearing in mind that no valid act could be passed at that period, in the absence of the conclusion that the act of 1893 was void, it was assumed and declared that such act was void. If this may be done in any case, it may be done in every case, and the legislature may be found repealing its enactments at each succeeding session. The spirit of the Constitution forbids this with reference to apportionments, and tolerates it only in the event that such conclusion is unmistakably correct.

One of the consequences of the law of 1895 was to require judicial investigation and decision as to which of two laws should be observed by the people. Both could not stand. The first being valid, there could be no authority for the second. Another consequence was that it supplanted a law no more objectionable, under the Constitution, than itself. Looking beyond the mere partisan advantage to be gained by the enactment of either law, what shall become of the principle of local self-government, and the prerogative of proportionate representation? It is a more than important question. It is, in view of the present situation, startling. There is, by the invalidity of the acts of 1893 and 1895, no apportionment law since that of 1885 which has not been found, upon judicial investigation, to have violated the Constitution. The law of 1879—the last before the act of 1885—was held, in the Parker Case, to be unconstitutional. When the acts of 1893 and 1895 fail, where shall the people look for the apportionment—a necessary prerequisite—upon which to elect the next general assembly? It may be said that the governor will convene the last-chosen general assembly in special session for that purpose. While the enactments of merely de facto legislators are generally upheld for the peace and good order of society, it may be seriously questioned whether one chosen under a void law is a de facto officer continuously for the mere purpose of keeping the office filled. A merely de facto officer is not usually entitled to hold for a full term, in an office whose functions are in continuous operation when a de jure officer is chosen during such term. De facto officers get no power or authority from the acts they perform, but the principle which supports the acts of such officers is that the public finding him in actual possession of the office, and dealing with him under circumstances of reputation and color which would lead men to suppose they were legal officers, such dealings are validated on 31 L. R. A.

the ground of public policy. But there are authorities, though we have no occasion to apply them in this illustration, to the effect that, when the want of authority in such officer to perform the acts in question becomes notorious, the reason for the de facto doctrine ceases. An essential feature of the doctrine would seem to be that it is considered only with reference to past acts, and not as justifying further acts, and the continued right to occupy the office, where the duties of the office are not in continuous exercise, but at the close of a session cease forever, unless specially called into action before new officers convene in regular session again. This would not only suggest the doubts arising to influence the governor in calling or declining to call together persons who had occupied de facto an office not in continuous operation, and one which, it has become notorious, they held without the sanction of law, but as suggesting also the possible right of the people to elect at the next election de jure senators to represent them, instead of those chosen under a void law. Another fact which might be influential upon the mind of the executive, as to his duty to call a special session of the general assembly, is the fact that at the regular session, while condemning the act of 1893 for its violation of the Constitution, another law was enacted as grossly violating the same principles of that sacred instrument. If the special session should repeat the disregard of existing enactments and the decisions of the courts, no relief would come, and it would be less anarchistic to deprive the people of a constitutional choice by affirmative legislation than by no legislation. But, I apprehend, the governor would be slow to call a special session when the act of 1885 stands upon the statute book unchallenged, and when this court, in the Parker Case, where the question was made, expressly declined to declare it unconstitutional, though the act of 1879 and that of 1891 were both held void. I should probably say, however, that the governor, in discharging his duty, has the same power, subject to the same limitations, to regard existing apportionment laws as constitutional or unconstitutional that the general assembly had.

It is insisted, however, that by the Constitution an apportionment law becomes, by the lapse of time, inoperative after six years, and that, therefore, all acts prior to 1891 have expired. There can be but little doubt that the command of the Constitution is mandatory and exclusive, in that it requires an apportionment at each six-years period, and forbids it at other times. It is no less clear, in my judgment, that, as maintained in the principal opinion, the duty enjoined is continuing, and may be discharged subsequently, if not discharged as commanded. This conclusion renders another conclusion inevitable, and that is that the choice of the people is a right to be exercised upon the rule of apportionment existing at the time the neglected duty should have been performed. If this were not so, there would never be a legislature following that which had neglected its duty to supply the basis for choosing the next. I cannot believe that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the surrender by the people of the power to elect representatives to the general assembly at the expiration of a sexennial period, in the event of a failure to enact a law, or the enactment of an invalid law. If it had been intended to make the continuance of this power dependent upon legislative action, there was no reason for the mandatory provision of the Constitution as to apportionment. The whole subject would have been left with the legislative department of the government. Nor can I believe it intended that, in the absence of a new legislative apportionment, the reserved right to elect an assembly was to be exercised upon some basis to be determined by the masses. Such a rule would be simply a substitute for a constitutional provision, and its enforcement, where party spirit becomes so intense as it does with us, would be fraught with difficulties certainly never intended to be left unguarded by constitutional restrictions. The assembly of 1855 found no enumeration upon which to make an apportionment as then required, and in the election of 1856 the assembly was chosen upon the prior apportionment. The assembly so chosen, at its session in 1857, without enumeration, apportioned the state, and without question, and without further apportionment, the assemblies following that session were elected under that apportionment until Gov. Morton, in January, 1865, called the attention of the session then sitting to this long-continued failure of duty. At no time in the history of the state has an assembly been chosen upon a ratio adopted by common consent, further than that, where the legislature has failed to adopt an apportionment, elections have been held under the last preceding apportionment, without objection, thereby giving construction to the Constitution in accordance with the view now suggested, namely, that the act of 1865 is the last apportionment which stands unquestioned, and is that upon which the next election must be held, if that law remains unquestioned. That an apportionment does not lapse by the expiration of the six-years period, in the absence of a renewed valid apportionment, was, in effect, held in the Parker Case, where, as I have said, this court declared the act of 1891 unconstitutional, and passed back of the law of 1885, notwithstanding the rule that courts never passed upon constitutional questions when a case may be decided without doing so, and held unconstitutional the act of 1879, then standing through more than two periods of six years. Whether that act shall continue unquestioned; whether the people will follow the custom in such cases, and make their election under that law; or whether that custom will be abandoned, and public officers will refuse to follow it, and thereby defeat the constitutional object to convene an assembly in 1897,—depends upon the wisdom and patriotism of the people. I cannot believe that the governor would assume to declare the act of 1885 unconstitutional, to abandon the custom of the people construing the Constitution in like cases, and then, having done so, 31 L. R. A.

recall the last-chosen assembly, with doubts as to its further authority, for the enactment of a new law. If the act of 1885 should, in proper proceedings, be declared invalid, and no preceding valid act of apportionment should be found, the maintenance of the legislative branch of the state government would hang upon the doubtful proposition that the governor could convene in special session, from the members last chosen, a de facto general assembly. That such frightful consequences are possible from the character of legislation now under consideration would seem to demand serious reflection, and such patriotic submission to the welfare of the government as shall subordinate mere partisan advantage.

Jordan, J. :

I concur in much of the reasoning of the principal opinion of the court, and in the conclusion reached that the judgment below must be reversed. I also concur in the holding that the act of 1893, under the decision of this court in Parker v. State, Powell, 133 Ind. 178, 212, 18 L. R. A. 567, 579, is unconstitutional and therefore void. I am of the opinion that the formation of double districts should be condemned, and ought never to be resorted to by the legislature, in the enactment of an apportionment statute, unless in the sound discretion of that body, in some particular instance, on account of the situation of some counties and their voting population, it may become absolutely necessary to do so, in order to attain that equality of representation required by the organic law of the state. Or, in other words, I am not prepared to declare a "hard and fast rule" upon this question, from which the legislature can in no event depart.

BOARD OF CHILDREN'S GUARDIANS OF MARION COUNTY, Appl.,

r.

Gertrude SHUTTER.

(130 Ind. 268.)

1. A judgment is not necessarily void because the court bases it on a void statute, if the court has jurisdiction of the subject derived from other sources.
2. The guardianship, custody, and control of minors being within the jurisdiction of the circuit court in Indiana, its judgment committing an infant to the custody of a board of children's guardians is not void on collateral attack, although it assumes to act under an unconstitutional statute.
3. No notice to an infant under fourteen years of age is necessary in a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of the person of such child.

(June 15, 1893.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Marion County liberating petitioner from its custody upon habeas corpus proceedings. Reversed.

NOTE.—As to state guardianship of children, see note to Whalen v. Olmstead (Conn.) 15 L. R. A. 593.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. Fishback, B. K. Elliott, W. F. Elliott, S. P. Davis, C. L. Hare, and C. Martindale for appellant.

Messrs. Frank McCray and Samuel Ashby for appellee.

McCabe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee applied to the court below for a writ of habeas corpus against appellant, charging it with unlawfully restraining her of her liberty. An exception to the amended return to the writ by appellant was taken by appellee and sustained by the trial court, to which ruling appellant excepted, and failing to further amend its return, and electing to stand thereon without further pleading or action, it was adjudged that the alleged holding and detention of the appellee was without authority of law, etc.

The return, after reciting in detail the appointment of all the members of the Board of Children's Guardians by the circuit court of Marion county from the organization of the board to that time, giving the names of all the present members, as well as their predecessors, reads as follows:

That acting as such corporation as aforesaid of which the parties whose names have been hereinbefore set forth are members, said corporation, on the 1st day of March, 1893, in the January term for the year 1893 of the Marion circuit court filed in said court a petition as follows:

In the Matter of } Infant.
Gertrude Shutter. } Petition for Custody.

To The Honorable Judge of the Marion Circuit Court:

The Board of Children's Guardians of Marion county, a corporation existing under and acting by virtue of the laws of Indiana, respectfully petition the court and say that Gertrude Shutter is a female child, of thirteen years of age; that the father of said child is Shade A. Shutter, residing at Jeffersonville, Indiana; that the mother of said child is Bell Shutter, residing at 249½ W. South street, within Marion county, Indiana; that the child is in the actual custody and control of her mother, the said Bell Shutter; that the father of said child has abandoned his family; that said mother is in constant habits of drunkenness and low and gross debauchery; that said child is neglected and kept in associations which tend to her corruption and contamination.

Wherefore the Board of Children's Guardians of Marion county petitions the court to order that said child be committed to the custody and control of said board.

(Signed.) The Board of Children's Guardians,
By Nathaniel A. Hyde, President.

C. L. Hare,
Attorney for Petitioner.

This petition was duly verified.

The court, having inspected the petition, ordered that the writ for the custody of said child be issued thereon, and that the same be served upon Bell Shutter, the mother of said child, in Indianapolis, and Shade A. Shutter, at Jeffersonville, Clark county, Indiana, and 31 L. R. A.

directed that said minor child should be kept in the keeping of said board until the final order of the court upon said petition. Said writs were issued thereon and the said Gertrude Shutter was taken by the sheriff of Marion county on said writ, and delivered to the defendant said corporation. Said petition was set for hearing on the 11th day of March, 1893, and notice thereof was ordered to be given to said Bell Shutter and Shade A. Shutter, the parents of said child. And on the 4th day of March, 1893, by agreement of both parties, said Marion circuit court proceeded to hear and determine said cause on said petition, and having heard the evidence, and being sufficiently advised, said court entered in said cause the following order and decree, to wit: And afterwards, to wit:

On Saturday, the 4th day of March, 1893, the same being the 54th judicial day of the January term, 1893, of the Marion circuit court, the following additional proceedings were had in this cause:

"Comes the Board of Children's Guardians of Marion county, Indiana, by C. L. Hare, its attorney, and comes also Shade A. Shutter in person and by J. F. McCray, his attorney, and defendant, Bell Shutter, in person comes also, and now by agreement of all parties notwithstanding the return day of the writ issued herein, this cause is submitted to the court for trial, finding, and determination, and the evidence and argument of counsel having been heard, and the court having seen and inspected the petition herein, and being fully advised, finds that the allegations of said petition should be sustained; that said Gertrude Shutter is a female child of the age of thirteen years, and that she should be given to the custody of the Board of Children's Guardians.

"It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that the said Gertrude Shutter be, and she is hereby, given to the custody of the Board of Children's Guardians of Marion county, Indiana."

The return further shows that there was a motion for a new trial of said cause overruled, and a motion to modify the order was also overruled. The return further shows this judgment of said circuit court remains in full force unmodified, unreversed, and not appealed from. If that judgment is valid, the return was good, and the superior court in general term erred in affirming the judgment in special term adjudging the return insufficient.

It is earnestly insisted by appellee that the judgment of the circuit court in awarding her custody and control to appellant was void because it is asserted the act approved March 9, 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 261), as amended by the act approved March 9, 1891 (Acts 1891, p. 365), as amended by the act approved March 3, 1893 (Acts 1893, p. 283), under which the circuit court proceeded, is in conflict with several provisions of the state Constitution. It is maintained with earnestness and ability for appellee that "all judgments had and rendered under a law that is unconstitutional are void, and are as if no proceeding or judgment had been had or rendered."

Conceding that proposition, and yet counsel's contention is not established. If the law which gives the sole power or jurisdiction to the court to render the judgment is unconstitutional and void, and if without such a law in force the court would have no power to render the judgment in question, then the law being void, the judgment depending wholly on such void law would also be void. Where, however, the court has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the subject, derived from other sources than the supposed void statute, even though it may attempt to follow that statute, it does not necessarily follow that its judgment is void. A judgment founded on a statutory bond depending for its validity wholly on the statute which is unconstitutional and void, is not void and cannot be collaterally impeached because the statute is unconstitutional and void. Cassel v. Scott, 17 Ind. 514.

If the circuit court had jurisdiction over the subject and the parties, though it committed the greatest irregularities and errors, its judgment cannot be collaterally impeached therefor as this proceeding attempted to do. Davidson v. Koehler, 76 Ind. 398; Sauer v. Twining, 81 Ind. 366; State, Morrison, v. Morris, 103 Ind. 161.

The circuit court was a court of general jurisdiction. If it was not clothed with all the jurisdiction of the English court of chancery, it is within a branch of the equity powers of the circuit courts of this state that they have the superintendence of infants, idiots, and lunatics. McCord v. Ochiltree, 8 Blackf. 15.

The power to appoint guardians for infants, idiots, and lunatics conferred by the statute is merely declaratory of the power they already possessed. Gardner v. Gordon, 41 Ind. 92; Child v. Dodd, 51 Ind. 484; Nealis v. Dick, 72 Ind. 374; Lagrange County Comrs. v. Rogers, 55 Ind. 297; Erskine v. Whitehead, 84 Ind. 357; McKenzie v. State, Dickinson, 80 Ind. 547; McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 150; Bryan v. Lyon, 104 Ind. 227.

We therefore hold that the circuit court had ample power to deal with and adjudicate upon the subject of the guardianship, custody, and control of minors. The circuit court therefore had jurisdiction of the subject. It is earnestly contended that the circuit court acquired no jurisdiction over the person of the appellee, the minor whose custody and control were determined by the adjudication. If that is true, the judgment would be void the same as if jurisdiction over the subject was wanting. The ground upon which this contention is based is, that there was no notice or process served on the infant notifying her that such an adjudication affecting her was to take place. No notice appears to have been served upon her except taking her into custody by the appellant before the hearing of their petition. But there was process served on her mother and father, and a full opportunity afforded them to be heard against the granting of the petition, and they appeared at the hearing. But it is ably contended that that is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction over the person of the child. In some of the states no other notice than notice to parents, or if no parents, next of kin, is required to enable courts to appoint a guardian. Counsel for appellee have referred us to a large number of cases holding that a summons must be served on an infant the same as an adult, or the judgment will be void as to such infant. And in that class of cases it will be equally so if the infant was but a week old, and would be as unconscious of the reading of the summons to it as a block of wood, and yet the law imperatively requires the service of such summons on such an infant in that class of cases as much as upon an adult, or the adjudication will be void for want of jurisdiction over the person. But the class of cases they have referred us to, and that we have been discussing, is such only as where the judgment sought or the adjudication to be had is to deprive the infant of some property or right or to injuriously affect such minor in its rights of property. In that respect its rights are precisely the same as an adult; hence it must have the summons read to it precisely the same as an adult, though it does not understand a word of it. Its right to control its own actions is not like an adult. It is subject to either parental control, the guardian's control, or the control of the court or chance, or, in the absence of parent or guardian, on account of its lack of discretion and knowledge sufficient to guide its own actions for its own best interests. Hence, in a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian for it, the principle of the cases above referred to has no application whatever where it is under fourteen years of age. Such an appointment does not deprive it of any of its rights of property or injuriously affect its rights in that regard. It is but an officer of the court appointed to wield the power of an arm of a court of equity, and no notice to the infant is required. Kurtz v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 48 Minn. 339; Re Gibson, 154 Mass. 378; Reynolds v. Howe, 51 Conn. 472.

We therefore conclude that the circuit court had jurisdiction of the person of the infant and the subject matter of the adjudication. It may have erred in every step of those proceedings; we do not decide that it did, or did not, because such errors and irregularities cannot be inquired into on a writ of habeas corpus. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1119; Wentworth v. Alexander, 66 Ind. 39; Kinney v. Dickey, 125 Ind. 180; Turner v. Conkey, 132 Ind. 248, 17 L. R. A. 509; Smith v. Hess, 91 Ind. 424; Louery v. Howard, 103 Ind. 440; Davis v. Bible, 134 Ind. 108.

Such errors, if any were committed, must be relieved against just as in any other adjudication—by appeal, bill of review, or any method known to the law for relief against an erroneous judgment.

The conclusion we have reached not only finally disposes of this case in this court, but also in the court below without deciding anything whatever about the constitutionality of the statute so ably and exhaustively discussed by counsel on both sides. Under such circumstances, our duty does not require us to enter upon that field of investigation. Cummings v. Stark, 138 Ind. 94.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the exceptions to the amended return.

Petition for rehearing overruled November 15, 1894.

City of INDIANAPOLIS, Appt.,

v.

Judson A. WANN, Receiver of Sun Vapor Street-Light Company.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A contract for street lights for five years at a certain price per light per year payable monthly, made by the executive department of public works when no appropriation for the purpose had been made except for a month or two in advance, is void, where the statute provides that no executive department shall bind the city by a contract, agreement, or in any way to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose, and that all contracts and agreements, expressed or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort beyond such existing appropriations, are absolutely void.

2. Subsequent appropriations for instalments coming due on a contract made by city authorities in violation of statute, prohibiting contracts for which appropriations had not already been made, cannot operate as a ratification of the contract so as to make it binding.

(February 13, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior court for Marion County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the contract price for light furnished to the city of Indianapolis. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. E. Scott and James B. Curtis, for appellant:

The contract sued upon is void, because prohibited by the statute.

Kiichli v. Minneapolis Brush Electric Co. 58 Minn. 418 (1894); Garrison v. Chicago, 7 Biss. 480; Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & C. Co. 66 Ind. 404; Superior v. Norton, 24 U. S. App. 59, 63 Fed. Rep. 357; Bladen v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 464; Philadelphia v. Flanigen, 47 Pa. 21; Johnson v. Indianapolis, 16 Ind. 227; Jonas v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio, 318; Wallace v. San José, 29 Cal. 181; San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641; Niles Waterworks v. Niles, 59 Mich. 311; Coulson v. Portland, Deady, 481; Pullman v. New York, 49 Barb. 57; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 181-184, note; 1 Beach. Pub. Corp. § 244.

No contract can be made which is expressly prohibited by the statute, whatever may be the consequences.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 447; Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & C. Co. 66 Ind. 405; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 6, 49 Am. Rep. 416.

Our present city charter has expressly conferred ample power upon the corporation to procure necessary public light by methods other than through the exercise of the limited power to contract therefor, vested exclusively in the board of public works.

Rev. Stat. 1894, 3830.

Even if powers had not been expressly conferred, and public lights could not be procured except by contract for a period of years, there would be inherent power in the corporation to make such necessary contract.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 89, 450; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 268.

All persons contracting with a municipal corporation must at their peril inquire into the power of the corporation, and of its officers, to make the contract. The city is not estopped.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1100 note, and cases; Union School Twp. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 464; Detroit v. Robinson, 38 Mich. 108; 2 Beach. Pub. Corp. 1328, note 5; Milford v. Milford Water Co. 124 Pa. 610, 3 L. R. A. 122; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 447, note, 448, 457; Pine Civil Twp. v. Huber Mfg. Co. 83 Ind. 121.

Messrs. Miller, Winter, & Elam for appellee.

McCabe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee as receiver of the Sun Vapor Street-Light Company, sued the appellant to recover the sum of $552.75, as an instalment due from the city for vapor lights furnished it for the month of January, 1895, under the terms of an alleged contract, and seeking certain injunctive relief. The superior court overruled a demurrer to the complaint, and, the defendant (appellant) refusing to plead further, judgment was rendered upon demurrer in favor of appellee.

The only error assigned calls in question the ruling upon the demurrer. It appears from the complaint that the executive department of public works of the city on September 18, 1893, entered into a contract with the Sun Vapor Street-Light Company, by which such company covenanted that it would furnish to said city a certain number of Sun Vapor street lights for a period of five years from said date at a certain price per light per year, payable in monthly instalments, and the city covenanted to pay accordingly: and, among other things, the contract contained the following mutual covenants: "To each of the provisions, conditions, and stipulations of this contract, the undersigned, each for itself, hereby covenants, agrees, and binds itself, its successors and assigns." Upon the part of the city the contract is executed in the name of the city, by its board of public works, with the city seal affixed, and the contract is also signed by the mayor. It further appears that the appellee was duly appointed receiver of said light company, and as such he had secured the permission of the court appointing him to bring this suit. It is also shown that the monthly instalment for which the suit was brought was due and unpaid. The ground on which it was sought to defeat the action in the trial court, and to reverse its judgment in this court, is that the contract sued on was and is absolutely void, because made in violation of the statute. At the date of the contract the appropriations by the common council to the several executive departments of said city for the current expenses of the fiscal year had not been made. The prior fiscal year had expired August 31, 1893. For that year the council had, on September 26, 1892, appropriated to the board of public works a certain sum for public light; and by said ordinance said appropriation continued and carried to October 1, 1893, unless the appropriation ordinance for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1894, was sooner passed by the council. The appropriation ordinance for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1894, was passed September 21, 1893, and carried an appropriation to said department for public light of $76,000 for said year. So far as appears by the complaint, this appropriation was not more than sufficient to meet the expenses during the fiscal year for which the appropriation was made, for public light of all kinds, including gas and electric light, upon existing contracts then in force. Upon September 18, 1893, being the day and date upon which the contract sued on was entered into, there remained unexpended of the sum appropriated to said department for public lights for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1893, the sum of $15,000, which sum was sufficient only to meet the expense of lighting the city by gas, electricity, and vapor light for and during the months of September and October, 1893. In other words, the complaint shows that upon the date of the execution of the contract the appropriation to the department of public works was only sufficient to pay upon existing contracts for the current and succeeding month; and even this sum was not available after October 1, because upon that date the appropriation, by its terms, lapsed. Subsequent appropriations were made to the department of public works for public light, as appears by the complaint; but at no time did the common council authorize the execution of said contract, or take any action to confirm or approve the same. In the last appropriation ordinance (being Exhibit G of the complaint), there is an express provision in § 8 that the appropriation for vapor lights by item 28, under heading "Department of Public Works," is not to be taken or deemed as a ratification of any contract "heretofore entered into by the department of public works of said city which may not have been authorized by previous appropriations therefor." It is further shown that the board of public works on December 19, 1894, notified appellee in writing, that said city was not bound by said contract, that the same was illegal, and that it would not pay for any lights furnished under said contract by appellee after December 31, 1894. The appellee nevertheless continued to furnish them for the month of January, 1895, and now seeks, in the complaint, to recover therefor upon said contract.

NOTE.—The limitation in the above case on municipal liabilities is so strong as to present a clear distinction between this case and those which turn on provisions against "debts" or "indebtedness." As to these, see note to Beard v. Hopkinsville (Ky.) 31 L. R. A.

23 L. R. A. 403; also Carter v. Thorson (S. D.) 24 L. R. A. 734; Linn v. Chambersburg (Pa.) 23 L. R. A. 217; Saleno v. Neosho (Mo.) 27 L. R. A. 769; Kelly v. Minneapolis (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 281.

The board of public works, by the act commonly known as the "City Charter" for said city, is an executive department of said city government, with certain powers conferred to contract on behalf of the city, subject to certain limitations therein prescribed. Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 3812-3819, among which powers is the power: "To contract for the furnishing of gas, either natural or artificial, water, steam or electricity, light or power, to said city or the citizens thereof, by any company or individual, and in such contract to fix the price to be charged for the same in such city, subject to ordinances of such city, in relation to consumption by private consumers," provided that such powers can only be exercised pursuant to an ordinance specifically directing the same. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3830, top page 359. The board of public works assumed to act under this power in entering into the contract sued on. This power is subject to the limitations expressed in the statute already mentioned, wherein it is provided that "the legislative authority of the city shall be vested in a common council." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3780. "All ordinances, orders, resolutions, and motions for the government or regulation of such city, and all ordinances for the appropriation of money, shall originate in the common council. No appropriation shall be made for the payment of money otherwise than by ordinance, specifying by items the amount thereof and the department for which such appropriation shall be made." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3789.

Sections 50-52, 62, of the act read as follows:

"50. It shall be the duty of each executive department, before the commencement of each fiscal year, to submit to the joint meeting of the heads of the departments and of the various boards hereinbefore provided for in § 45, an estimate of the amount of money required by their respective departments for the ensuing fiscal year stating with as great particularity as possible each item thereof. The comptroller shall at the same time submit a statement or estimate of city expenditures for other purposes, for the ensuing year, over and above the moneys proposed to be used by various executive departments, giving with as great particularity as possible each item thereof. After such meeting, and reports and consultation, the city comptroller shall thereupon proceed to revise such estimates for the ensuing year, and the comptroller shall then prepare a report to the mayor of the various estimated amounts required in said comptroller's opinion for each executive department, and for other city expenses, together with an estimate of the necessary per cent of taxes to be levied. The mayor shall at the next meeting of the common council present such report with such recommendations as he may see fit. It shall be the duty of the committee of finance of said common council thereupon to prepare an ordinance fixing the rate of taxation for the ensuing year, and also an ordinance making appropriations by items for the use of the various executive departments and other city purposes for the ensuing year. Said ordinance may reduce any estimated item for any executive department, from the figures submitted in the report of the city comptroller, but shall not increase the same unless recommended by the mayor. Such appropriation ordinance shall thereafter be promptly acted upon by the common council. If at any time after the passage of such ordinance an emergency shall arise for further appropriations for the use of any department as certified by such department as hereinbefore provided, or other purposes during the year, such additional appropriations may be made on the recommendation of the comptroller by a two-thirds vote of the council.

"51. No executive department, officer, or employee thereof, shall have power to bind such city by any contract, agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose of such department, and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations, are declared to be absolutely void.

"52. Any city official who shall issue any bond, certificate, or warrant for the payment of money which shall purport to be an obligation of such city, and be beyond the unexpended balance of any appropriation made for such purpose, or who shall attempt to bind such city by any contract, agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for such purpose, and remaining at the time unexpended, shall be liable on his official bond to any person injured thereby, and shall be fined in any sum not more than $1,000 and imprisoned in the county jail not more than six months, either or both."

"62. All the expenses incurred or authorized by such board of public works shall be payable out of the general funds of such city appropriated to the use of such board and available for the particular purpose, except where this act specifically directs that the same is to be paid for by assessments against property holders." Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 3821-3823, 3833 (Acts 1891, p. 137).

The full meaning of the provisions already quoted will be better apprehended by considering in connection therewith the following portion of § 54:

"Sec. 54. It shall be the duty of the comptroller: . . . To keep separate accounts for each specific item or appropriation made by the council to each department, and require all warrants to state specifically against which of said items the warrant is drawn. Each account shall be accompanied by a statement in detail in separate columns of the several appropriations, the amount drawn on each appropriation, the unpaid contracts charged against it, and the balance standing to the credit of the same. He shall not suffer any appropriation to be overdrawn or the appropriation for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or by any department other than that for which the appropriation was specifically made, except on transfers authorized by ordinances." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3825.

It will be seen that by § 50, and those preceding it, the common council is the local legislative and governing body; has exclusive power to levy taxes and to appropriate the revenues, and thereby authorize their disbursement. By §§ 51, 52, 62, the power of the executive departments to bind the city by contract is limited to the revenues for which the levy for the ensuing fiscal year is made, and which has been appropriated to the several departments for the specific purposes by the council, as it is advised the same is necessary. It is conceded in the complaint and appellee's argument that there was no revenue appropriated and available for the specific purpose involved in the contract, beyond what would be required to pay the instalment on such contract for the current month and the ensuing month of October. And yet it is contended by the learned counsel for appellee that such contract is not a violation of the statutory provision that "no executive department, officer, or employee thereof shall have power to bind such city by any contract, agreement, or in any way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose of such department, and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort beyond such existing appropriations, are declared to be absolutely void." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3822. The instalment sued for here is that for the month of January, 1895,—far beyond the amount appropriated at the time the contract was entered into. It is only attempted obligations beyond existing appropriations that the statute makes void. And if it has not done so, then language cannot be employed strong enough to accomplish that manifest object and intent. Counsel cite and rely on three cases in this court to uphold their contention that the contract is not in violation of the statutory provision quoted. The first is Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416. It was sought in that case to enjoin the letting of a contract to a waterworks company for supplying the city with water for a period of twenty years at an annual expense to the municipality of $6,000. It was alleged that the corporate indebtedness then exceeded 5 per centum of the assessed value of the taxable property of the city, and that there was no money in the treasury. The ground on which it was sought to maintain the action was that the proposed contract would be in violation of article 13 of the Constitution adopted March 14, 1881, which provides that "no political or municipal corporation in this state shall ever become indebted, or for any purpose to an amount in the aggregate exceeding 2 per centum on the value of the taxable property within such corporation, to be ascertained by the last assessment for state and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all bonds or obligations, in excess of such amount, given by such corporation shall be void." Rev. Stat. 1881, § 220 (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 220). It was held that this inhibition was against the creation of an indebtedness or debt of the municipality beyond the limit therein prescribed. But it was held that the compensation of the contractor was not a debt, within the sense of this provision, until the service was performed and the contractor was entitled to be paid, and in that view it did not run the debt beyond the constitutional limit. The pivotal point on which the decision turned was the word "indebted," as used in the Constitution. The next case cited is Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 13 L. R. A. 647, which simply reaffirms the same principle. The next case is Foland v. Frankton (Ind.) 41 N. E. 1031. That case simply reaffirmed and applied the same principle declared in the two previous cases. In this latter case it was sought to enjoin the letting of a contract by the town, by which it was to pay $800 a year for a certain number of street lights, for a period of five years; and it was averred that no petition had been signed by a majority of the resident owners of the taxable real estate of said town to contract said debt for lighting the streets, or any debt. It was claimed that such a contract would be in violation of § 27 of the act of 1852, reading as follows: "No incorporated town under this act shall have power to borrow money or incur any debt or liability unless a majority of the resident owners of the taxable real estate of said town shall petition the board of trustees to contract such debt or loan." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4377 (Rev. Stat. 1891, § 3342). It was justly held in the case last referred to that it was a debt or loan only that was prohibited without a petition, and, following the two former cases, that "the agreement to pay for the lights to be furnished did not create a debt, within the meaning of the section quoted. But here we have a very different prohibitory provision to deal with. The exclusive law-making power of the state, speaking of the powers of the executive departments of the city government of appellant, of which the board of public works is one, has said: 'No executive department, officer, or employee thereof shall have power to bind such city by contract, agreement, or in any way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose of such department, and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort beyond such existing appropriations, are declared to be absolutely void.' Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3822. Appellee's learned counsel gravely urge that this prohibition is against the creation of a "debt," or an "indebtedness," according to the definition given that term in the cases cited, and does not prohibit the creation of other obligations. But, if this court may fritter away the plain language of the statute in that way, it is hardly worth the while to have another lawmaking power called a "legislature." To do as counsel gravely urge us to do would be to usurp the power to both make and unmake laws. If the judiciary may do that, a legislature would be an appendage to government neither useful nor ornamental. The language quoted deprives the board of public works of the power to bind the city, by any contract, agreement, or in any way, and to any extent, beyond the amount of money already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose of such department; and all contracts, express or implied, and all obligations, of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations, are declared to be absolutely void. If language could be so framed as to make such a contract absolutely void, this language has certainly accomplished that result. If it has not, then it is because the English language is utterly incapable of conveying that idea to the understanding. But it is earnestly insisted that this court, in construing the above language, ought to presume that the legislature employed it with the full knowledge of the decisions in the Valparaiso Case and the Sullivan Case, and that they supposed from those decisions that the language they employed, above quoted, would mean indebtedness in the sense ascribed to that term in those cases. There would be much plausibility, and even force, in the contention if the word "debt" or "indebtedness," had been used in the provision now under consideration. But no such word is used, but the language employed is so broad and sweeping as to carry down obligations of all kinds. It may be conceded that the presumption arises that the language in question was employed in view of the holding in those cases. But that concession militates against counsel's contention. The extraordinary strength of the language employed, doubled, tripled, and quadrupled, as it is, to avoid such a construction as is contended for, seems to point with unerring certainty to the fact that the legislature meant just what it has said. Similar statutory regulations for city governments are not new. Such statutory restrictions, very much like those now before us, have been enacted in the states of Minnesota, Illinois, Pennsylvania, California, Ohio, Michigan, and Oregon, and such statutes have received by the courts of those states the same construction we have placed upon the statute here involved. Küchli v. Minneapolis Brush Electric Co. 58 Minn. 418; Garrison v. Chicago, 7 Biss. 480, Fed. Cas. No. 5,255; Superior v. Norton, 12 C. C. A. 469, 63 Fed. Rep. 357, 24 U. S. App. 59; Bladen v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 464; Philadelphia v. Flanigen, 47 Pa. 21; Jonas v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio, 318; Wallace v. San José, 29 Cal. 181; San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641; Niles Waterworks v. Niles, 59 Mich. 311; Coulson v. Portland, Deady, 481, Fed. Cas. No. 3,275; Pullman v. New York, 49 Barb. 57.

31 L. R. A.

It is contended by appellant that there are two lines of decisions on the questions before us,—one supporting appellant's contention, and the other supporting appellee's contention. But we do not so understand the cases. The ones that are in point at all are against appellee's contention, and support appellant's contention. There are cases in other states like the Indiana cases cited by appellee above mentioned, but we do not think they or the Indiana cases have any application to this case.

The learned counsel for appellee concede that there can be no enforcement of this contract until there is an appropriation of the revenue for that specific purpose; contending that whenever such appropriations are made the contract lays hold on them, and their payment may be enforced by action. This is a concession that if no appropriation is ever made therefor the contract can never be enforced. That amounts to a concession that when made it was not a contract, because contracts, when validly executed, do not depend for their validity on the subsequent assent of one or both of the contracting parties. If validly made, it received the assent of both parties in its execution, and may be enforced against either party, when he is derelict, without again obtaining his assent. 1 Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. 475; Carlmet v. Newton, 79 Ind. 1. If the contract is, as appellee's learned counsel concede, ineffective, it is because it is made in violation of the statute. Such a contract is absolutely void, and is as if it had never been made. State Bank v. Coquilard, 6 Ind. 232; Cassaday v. American Ins. Co. 72 Ind. 95; Davis v. Barger, 57 Ind. 54; Reynolds v. Stevenson, 4 Ind. 619; Link v. Clemmens, 7 Blackf. 479; Pate v. Wright, 30 Ind. 476, 95 Am. Dec. 705; Heller v. Crawford, 87 Ind. 279; Heavenridge v. Mondy, 34 Ind. 28; Case v. Johnson, 91 Ind. 479; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1102, 1103. If the contract had never been made, a subsequent appropriation could not have the effect of making it a contract. The contract, being illegal, was incapable of being subsequently ratified so as to make it binding, without making it a new contract. Henry v. Heeb, 114 Ind. 275, and authorities there cited. All persons contracting with a municipal corporation must, at their peril, inquire into the power of the corporation, and of its officers, to make the contract. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1100, and cases there cited; Union School Twp. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 464; Detroit v. Robinson, 38 Mich. 108; 2 Beach, Pub. Corp. 1228, note 5; Milford v. Milford Water Co. 124 Pa. 610, 3 L. R. A. 122; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 447, 448, 457; Pine Civil Twp. v. Huber Mfg. Co. 83 Ind. 121. We are therefore of the opinion that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the superior court erred in overruling the demurrer thereto.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

NORWEGIAN PLOW COMPANY, Appt.,

Reuben BOLLMAN et al.

(.....Neb.....)

* 1. A party cannot predicate error upon a ruling which he procured to be made.

*Headnotes by NORVAL, J.

2. The transcript of appeal is the exclusive evidence of the proceedings in the trial court.

3. A court of equity will not enjoin a judgment at law, upon the ground of fraud, where it does not appear that such judgment is inequitable, or where it is disclosed that plaintiff has not exercised due diligence in the assertion of his rights.

(February 18, 1896.)

NOTE.—Injunctions against judgments for defenses existing prior to their rendition.

I. Failure of consideration.

a. Generally.

b. In judgments for purchase money.

1. Insolvency.
2. Nonresidence.
3. Rescission.
4. Mistake.
5. Title bonds.
6. Defective title generally.
7. Deficiency in amount of land.
8. Fraud.
9. Res judicata.
10. No cause of action for injunction.
11. Sales by executors and administrators.
12. Summary judgments.
13. Court sales.

c. Judgments in favor of purchasers.

II. Fraud.

a. Where the defense is forgery or non est factum.

b. In obtaining a contract.

c. Generally.

III. Public policy.

a. Generally.

b. Debt for confederate money.

c. Gambling debts.

d. Usury.

IV. Set-off.

a. Failure to assert, at law.

b. Parties.

c. Unliquidated damages.

d. Trial at law.

e. No set-off.

f. Insolvency and nonresidence.

g. Accounting.

h. Equitable set-off.

i. In matters of an estate.

j. Mutual agreements.

V. Payment.

a. Failure to defend.

b. Defense made.

c. Equitable defenses.

d. Summary proceedings.

e. Pleading bill of discovery.

VI. Conditions.

VII. Partition and dower.

VIII. As to party.

IX. Title to property.

X. Nonliability in general.

I. Failure of consideration.

a. Generally.

In NORWEGIAN PLOW Co. v. BOLLMAN an injunction was refused against a judgment on an indemnifying bond given to a sheriff in order to induce him to make a levy, where the judgment was for property levied on by the sheriff, and for which he had been held liable to the execution debtor, when in fact the sheriff had converted a large part of the property to his own use and there was a failure of consideration, and the judgment was therefore fraudulent, on the ground that such a defense should have been made before judgment where no excuse was given for negligence in failing to make the defense. Besides the bill of complaint did not give the value of the goods converted by the sheriff. This is in accord with the general doctrine whether it is regarded as a failure of consideration, or as a fraud on the complainant in the injunction suit.

Generally an injunction will not be granted on the ground of failure of consideration if a good excuse is not given for not using the same as a defense at law, where some peculiar equitable ground is not shown, or such remedy is not provided by statute. Williams v. Jones, 10 Smedes & M. 108; Megget v. Lynch, 8 La. Ann. 6; Brooks v. Whitson, 7 Smedes & M. 513; Miller v. McGuire, Morris (Iowa) 150.

So, an injunction for failure of consideration was refused where the defense was also that in an action between other parties it was held that there was no consideration, as this was no defense. Garrison v. Cobb, 106 Ind. 245.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Madison County in favor of defendant in an action to enjoin the collection of a judgment which had been recovered by Bollman against H. A. Pasewalk et al. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. C. Brome and R. A. Jones for appellant.

And, where the judgment was obtained on a transcript from another state and it was contended that in the state in which the judgment was originally obtained a party was not concluded by the judgment from pleading failure of consideration. Minor v. Stone, 1 La. Ann. 283.

So, an injunction on the ground of failure of consideration was refused on account of complainant's negligence in not defending at law, where no equitable ground was shown. Elston v. Blanchard, 3 Ill. 420; Raburn v. Shortridge, 2 Blackf. 480; Skinner v. Deming, 2 Ind. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 463; Marsh v. Edgerton, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 198; Parker v. Morton, 5 Blackf. 1.

And where Tenn. Code, § 1806, allowed a defense of failure of consideration. Ragsdale v. Gossett, 2 Lea, 729.

And an injunction was refused where a summary judgment was upon a note obtained by plaintiff at law in good faith for value before maturity. Taylor v. Bowles, 28 La. Ann. 294.

And where the defense was failure of consideration, and was sought on the ground that complainant was unable to testify at law, as the same rules in regard to evidence apply in equity. Robinson v. Wheeler, 51 N. H. 380.

And where the bill did not state whether the defense of failure of consideration was made at law or not, as such defense could have been made in the suit at law as in equity. Dickson v. Richardson, 16 Ark. 114.

And where the defense was made of failure of consideration. Thomas v. Hearn, 2 Port. (Ala.) 262.

But an injunction on the ground of failure of consideration will be granted if a statute authorizes equitable interference, or if the failure to defend at law is excused, or if the injunction is asserted against a summary judgment, or if it is asked on equitable ground.

So, an injunction was granted on the ground of failure of consideration where such defense was not made at law, but W. Va. Code, chap. 128, § 5, provided equitable jurisdiction on the ground of failure of consideration, fraud in the procurement of a note, and breach of warranty of title to personal property; and section 6 expressly gave the right to make a defense at law or omit that and go to equity as the debtor preferred, without giving any excuse for not defending at law. Jarrett v. Goodnow, 39 W. Va. 602, 32 L. R. A. —.

And where the defense was that a defeasance to the bond on which judgment was obtained had not been performed, which defeasance was lost, and was on a valid consideration because of mutual stipulations. The loss of the defeasance was sufficient to give equity jurisdiction even if defense was not made at law. Wilson v. Davis, 1 A. K. Marsh. 219.

And where a sale was under a summary order of seizure on a mortgage note. Greenwell v. Roberts, 7 La. 63. See Taylor v. Bowles, supra.

And where the judgment was on bonds given by a maker of a note to indemnify an indorser, and such indorser did not pay the note and was insolvent, the failure of consideration could not be set up as a defense at law in the suit on the bonds, and the maker of the note could not have set off the amount paid to the bank on his note. Scott v. Shreeve, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 605, 6 L. ed. 744.

31 L. R. A.

Messrs. D. A. Holmes and Robertson & Wigton for appellees.

Norval, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to enjoin the collection of a judgment of the district court of Madison county, rendered in an action at law where-in Reuben Bollman was plaintiff, and H. A.

For failure of consideration, see also Howell v. Motes, 54 Ala. 1, infra, IV. a, and Johnson v. Smokey (Miss.) 4 So. 788, infra, II. b.

b. In judgments for purchase money.

1. Insolvency.

In cases of insolvent vendors injunctions are usually granted against judgments for purchase money if the title to real estate is not what was agreed to be conveyed, or if there is a deficiency in the amount, or if there are outstanding liens which the vendor should remove, or if there is an eviction by a claimant under a superior title. Insolvency of the vendor in such a case is usually recognized as equitable ground for interference.

So, an injunction was granted against a purchase-money judgment in the case of an insolvent vendor where the conveyance was with covenants of seisin and right to convey, and the vendor had no title. The suppression of the fact that he had no title was held to be a fraud on the purchaser. The court said that the right to an action at law upon a covenant of the deed would repel the complainant from a court of chancery, but that the vendor was "admitted to be utterly insolvent, and a judgment against him would be worthless." Ingram v. Morgan, 4 Humph. 63, 40 Am. Dec. 626.

And where encumbrances existed at the time of the sale, and the vendor had warranted the title to be free from encumbrances, although complainant knew when he bought the land that they existed; but having paid them off he was entitled in equity to a deduction even if the judgment was in favor of an assignee. Stockton v. Cook, 3 Munf. 68, 5 Am. Dec. 504.

And where the title to that part of the land which was the chief consideration was defective it was held that "the defectiveness of title to part of the property, and the inability of defendant, through insolvency, to compensate the deficiency, are the grounds of equity set forth by complainants, and are sufficient of themselves to entitle them to the injunction." Yonge v. McCormick, 6 Fla. 308, 63 Am. Dec. 214.

And where the title was defective although the time for obtaining a conveyance had not arrived. Kelly v. Kelly, 2 Duv. 363.

And where the judgment was in favor of an assignor of a title bond against his assignee, where there was a deficiency in the amount and title of the land, the assignee's prayer for a rescission was denied in the absence of any fraud or warranty by the assignor. Relief against the maker of the title bond who had conveyed to the assignee with warranty was denied although he was insolvent, on the ground that there was a remedy at law. Moredock v. Rawlings, 3 T. B. Mon. 73. (Quere, what remedy? The case shows that he was insolvent, and unless the prayer for a rescission of the contract with the assignor was the one referred to there, there does not seem to be any relief asked against the maker of the bond.)

And an injunction was granted where the vendor died insolvent and his estate was wholly unable to remove an outstanding lien, although the injunction suit was not for a rescission, as "in such a case it is competent for a vendee to go into equity, without intending to rescind the contract, to pro-

Pasewalk and others were defendants, which judgment was affirmed by this court at the January, 1890, term, the opinion being reported in 29 Neb. 519. The injunction case was dismissed, and plaintiff appeals.

The order of dismissal is as follows: "The Norwegian Plow Co. v. Reuben Bollman et al. Now, on this 17th day of December, 1892, this cause came on to be heard on the motion of the plaintiff for judgment of dismissal upon the issues presented by the pleadings herein filed, and the court, being fully advised in the premises, sustains said motion, and said cause is dismissed at plaintiff's costs, to all of which rulings and judgment of the court plaintiff at the time excepted," etc. It will be observed from the foregoing that plaintiff has appealed from an order cure the appropriation of the purchase money to removing the encumbrance, and on this ground alone can this bill be held tenable." No question was made as to defense at law. Morrison v. Beckwith, 4 T. B. Mon. 73, 16 Am. Dec. 136.

And where the judgment was obtained by an assignee on a purchase-money note, and the purchaser held under a bond to convey, and the vendor was insolvent and was unable to make a good title, and Mo. Stat. 1835, p. 105, §§ 3, 5, provide that the maker of a note might make any defense against the same in the hands of his assignee that he might have made against the assignor, and that the assignee should not obtain a greater title to any bond or note than the person from whom he acquired it. It was held there was a total failure of consideration and a court of equity could not turn the parties round to a suit at law, even were it obvious that such suit would be of any avail. Barton v. Rector, 7 Mo. 524.

And where the judgment was for the price of the land which was supposed to be exempt from the grantor's debts, but was liable on account of the unconstitutionality of the Georgia homestead act. The case does not show whether this defense was available at law or not. Willington v. Thornton, 49 Ga. 384.

And where there had been a mutual contract of exchange of land and the plaintiff at law was unable to perform his part of the contract and never conveyed the land. Hamlin v. Berry, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 39.

And where an injunction had been granted for an eviction and dissolved, and the judgment reversed, and since the decree in the injunction suit the vendor had become insolvent. "L had been actually evicted from the entire tract by a paramount title, and his warrantor had become, or was then ascertained to be, insolvent and irresponsible; and consequently, as there was no available remedy at law on the warranty, L's only relief was in a court of equity," and as the cause for injunction did not exist at the date of the decree in the first injunction suit, that was not a bar. Lockett v. Triplett, 2 B. Mon. 39.

And where the vendor was insolvent and the title was defective and a judgment had been rendered against the administrator of the vendee in damages for an eviction of a remote grantee, and all the heirs consented to the use of such judgment against the judgment for purchase money, the vendee had a covenant to refund in case of an eviction which was binding on the vendor although not in the deed. It was said that "if the appellees had a legal right to the damages for which relief is sought by them, the admitted insolvency of the appellant gave jurisdiction to the chancellor." A question was made as to failure to defend at law, but the court held that such objection should not prevail. Jones v. Waggoner, 7 J. J. Marsh. 144.

And where complainant was a purchaser, and the creditor of his vendor was attempting to sell the land and to collect the purchase money also by garnishment. The equitable grounds were that it would be inequitable to sell the land vacating the purchaser's title and at the same time require the purchaser to pay the purchase money, and as the 31 L. R. A.

vendor was insolvent there could be no remedy against him. Gunn v. Thornton, 49 Ga. 380.

In Taylor v. Lyon, 2 Dana, 276, it was said that the unexpected insolvency or removal of the vendor, and imminent danger of eviction, would authorize an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment for the purchase money until the purchaser could have the question of doubtful title settled.

In Simpson v. Hawkins, 1 Dana, 303, where the grounds for injunction against a judgment for purchase money were warranty and defective title, and inability of vendor to remunerate for loss, and there was no eviction, it was held that before an injunction will be granted the claimants of title must be made parties, and their title determined. If the claimants are nonresidents the vendor will be required to give a bond to protect the vendee or a decree quieting title will protect them after seven years shall have elapsed.

In Oldfield v. Stevenson, 1 Ind. 153, it was said that an outstanding mortgage upon the land purchased might be ground for a temporary injunction out of chancery against the collection of the purchase money where the mortgagor was insolvent.

In Addleman v. Mormon, 7 Blackf. 31, it was said that an injunction against a judgment for purchase money would be granted where there were prior encumbrances which the vendor had agreed to remove, and the surety on a bond to remove such encumbrances was insolvent. But the injunction was dissolved because there was not a release of errors indorsed on the bill.

But an injunction was refused where the vendor was insolvent, and the purchaser did not establish deceit in the sale and was guilty of laches. Hambrick v. Dickey, 48 Ga. 578.

For purchase money, see also infra, IV. 1.

2. Nonresidence.

The rule in case of nonresident grantors is similar to that in case of insolvent grantors, and an injunction will be granted where the title is defective or the quantity is deficient.

So, an injunction was granted in case of a nonresident vendor where he had died and the purchaser held a deed of general warranty, and the vendor had no title to a large tract, which was held by a claimant whose title by possession was unsalable. The purchaser could have sued the administrator on the covenants, but he might have been met by a plea of nothing to administer, and if he sued the heirs, they might have pleaded riens per descent, and as there was an entire failure of consideration as to the tract containing 300 acres, it was against conscience to allow the judgment to be enforced. Richardson v. Williams, 3 Jones, Eq. 116.

And where the vendors obtained a judgment on a purchase-money bond and had no title to the land which they had conveyed under a general warranty although the purchaser had a cause of action on the covenant. It was said: "As they (vendors) are nonresidents and had no property within the state, this court will not permit the defendants to recover the purchase money for the land the title of which was admitted to be defect-sustaining his own motion to dismiss the cause. He having expressly invited this decision to be made, if erroneous, it is his own error, and not the error of the court, and he is thereby precluded from assailing the ruling. Omaha F. Ins. Co. v. Maxwell, S. & R. Co. 38 Neb. 358; Weander v. Johnson, 42 Neb. 117. It may be said that the journal entry is incorrect wherein it is stated that the motion to dismiss was made by the plaintiff; that, in fact, it was defendant's motion. There is nothing in the record to show that such a mistake was made. The motion is not included in the transcript, and the journal entry contains the written approval of the attorneys for the respective parties indorsed thereon, as well as authenticated by the certificate of the clerk of the trial court.

ive, leaving to the defendant the precarious remedy of suing in the courts of another state for the purpose of getting back the same by way of damages in action for breach of the covenants of warranty." Green v. Campbell, 2 Jones, Eq. 446.

And where the title was defective and complainant was deceived by false representations of the vendor, and the defect of title was not discovered until after judgment at law. Fitch v. Polke, 7 Blackf. 564.

And where the action was by an assignee of a bond who had notice that the vendor had not complied with the bond or conveyed the land he had agreed to convey. Gray v. Overstreet, 7 Gratt. 346.

In Golden v. Maupin, 2 J. J. Marsh. 236, an injunction granted against a purchase-money judgment on the ground of deficit in quantity and defective title, and nonresidence of vendor, was dissolved on the vendor filing a bond to indemnify the vendee for any loss which might accrue, where it was doubtful if there was a deficit in title or quantity.

In Taylor v. Lyon, 2 Dana, 276, it is said that an injunction will be granted against a judgment on a purchase-money note where there was a warranty and the vendor is a nonresident, and there is reasonable ground of apprehending danger from a superior outstanding title; but the holders of the same must be made parties, and the question of their title determined.

In Wiley v. Fitzpatrick, 3 J. J. Marsh. 562, an injunction was granted against a judgment on a purchase-money note where there was a mistake in the amount of the land conveyed, part being claimed by others and no warranty except as to title, and the vendor was a nonresident, as there was no remedy at law. But complainant was required to make the claimants of title parties so that their title could be passed upon, as there was no eviction, as it would be unjust for complainant to hold the deed and also to have an injunction against the judgment for the purchase money.

See also Lucas v. Chapeze, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 31, infra, I. b, 10; Payne v. Cabell, 7 T. B. Mon. 196.

3. Rescission.

If the complainant is entitled to a rescission on account of the title or where the sale has been rescinded, an injunction will be granted against a judgment for purchase money.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment for purchase money on a rescission of the contract of purchase where the purchase was conditional, and complainant on the failure of the condition tendered back the deed, and the defendant in the equity suit was in possession of the property and was insolvent. Odell v. Reed, 54 Ga. 142.

And where the consideration wholly failed and complainant had withdrawn his plea at law reserving his rights in equity. Vanscoy v. Stinchcomb, 29 W. Va. 263.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment for purchase money in a suit for rescission where the sale of the land was fraudulent in conveying inferior land, although an unsuccessful defense at law had been attempted, as adequate relief could not be had at law. Calloway v. McElroy, 3 Ala. 406.

31 L. R. A.

And where the defense was fraud in the sale of the land, and the remedy at law was inadequate. Boyce v. Grundy, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655.

And where the same was obtained by an assignee, and the grounds were that the vendor and wife made a general warranty deed to the complainant but it passed no title from the wife who owned the land, and the husband had only a life estate, and the statute of limitation would not cure this defect as long as the vendor lived. Renick v. Rentck, 5 W. Va. 201.

And where the purchaser had not accepted title under a bond to convey, and the title was defective to the most valuable part. It was said that it would be otherwise if a title was accepted under a warranty deed as the remedy would be on the warranty. Buchanan v. Alwell, 8 Humph. 516.

And where the grounds were that the vendor had never conveyed the land as required by the title bond and was unable to make title, although the note had been assigned, as Ark. Rev. Stat. chap. 11, § 8, provides that all discounts and offsets may be made either in law or equity notwithstanding an assignment. It was said that if the suit was to avoid payment of a single note, defense should have been made at law. Black v. Bowman, 9 Ark. 501.

In Miller v. Palmer, 55 Miss. 323, it was said that if a purchaser at administrator's sale was not evicted, and the title was bad, he may defend against the purchase money, or may proceed to annul the sale; but if he knew of the defect and failed to plead at law, he will be precluded from relief in chancery unless such failure is excused. But in this case the defect in the title was claimed to have been discovered after judgment, but the time was not stated, and an injunction was granted on a rescission and an accounting by complainant of the rents and profits.

For rescission, see Jackson v. Norton, 6 Cal. 187; Markham v. Todd, 2 J. J. Marsh. 354; Patterson v. Miller, 4 Jones, Eq. 451, infra, I. b, 6; Edwards v. Strode, 2 J. J. Marsh. 506, infra, I. b, 10.

4. Mistake.

The purchaser will be entitled to equitable relief by injunction where there has been a mistake in the conveyance as to description, or in other essential matters.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment for purchase money where, through mistake of the draftsmen, the agreement of sale omitted the crops, and plaintiff at law failed to put complainant in possession of the same. Booth v. Kesler, 6 Gratt. 350.

And where the defense to a purchase-money note was that the grantor had executed the deed when under twenty-one years of age, suppressing the fact as to his age, and had refused to make a new deed when he became of age. Bryan v. Primm, 1 Ill. 33.

But an injunction was refused where the grounds for the same were, mistake in the description, and inability of the vendor to make a good title, as provided by title bond, but the allegations in regard to inability to make title and solvency of vendor were not definite and specific. Long v. Brown, 4 Ala. 622.

It is well settled that the transcript of appeal is the sole and exclusive evidence of the proceedings in the court below. Weander v. Johnson, supra; Dryfus v. Molins, M. & S. Co. 48 Neb. 233; Davis v. Snyder, 45 Neb. 415.

The same result is reached upon a ground less technical. Conceding that plaintiff did not ask the order of dismissal to be made, as counsel in their briefs assume to be the case, yet there must be an affirmance upon the merits, as we shall proceed to show. Before doing this, a statement of the issues presented by the pleadings will be necessary to a proper understanding of the case, since the decision was predicated upon them alone.

The petition alleges, in substance, that the defendant Bollman was sheriff of Knox See also Thompson v. Tilton, 34 N. J. Eq. 306, infra, I. c; Wiley v. Fitzpatrick, 3 J. J. Marsh. 582, infra, I. b, 2.

5. Title bonds.

Relief will generally be granted where the vendee holds under a title bond, and the vendor is unable to make a conveyance of such title as he contracted for owing to the want of title or encumbrances.

So, an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was granted where the judgment was on a bond to make title and defendant had no title and could not make one. In such a case the burden was on the vendor to show that his title was good. Moredock v. Williams, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 325.

And where the defense was that a deed had not been made, for which the bond in judgment was given, but that the grantor conveyed the land to another party. This defense of failure of consideration may be made either in law or in equity, but the failure to defend at law will not prevent equitable interference. Ludington v. Tiffany, 6 W. Va. 11.

And where the vendor on a title bond failed to procure the title of other joint owners, although complainant had procured their title by another contract with them. Jaynes v. Brock, 10 Gratt. 211.

And where the suit was on a bond to make title, and the grantor had no title, and had died, and it was doubtful if title could be obtained. Cox v. Jerman, 6 Ired. Eq. 526.

And where the defense was that the grantor was unable to make title. But on title having been obtained and deed tendered, the injunction was dissolved. No question was made as to defense at law. Fishback v. Williams, 3 Bibb, 342.

And where the title was defective and the defendant in the equity suit offered a deed from a third party, as complainant would not be required to accept any deed, but a warranty from his vendor, where a contract for such a deed was made. Moore v. Cook, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 84.

And where there was a subsequent suit by a claimant to recover the property, and the vendor had filed his deed in the clerk's office and levied on the lot; as complainant was entitled to recover the value of the lot with improvements at the time of the breach on his bond, and unless injunction was granted the deed would cancel his bond for title, and the measure of damages on the deed would only be the purchase money with interest, under Ga. Code, §§ 2097, 2098. Seago v. Bass, 49 Ga. 9.

And injunctions were granted against judgments for purchase money in cases of defective title in which the purchaser held by title bond where the vendor was a nonresident. Gray v. Overstreet, 7 Gratt. 346.

And where there was a deficiency in the amount of the land. Hilleary v. Crow, 1 Harr. & J. 542; Nelson v. Matthews, 2 Hen. & M. 164, 3 Am. Dec. 620.

And where there was a contract for an abatement of the price. Humphreys v. McClenachan, 1 Munf. 493.

And where there was fraud in the sale. Lee v. Vaughan, Sneed (Ky.) 238.

And where the vendor was insolvent. Barton v. Rector, 7 Mo. 524; Hamlin v. Berry, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 39; Kelly v. Kelly, 2 Duv. 363.

31 L. R. A.

And where the injunction suit was for a rescission. Buchanan v. Alwell, 8 Humph. 516; Black v. Bowman, 9 Ark. 501.

For title bond, see Amick v. Bowyer, 3 W. Va. 7, infra, I. b, 10; Long v. Brown, 4 Ala. 622, supra, I. b, 4; Brittain v. McLain, 6 Ired. Eq. 166, infra, I. c, 11.

6. Defective title generally.

There is some conflict of authority as to the right to an injunction against a purchase-money judgment, claimed solely on the ground of defective title. Such relief has been granted in some cases where the vendor was unable to make a conveyance of such title as he contracted for owing to want of title or encumbrances.

So, an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was granted where there was a dower claim against the land, which the vendor promised to have released by his wife in order to induce complainant to accept the deed. McKoy v. Chiles, 5 T. B. Mon. 259.

And where complainant held under an agreement of warranty of title, and the title was defective on account of the vendor's wife having a dower interest in the land. In this case the vendor was a nonresident, but that question was not discussed. Sexton v. Pickering, 3 Rand. (Va.) 468.

And where encumbrances against the property were in judgment which had been enjoined in an action by the vendor, but was still pending on appeal. The purchase-money judgment was enjoined until the vendor should reduce the encumbrances outstanding to a sum not exceeding that of the purchase money due. Arnold v. Curl, 18 Ind. 339. See Kicker v. Pratt, infra.

In Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh, 806, it was said that a judgment for purchase money will be enjoined where there is a general warranty and the title is clearly shown to be defective.

In Buell v. Tate, 7 Blackf. 55, it was said that an injunction may be granted against the collection of a purchase-money note until the vendor shall procure a release of an encumbrance against the property, but the vendee cannot defend at law on the ground of failure of consideration, as the encumbrance may never injure him.

But some cases have refused injunctions on failure of title on the ground that the remedy by defending at law the action for purchase money, or a remedy on the covenant of title, or an adequate remedy at law, or the failure to offer to rescind, precluded equitable relief.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment where the defense was that the action was for the recovery of rents for an improvement on public land, which had not been in plaintiff's possession and was sold by the government to another party, as this defense should have been made at law. Rooks v. Williams, 13 La. Ann. 374.

And where the defense to a purchase-money mortgage note was encumbrances existing at the time of the warranty, and was not made, as Ind. Civ. Code, § 56, chap. 3, provided that in the action to foreclose the defendant may set up all his defenses, whether legal or equitable. Prior to the Code injunctions were granted on equitable grounds. In this case even if complainant could not defend at law he should have sought for an in-county, and Rothwell was his deputy; the other defendants, Tyrell and Losey, are, respectively, the clerk of the district court and sheriff of Madison county; that the plaintiff recovered certain judgments before a justice of the peace of Knox county against one Fred Fisher, and caused executions to be issued thereon, which were delivered to said Rothwell for collection; that, on the same day, plaintiff caused to be executed and delivered to Rothwell an undertaking signed by H. A. Pasewalk, J. S. McClary, and A. P. Pilger, as sureties, for the purpose of indemnifying the sheriff on account of the levy of said executions upon certain goods and chattels, then in the possession of Fisher, but claimed by Deere, Wells, & Co. and others. (A copy of this bond, as set forth in the petition, is set out in the opinion in 29 Neb. 519, and need not be here given.) The junction before judgment. This provision of the Code changed the rule in Indiana, and now the injunction should be sought by cross bill in the foreclosure suit. Ricker v. Pratt, 48 Ind. 73.

But without any reference to the Code, in Fehrle v. Turner, 77 Ind. 530, which was a suit to enjoin an action on purchase-money notes, it was held that in Indiana, "in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on land conveyed by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, a defect of title will be no defense to the suit, for the reason that if the mortgagor has no title, the foreclosure cannot injure him," and an injunction was granted because the mortgagor was insolvent and the mortgage embraced land other than that mortgaged for purchase money. (Overruling Strong v. Downing, 34 Ind. 300, so far as it conflicts with this case.)

In Wimberg v. Schwegeman, 97 Ind. 528, the court says the rule established in Fehrle v. Turner is that "an injunction may be maintained to restrain the collection of a purchase-money judgment in a proper case, but it is not decided that an injunction will lie in all cases where covenants are broken by a total failure of title. We do not decide just what facts must be alleged in order to entitle a grantee to an injunction; we do decide that one of the material facts that must appear is the insolvency of the grantor. In holding that where insolvency is alleged the grantee may restrain the collection of the purchase money, we do not adopt a doctrine new to this court, for the principle was laid down long since in the cases of Fitch v. Polke, 7 Blackf. 564; Addleman v. Mormon, Id. 31; Buell v. Tate, Id. 55; Arnold v. Curl, 18 Ind. 339. These cases seem to have been overruled in both Strong v. Downing, and Fehrle v. Turner, supra."

In Gillett v. Sullivan, 127 Ind. 327, where the injunction was sought by cross bill in the injunction suit, insolvency of warrantors and an outstanding lien on the property were held sufficient to entitle to an injunction. Although the purchaser could have paid off the lien, and used it as a set-off, she was not required to do so. The court said: "To permit the appellant to enforce the collection of her judgment in this case by execution would be permitting the appellant to make an unfair use of the legal forum, and leave the appellee remediless. There are some decisions of this court in harmony with this theory. See Ricker v. Pratt, Arnold v. Curl, and Fehrle v. Turner, supra."

An injunction was refused where the defense was encumbrances against a decree for purchase money; but the grounds existed prior thereto and the same would have been a valid defense if asserted in that action. Buchanan v. Lorman, 3 Gill, 57.

And where the defense was that the note was given for a certain claim upon United States land, void on account of a prior claim and failure of consideration, and was refused for negligence in not defending at law. Faulkner v. Campbell, Morris (Iowa) 148.

And where the grounds were warranty of title and that the title of the land was in the United States at the time of sale. In order to obtain equitable relief insolvency of grantor and diligence of complainant in prosecuting a suit on the covenants of the deed must be shown. Swain v. Burnley, 1 Mo. 404.

And where the purchaser was in possession under a deed with covenants of warranty alone, and no fraud or eviction was shown, and the title was defective. The remedy should be on the covenants of the deed. Senter v. Hill, 5 Sneed, 505.

And where there was a covenant of warranty that the vendor was seised in fee, and had a good title and right to convey, and that the land should not be subject to encumbrances, and there were judgments against the vendor but he had other land and was not insolvent. Wamsley v. Stalnaker, 24 W. Va. 214.

And where the complainant had an adequate remedy on the covenant of warranty for a deficiency in the title, and the vendee was not insolvent. Wilkins v. Hogue, 2 Jones, Eq. 479.

And where the complainant knew that his grantor only had a life estate at the time of the purchase and was solvent, as equity will leave him to his remedy on his warranty. Henry v. Elliott, 6 Jones, Eq. 175.

And where there was no charge of insolvency, although it was alleged that the title to the land had failed, but the remedy was to set this up in the action as a defense or sue on the covenant. Allen v. Thornton, 51 Ga. 564.

And where the ground was the discovery of want of title in vendor after judgment for the price of land, and there was a remedy by appeal or action of nullity, as the matter was res judicata. Morrison v. Crooks, 3 Rob. (La.) 273.

And where the grantor had no title, but complainant was still in possession, and the fact that a suit in ejectment had been commenced against him would not entitle him to an injunction, as complainant could not avoid the payment of the purchase money without offering to rescind the contract and return the possession. Jackson v. Norton, 6 Cal. 187.

And where the title was defective, but complainant did not sue for a rescission or for a good title. Markham v. Todd, 2 J. J. Marsh. 364.

And where the vendor held under a warranty, and it was alleged that a lawsuit on the title was anticipated, but there was no offer to rescind or special equity shown. Patterson v. Miller, 4 Jones, Eq. 451.

An injunction to restrain a judgment on an independent note given in consideration of a contract to obtain release of vendor's husband and quitclaim of title, on the ground that such release and quitclaim had not been tendered, was refused, as the purchaser had his remedy by action of specific performance, and no special ground for equitable interference was shown. Peck v. Kirtz, 15 N. Y. S. R. 598.

In Patton v. Taylor, 48 U. S. 7 How. 132, 12 L. ed. 637, an injunction was refused where the vendor was insolvent and the deed contained covenants for further assurance, and of warranty, and the grantee was in possession, and the grantor had no title, holding "that if there is no fraud, and no covenants to secure the title, he is without remedy; as the petition further avers that the deputy sheriff levied these executions upon, and sold, certain property then in the possession of Fisher (described in Exhibit A, attached to the petition), and applied the proceeds arising from such sale to the payment of plaintiff's judgments; that, at the same time, Bollman and Rothwell fraudulently and unlawfully, and for the purpose of cheating and defrauding plaintiff, and without his knowledge or consent, or that of the sureties upon the indemnifying bond, took into their possession, and converted to their own use, certain other property claimed by Deere, Wells, & Co. (described in Schedule B, attached to the petition); and that no accounting has ever been made to the plaintiff or said sureties for the property so taken and converted by said sheriff and his deputy. It is further alleged that subsequently Deere, Wells, & vendor, selling in good faith, is not responsible for the goodness of his title, beyond the extent of his covenants in the deed."

7. Deficiency in amount of land.

Some cases grant an injunction against purchase-money judgments where there is a deficiency in the amount of land conveyed.

So, an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was granted where the vendor in a title bond only conveyed to complainant one half the property sold, and misrepresented the size of the tract. Lee v. Vaughan, Sneed (Ky.) 238.

And where the vendor in a title bond had not delivered possession of all the land sold at the time agreed upon, and a set-off was allowed complainant for damages for failure to deliver possession. Hilleary v. Crow, 1 Har. & J. 542.

And where the injunction suit was for a specific performance by the purchaser, and there was a deficiency in the amount of the land, for which a deduction was decreed. Humphreys v. McClenahan, 1 Munf. 493.

And where there was a deficiency in the quantity of land sold by title bond, and the sale was with a warranty. The question as to the failure to defend at law was not discussed. Nelson v. Matthews, 2 Hen. & M. 164, 3 Am. Dec. 620.

And where land was sold by the acre, and there was a deficiency, and compensation was allowed for the deficiency, estimated by the average value of the tract. Nelson v. Carrington, 4 Munf. 332, 6 Am. Dec. 519.

In Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh, 606, it was said that a judgment for purchase money will be enjoined on the ground of deficiency in quantity of land, where the sale was by the acre.

But an injunction was refused where the sale was by metes and bounds and the quantity sold was "more or less," and there was a deficiency. Grantland v. Wight, 2 Munf. 179.

For deficiency, see Strodes v. Patton, 1 Brock. 223, infra, I. b. 13; Chambliss v. Miller, 15 La. Ann. 718, infra, I. b. 12; Davis v. Millaudon, 14 La. Ann. 881, infra, I. b. 12.

8. Fraud.

Fraud as to title in the sale of land has been held sufficient to authorize an injunction, although some cases refused relief on account of failure to defend at law.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment for purchase money where the title was defective and complainant was deceived by false representations of the vendor, and sufficient excuse was given for not defending at law. Fitch v. Polke, 7 Blackf. 564.

And where the defense was fraud in making a sale of the land which the vendor had conveyed to another party, and no objection was made to the jurisdiction in equity. Endicott v. Penny, 14 Smedes & M. 144.

And where the defense was that the sale of personal property was made on false representations that there was no encumbrance on the same. It was said that a defense against an action on a real estate purchase-money note, could not be made at law where there was no eviction, but could be in equity; and the rule is the same in regard to personal property. Poe v. Decker, 5 Ind. 150.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment for purchase money where the defense was that the vendor was insolvent and that the note was procured by fraudulent representation of title, which the vendee was compelled to purchase from a third party, as relief will not be given in equity where complainant was negligent and defense was not made. Howell v. Motes, 54 Ala. 1.

And where damages for fraud in the sale were claimed as a set-off, and the vendor was insolvent, and the complainant through negligence failed to use his set-off in the action at law. Hall v. Clark, 21 Mo. 415.

For fraud, see also Fitch v. Polke, 7 Blackf. 564, supra, I. b. 2; Lee v. Vaughan, Sneed (Ky.) 238, supra, I. b. 7; Calloway v. McElroy, 3 Ala. 408; Boyce v. Grundy, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655, supra, I. b. 3.

9. Res judicata.

An injunction will be denied where the matter has become res judicata. Moore v. Hill, 50 Ga. 760.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment for purchase money where some of the breaches were litigated in the suit at law, and complainant was negligent in not litigating all of them. And Ga. Code, § 2989, provides for such defense. Desvergers v. Willis, 58 Ga. 388.

And where the defense against a judgment on a purchase-money bond given to court commissioners was that the title was defective and in another person, but who was a party to the suit in which the sale was ordered. Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79.

10. No cause of action for injunction.

Injunctions are refused against judgments for purchase money if there was no warranty, or covenant, or fraud, or if the objections to the title are not well founded, or if complainant is guilty of laches and has not complied with his contract.

So, an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was refused where the objections to the title were not valid. Porter v. Scobie, 5 B. Mon. 387.

And where the alleged defects in the title were not established and there was no danger to be apprehended. Allen v. Philips, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 1.

And where the vendor was a nonresident and complainant did not show affirmatively defects in the title, and his possession was undisturbed. Cantrell v. Cobb, 43 Ga. 193.

And where the cause for injunction, that there was a superior outstanding title, was not established, and complainant held possession under a warranty, although the grantor was a nonresident, but his removal was known to have been contemplated when the deed was accepted,—the remedy being on the warranty if complainant is evicted. Payne v. Cabell, 7 T. B. Mon. 198.

And where the vendee under a title bond claimed that there was an outstanding title, but he was in possession and the statute of limitation protected him from the adverse claimant. Amick v. Bowyer, 3 W. Va. 7.

Co. brought an action in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska, against said Bollman and the sureties on his official bond, for the conversion of all the goods so taken by the officer, and recovered therein a judgment against the defendants for the sum of $3,416.65, damages and costs of suit, for the goods taken at the request, and appropriated to the use and benefit, of the plaintiff herein, as well as for the goods described in said Exhibit B; that subsequently Bollman instituted an action in the district court of Madison county against said McClary, Pilger, and Pasewalk upon said indemnifying bond, for the purpose of compelling the plaintiff herein to pay for the property described in Exhibit B, and for and on account of the said judgment recovered by said Deere, Wells, & Co.; that Bollman, in his said action on said bond, for

And where there were judgments against a bank, and the vendor having the purchase-money judgments was a stockholder, but he had bank bills and other property sufficient to satisfy his liabilities, and offered a good bond to protect the vendee. Collins v. Clayton, 53 Ga. 649.

And where the purchaser under a general warranty was in possession and had never been evicted or threatened with a suit, and there were no fraudulent representations or concealment, and the vendor was not insolvent. Beale v. Selverley, 8 Leigh. 658.

And where complainant held under a general warranty and the sale was in gross and not by the acre, and there was no superior title shown, or eviction, and the alleged defects in the title did not appear to be real. Yancey v. Lewis, 4 Hen. & M. 380.

And where the defect in the title was not specified. French v. Howard, 3 Bibb. 301.

And where the bill of complaint did not show the consideration or contract of purchase, or disturbance of possession, or offer to rescind, and it was vague and indefinite. Edwards v. Strode, 2 J. J. Marsh. 506.

And where there was failure of title, but possession was unmolested, and there was no fraud or covenants of title. Williamson v. Raney, Freeman. Ch. (Miss.) 112.

And where the ground was failure of title, and a purchaser of school land from the county auditor was in possession, as a purchase-money mortgage cannot be resented on the ground that the county had no title in the absence of covenants and fraud, and there was no attempt to hold the complainant personally liable. Cartright v. Briggs, 41 Ind. 184.

And where the purchaser bought such title as the vendor had although the vendor held under a warranty from a prior grantor whose title was defective. Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh. 606.

And where the purchaser at a sheriff's sale sold to complainant his bargain without recourse, and there was no fraud. Carrico v. Froman, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 178.

And where A made a verbal contract for the sale of a lot to B, who sold to C without any warranty, and A then made a warranty deed to C and the judgment was on the purchase-money balance due to B, and the defense was a change in the street location,—the remedy if any being on A's deed. Price v. Ayres, 10 Gratt. 575.

And where the complainant had agreed that the payment should not be withheld on the ground of the vendor not being able to convey them when the purchase money should become due, and the contemplated removal of the vendor from the state was understood at the time of the purchase. Lucas v. Chapeze, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 81.

And where the defense was that the same was not to be paid until a title in litigation was settled, but this agreement was not established, and the complainant in the injunction suit was to pay when a third party would make a deed, and the failure to obtain a deed was due to complainant's fault. Alexander v. Baylor, 20 Tex. 580.

And where there was no fraud or eviction, and the purchaser was in possession under a deed with 31 L. R. A.

covenants of general warranty and special warranty against a claim of A, for which claim of A complainant paid A $1,000, and the plaintiff at law offered to abate the judgment to the extent of $400, the value of land claimed by A at the time of sale. A vendee in possession under a deed with covenants of special warranty is entitled to no equitable relief on account of outstanding encumbrances or adverse title. Elliott v. Thompson, 4 Humph. 99, 40 Am. Dec. 630.

And where the defense was that the vendor had died, but the purchaser neglected to pay the purchase money during his lifetime and obtain a conveyance. If the complainant made the heirs parties to the injunction suit, a temporary injunction would be granted until their claim of title was determined. Prout v. Gibson, 1 Cranch, C. C. 389.

11. Sales by executors and administrators.

Injunctions have been granted against judgments on administrators', executors', and guardians' sales where a good title could not be secured, but have been refused where the title was cured, and where such defense was held to be a legal one, and was not made at law.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment for purchase money where the purchaser was unable to obtain the title to a pre-emption bought at administrator's sale. It was said that the objection to want of jurisdiction in equity was disposed of in Pelham v. Wilson, 4 Ark. 289, where a decree granting an injunction was reversed for want of proof. Pelham v. Floyd, 9 Ark. 530.

And where the bond to pay purchase money and the bond to make title were concurrent acts, and the vendor did not tender a valid title, and the defendant as executor had no power to sell or convey. Brittain v. McLain, 6 Ired. Eq. 186.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment for purchase money where the ground was that the title of the vendor was not clearly shown to be good and the vendor was in possession and the executors tendered a deed of special warranty and no specific objection was shown to the title. The executors selling under a power given by a will are not bound to make a deed of general warranty, where there is no contract to that effect. Grantland v. Wight, 5 Munf. 285.

And where the property was sold by an executor at public sale as of doubtful title but on representations that such vendor would give his personal warranty against an eviction, which he did, and was solvent. Merritt v. Hunt, 4 Ired. Eq. 406.

And where the defense was not made at law that the sale by administrators was invalid, because certain heirs were not made parties, and a deed of the heirs was tendered in the injunction suit, and complainant had uninterrupted possession. McLaurin v. Parker, 24 Miss. 509.

And where the defense was, that it was given for property bought at administrator's sale, which sale was void, as this was a legal defense and was not made or excused. Garrett v. Lynch, 45 Ala. 204.

And where the sale was to pay the debts of a testator, and the defense of failure of consideration on account of title was not made in the action at law. Latimer v. Wharton, 41 S. C. 508, overruled.

the purpose of cheating and defrauding the Norwegian Plow Company, unlawfully and fraudulently averred that the said judgment of Deere, Wells, & Co. was recovered on account and for goods taken by Bollman upon said executions, although in fact said judgment was not obtained for such purpose, as Bollman well knew at the time of bringing his suit, but on account of and for the goods described in Exhibit B, as well as for the goods mentioned and set forth in Exhibit A. The petition further charges that Bollman prosecuted his said action to final judgment, recovering therein, against Pilger, McClary, and Pasewalk the sum of $8,797.87, for the value of the goods, including those converted by him; that the undertaking was for the use and benefit of plaintiff, and that the latter is liable to the sureties for any and all moneys they may be compelled to pay Bolling Rogers v. Horn, 6 Rich. L. 361, to the effect that a defense could not be made at law against a sale made on order of court.

And where the defense against a purchase-money note on a guardian's sale was failure of consideration from defect of title, and such defense was not made at law, and there was no offer to rescind. Shipp v. Wheelless, 33 Miss. 646.

For sales by administrator, see Miller v. Palmer, 55 Miss. 323, supra, l. b. 3.

12. Summary judgments.

The rule seems to be that injunctions will be granted against sales under summary judgments, where the purchaser is unable to obtain a good title.

So, an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was granted where the order of sale was on a summary judgment and the vendor had stipulated that the title was to be perfected before payment could be enforced, and there was a prior mortgage on the property. Wade v. Percy, 24 La. Ann. 173.

And where there were mortgages on the land prior to purchase, a deficiency in the quantity, and set-offs, as La. Act 1826 provides that compensation may form the ground for injunction, and the sale was under an order via executiva. Johnston v. Hickey, 4 La. 232.

And where the grounds were that the United States did not confirm a location of the title sold to complainant, but on the contrary gave to the lines of survey a different direction diminishing the quantity, and substituting in its stead low swamp land of inferior value. Barrow v. Cazeaux, 5 La. 72.

And where the defense was that a suit was pending against the vendee by a claimant of superior title. Exnicios v. Weiss, 3 Mart. N. S. 460.

And where an action by the vendee was pending against the vendor for failure of consideration of the purchase-money mortgage, and was instituted prior to an executory action on the mortgage. The sale under the latter was enjoined until the former was determined. Walker v. Cucullu, 15 La. Ann. 689.

And where there was a deficiency in the quantity of land sold under a warranty it was held that a claim for compensation was not in the nature of a set-off, but was a failure of consideration. Davis v. Millaudon, 14 La. Ann. 881.

But a purchaser was entitled to an injunction against a sale for purchase money of land on a summary order only to the extent of an encumbrance thereon, where the vendor had failed to have the same erased according to his agreement. Walker v. Cucullu, supra.

And a vendee of land is not entitled to an injunction against a sale on a summary order on a purchase-money mortgage given by his vendor where the vendee does not show that he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of his vendor on account of a deficiency in the amount of land sold to his vendor. Chambliss v. Miller, 15 La. Ann. 713.

13. Court sales.

Injunctions have been granted against purchase-money judgments where the sale was under order of court and the title was defective, but have been denied where there was a remedy by resisting confirmation of the master's report, or where the title could be perfected.
31 L. R. A.

So, an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was granted where the purchase was on execution sale and the defendant in the execution had no title to the property. This case does not show whether defense could have been made in the proceedings on the sale bond. Bartlett v. Loudon, 7 J. J. Marsh. 641.

And where the sale was of land of an estate, made by court commissioners of three tracts sold under title deeds at buyer's risk as to quantity and title, but as to one tract there was neither title nor possession, and a deficiency existed as to the other tracts, and the terms of the order did not authorize such a sale. The injunction was on the ground of want of authority or for mistake. Strodes v. Patton, 1 Brock. 223.

And an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a sale bond which was of the same effect as a judgment, where the sale was made by order of the execution creditor, and the defendant in the execution had no title to the same. Brummel v. Hurt, 3 J. J. Marsh. 709.

But an injunction against a judgment for purchase money was refused where there were no objections by the vendee to the title of the vendors, no allegation of fraud, and possession was taken and ability of the vendor and a desire to make title and to confirm the sale were shown, although the purchase was made under a decretal sale which was irregular and erroneous. Lampton v. Usher, 7 B. Mon. 57.

And where the property was bought at judicial sale and the title was defective, but complainant had a remedy by resisting confirmation of the sale upon the return of the commissioner's report. Threlkelds v. Campbell, 2 Gratt. 198, 44 Am. Dec. 384. See also Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79, supra, l. b. 9, and Dickinson v. Chism, 2 T. B. Mon. 145, infra, IV. 1.

c. Judgments in favor of purchasers.

An injunction was granted against a judgment where the same was on a breach of warranty of deed, for reimbursement of growing crops recovered by a tenant from the grantee, where the grantor reserved such crops in the sale, but by mistake of the scrivener the reservation was omitted from the deed. Thompson v. Tilton, 34 N. J. Eq. 306.

A judgment for the purchase money obtained on a covenant of seisin after the covenantor died was enjoined where the title was perfected by the personal representative and a conveyance was tendered on a suit for specific performance, as the administratrix could not defend the action at law, as a court of law had no means of compelling the acceptance of the title. Reese v. Smith, 12 Mo. 344.

An injunction was granted against a judgment where the recovery was by a purchaser on a title bond for failure to convey, and the representative of the vendor tendered a conveyance conformable to the title bond, and the vendee at the time of the man on account of the giving of said undertaking; that the judgment obtained by Bollman is in full force and unpaid; that plaintiff is now and at all times has been, ready and willing to account to Bollman for all property taken upon said executions, and to indemnify and save him harmless for all costs and damages resulting from such seizure, and is ready and willing and offers to pay into court for his benefit all moneys justly due Bollman on account thereof, together with all costs and expenditures incurred by him, which plaintiff ought equitably and fairly to pay on such account; that Bollman and Rothwell are insolvent; that the former has caused execution to be issued upon his judgment, and placed the same in the hands of said defendant Losey, as sheriff, who threatens to levy the same upon the property of Pilger, McClary, and Pasewalk. The purchase knew that a part of the land was held by another and failed to bring an action to prevent such possession ripening into a good title. Willbanks v. Duncan, 4 Desauss. Eq. 536.

But an injunction was refused where the judgment was in favor of a purchaser in an action of covenant on a title bond for a forfeiture, and the forfeiture was negligent and voluntary. The chancellor cannot relieve merely because the holder of a broken covenant elects to seek his relief at law. Oldham v. Woods, 3 T. B. Mon. 48.

II. Fraud.

Non est factum and forgery, or fraud in obtaining the contract on which the judgment is founded, or fraud in the consideration, are a legal defense; and usually injunctions for such causes have been denied where such defense was made or might have been made at law. But injunctions have been granted where the failure to defend was excused, and in some cases on the ground of fraud alone, and where the remedy at law was doubtful.

a. Where the defense is forgery or non est factum.

An injunction will be refused where defense of non est factum is not made at law. Haden v. Garden, 7 Leigh, 157.

So, an injunction was refused where complainant in the injunction suit was negligent in not making a defense of non est factum at law. Mershon v. Bank of the Commonwealth, 6 J. J. Marsh. 438.

And where the defense against an execution on a replevin bond was that the name of the surety was forged, and an affidavit of illegality would have been a sufficient defense. Rounsaville v. McGinnis, 83 Ga. 579.

And where the defense was that the bond sued on was obtained by fraud, and also a defense of non est factum, and no excuse was made for failing to make a defense at law, although courts of equity and law have concurrent jurisdiction in such matters. Haden v. Garden, 7 Leigh, 157.

But an injunction was granted where the obligor in a bail bond never executed the same and an office judgment was taken, although he made no defense at law after information that his name was on the bond. The injunction was granted on the ground that the remedy at law was doubtful. Spotswood v. Higgenbotham, 6 Munf. 313.

And where the defense was that the bill in suit was a forgery, and the excuse for not defending at law was that there was a similar genuine bill which was believed to have been the one in suit, and which was not discovered until after judgment. Ferrell v. Allen, 5 W. Va. 43.

And where the same was obtained on a forged assignment of a bond, and was for the use of an assignee, thereby preventing a defense that the same had been settled by a prior garnishment suit. Jameson v. Deshields, 3 Gratt. 4.

And where the defense to an action of trover was that it was on a bill of sale which was written over a blank signature after the obligor's death, and was fraudulent. Crawford v. Crawford, 4 Desauss. Eq. 176.

And where a judgment was obtained by fraud 31 L. R. A.

without notice on a forged note, although there was a concurrent remedy at law which was not used at law and did not prevent equitable jurisdiction. Douglass v. Joyner, 1 Baxt. 82.

See also for forgery, Key v. Knott, 9 Gill & J. 342, infra, II. c.

b. In obtaining a contract.

An injunction was refused because the defense could have been and was not made at law, where the defense was that a note had been obtained by fraud, although complainant in the injunction suit alleged that the trial court held that "none of the matters set forth in this bill were proper and legal defenses to the said action." Stockton v. Briggs, 5 Jones, Eq. 309.

And where the defense that an agreement in suit had been obtained by fraud was excluded on the trial as not a legal defense, as the remedy was by writ of error. Edmanson v. Best, 57 Fed. Rep. 531, 18 U. S. App. 288.

And where the defense was that an insurance policy was obtained by fraud, but the complainants were not prevented from using such a defense at law by any acts of the plaintiffs at law. Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 332, 3 L. ed. 362.

And where it was claimed that the note in suit had been obtained by fraud when complainant was delirious, and that there was a want of consideration. Peyton v. Rawlens, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 77.

And where the defense to an action of ejectment was that the plaintiff at law had practiced fraud in procuring warrants for the land which belonged to complainant, and might have been used on the trial of the caveat. Noland v. Cromwell, 4 Munf. 155.

And where the ground was fraud in obtaining the contract on which the judgments were founded, and negligence in not making such defense at law was not excused. New York v. Brady, 115 N. Y. 599.

And where the defense to an action on a sealed bill was that it was obtained by fraud and imposition, but the charge of fraud was not sustained, and sufficient excuse was not given for negligence in not defending at law. Powers v. Butler, 4 N. J. Eq. 465.

An injunction was refused because the defense was tried at law, where the defense was that the obligation in suit was obtained by fraud. Hendrickson v. Hincley, 58 U. S. 17 How. 443, 15 L. ed. 123; Phillips v. Pullen, 45 N. J. Eq. 5.

Where the defense was fraud in obtaining a note and failure of consideration. Johnson v. Smokey (Miss.) 4 So. 788.

And where the defense was fraud and release from royalties for cutting wood under a lease, but the same was or might have been tried in a former suit. Amey v. Calkins (N. J.) 19 Atl. 388.

And where an injunction was sought against an action on a judgment obtained in another state, and it was claimed that the note on which such action was based was procured by fraud, as the matter was res judicata. Smedes v. Isley, 68 Miss. 560.

And where the defense against a judgment in petition contains other averments, which will be adverted to further on. The defendants, for answer, admit that Tyrell is clerk of the district court and Losey is sheriff of Madison county; that Bollman was sheriff of Knox county, and Rothwell was his deputy; admit the recovery of the judgments in the justice's court by the Norwegian Plow Company, the levy of the execution by the deputy sheriff upon the goods in the possession of Fisher, the recovery of the judgment by Deere, Wells, & Co. in the circuit court against Bollman, the institution of the suit by the latter, and the recovery of the judgment against the sureties on the bond; and deny all other averments of the petition. The defendants also allege that, at the time the suit was commenced by Deere, Wells, & Co., the plaintiff herein was notified thereof, and employed counsel to defend the same, trespass for levying on goods in the hands of a trustee was that the deed of trust was void and fraudulent. Cailland v. Estwick, 2 Anst. 381.

And where the defense was fraud in procuring the signature to a note in judgment, evidence of which was offered in a motion for a new trial, although not one of the grounds for a new trial, and the same was held to be res judicata and complainant was negligent in not making a defense at law. Swain v. Sampson, 6 La. Ann. 799.

An injunction was refused where the action was on county warrants, claimed to be fraudulently issued through a conspiracy. But these warrants were not identified with the fraudulent ones, and complainant was negligent in not defending, and delayed seeking relief in equity. Brown v. Buena Vista County, 95 U. S. 157, 2 L. ed. 422.

And where the judgment was obtained against a third party on a note taken by force from complainant, who delayed seeking relief until an action for tort was barred by limitation. Hays v. Crquhart, 63 Ga. 323.

But an injunction was granted where it was doubtful if a defense could have been made at law that the bond sued upon was obtained by fraud, and defense at law was not made. West v. Wayne, 3 Mo. 16.

And where the grounds were that it was on a bond obtained by false representations and assigned to a confederate before maturity so as to cut off defenses at law, and the payee of the bond and the assignee were both nonresidents of the state. Hauser v. Mann, 1 Murph. 410.

And where the ground was fraud in obtaining the note sued upon, and a showing was made of insolvency of plaintiff at law and fraud in the consideration of the note and irreparable damages, although the right to the remedy by injunction was doubtful. Tenn. Code, §§ 3946, 4434, providing that injunctions may be granted, do not control the discretion of the judges. Flippin v. Knaffle, 2 Tenn. Ch. 238.

And where a note indorsed for accommodation to be used in a particular manner, was used in another way and was given to another party subject to equities, and the fraud was not known at the time of judgment, the maker believing the note to have been properly used. Hickerson v. Raiguel, 2 Heisk. 329.

And where the action was on a note procured by fraud, by a son-in-law from his father-in-law, imposing on his ignorance, age, and confidence. But the judgment was allowed to stand as a security for what might be due in a settlement of complicated accounts. Hadley v. Rountree, 6 Jones, Eq. 107.

c. Generally.

An injunction was refused because complainant might have defended at law but failed to do so, where the defense was fraud. Haughy v. Strang, 2 Port. (Ala.) 177, 27 Am. Dec. 648.

And where the defense was fraud and breach of warranty. Robinson v. Gilbreth, 4 Bibb, 183.

And where the defense was fraud in a contract on which the suit was founded and complainant did not show that a defense was made or that complainant was not negligent in not making the same at law. Parker v. Morton, 5 Blackf. 1.

Under the Texas Constitution, providing that a 31 L. R. A.

suit shall be tried without any regard to any distinction in law and equity, a judgment will not be enjoined where the legal defenses of failure of consideration and that the notes sued upon were procured by fraud, were abandoned at law supposing a more ample defense would be allowed by resorting to equity. Prewitt v. Perry, 6 Tex. 290.

An injunction was refused where the defense was fraud in the consideration of the debt, and negligence in not defending at law was not excused. Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. 436, 1 Am. Dec. 121.

In Muscatine v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 1 Dill. 536, it was said that matters such as fraud or failure of consideration which should have been pleaded as a defense, are not sufficient grounds, after judgment, upon which to apply for an injunction against the same.

An injunction was refused where the defense was fraud and failure of consideration and there was a trial at law. And W. Va. Code, chap. 126, § 5, provided that where the defense was an equitable one and was made at law it should be barred in equity, unless upon such a ground as would entitle the party to relief in equity against the judgment in other cases. Bias v. Vickers, 27 W. Va. 456.

In West v. Wayne, 3 Mo. 16, it was said that in matters of concurrent jurisdiction for a defense of fraud, if a defense was made at law, an injunction would not be granted.

An injunction was refused where the judgment was on a note held by an assignee before maturity for value and without notice, and the ground was an equitable defense of failure of consideration and fraud in the sale of the article for which the note was given. Donelson v. Young, Meigs, 155.

And where the ground was fraud of the obligee in regard to a contract, but which was not part of the same transaction as the note in suit, although Va. Code 1873, chap. 168, §§ 5, 6, provided for equitable relief from contracts procured by fraud. Barnett v. Barnett, 53 Va. 504.

And where complainant participated in the fraudulent execution of the writing in suit, which was to be used to deceive others. Ibid.

But some cases in which the defense of fraud was not made at law granted injunctions on the ground that the remedy in equity was more ample, and other cases, that the failure to defend at law was excused.

So, an injunction was granted where the defense was fraud and was not made, as equity could afford more adequate relief. Boyce v. Grundy, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655.

And where the defense was that the action was upon a single bill and the consideration was a forged post note on a bank, which defense of failure of consideration could not be pleaded at law. Key v. Knott, 9 Gill & J. 342.

And where there was fraud in the consideration of the note in suit, and the failure to defend at law was excused and the indorsee who obtained judgment on the note in action had notice of such fraud. Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246.

And where the defendant in a mortgage foreclosure decree had been imposed upon and prevailed upon to give a bond for double the amount of the debt and for which such decree was taken, and had exclusive control of the defense therein; and that, upon the institution of the said suit against the sureties, the Norwegian Plow Company was notified of the fact, employed counsel to defend it, and had full control of the defense, and paid all the expenses in connection with the defense of said action. For reply, plaintiff admits that it was advised of the fact of the commencement of the actions referred to in the petition; denies all other allegations of the answer; and alleges that at the time of the commencement of the action in the circuit court, and at the time of the rendition of the judgment, plaintiff had no notice or knowledge that Bollman or his deputy had converted to their own use a large portion of the property for the value of which said suit was and the injunction was granted on the ground of fraud in the consideration. Scriven v. Hursh, 39 Mich. 98.

In Appleton v. Harwell, Cooke (Tenn.) 242, it was held that where the defense was fraud and the trial at law was not fairly had, an injunction should be granted.

For fraud see supra, I. b. 8; Calloway v. McElroy, 3 Ala. 406, supra, I. b. 3; Boyce v. Grundy, supra, supra; Lee v. Vaughan, Sneed (Ky.) 238, supra, I. b. 6.

For fraud and mistake, see note to Griggs v. Docter, 89 Wis. 161, 30 L. R. A. 380, "Injunctions against judgments in garnishment proceedings."

For injunctions on the ground of fraud, see also note to John V. Farwell Co. v. Hilbert, 91 Wis. 437, 30 L. R. A. 235, "Injunctions against judgments entered on confession," subd. III.

III. Public policy.

a. Generally.

That a contract is contrary to public policy is a legal defense and must be made at law or excused. Some cases have refused the injunction on the ground that this is a legal defense, some on the ground that complainant is in pari delicto, and some on the ground that there is a remedy by other proceedings. There are a few exceptional cases in the early reports that granted injunctions for this cause.

As to confederate money, gambling, and usury, see next subheads.

An injunction was refused for failure to defend at law where the grounds were, first that the contract was for slaves imported from another state and was illegal; second, that the complainant was a surety on the note sued upon and was released by indulgence; third, that the slaves were unsound, but complainant had united in a forthcoming bond after a levy of execution. Creath v. Sims, 46 U. S. 5 How. 192, 12 L. ed. 110.

And an injunction was refused for negligence in not defending at law, where the defense was that the debt and contract for the importation of slaves were contrary to public policy; but the complaint was in pari delicto, and afterwards gave a forthcoming bond. Sample v. Barnes, 55 U. S. 14 How. 70, 14 L. ed. 330.

And where the defense was that the debt was for the importation of slaves and contrary to public policy. Thomas v. Phillips, 4 Smedes & M. 358; Green v. Robinson, 5 How. (Miss.) 80; Glidewell v. Hite, Id. 110.

And an injunction was refused against a judgment where the defense was that the consideration was the purchase of slaves contrary to the Constitution of the state of Mississippi, but the defense was not made at law, because complainant was ashamed to urge it. Truly v. Wanzler, 46 U. S. 5 How. 141, 12 L. ed. 85.

And where the defense against costs at common law was maintenance. If it was a defense it was a legal matter and one for the common law to deal with. Elborough v. Ayres, L. R. 10 Eq. 367, 39 L. J. Ch. 601, 23 L. T. N. S. 68, 18 Week. Rep. 913.

And where attorney's fees were included in the judgment and the contract for such fees was contrary to public policy and void, and there was a remedy by motion to set aside, or by writ of error. Morgan v. England, Wright (Ohio) 112.

L. R. A.

Where the debt in judgment was on a contract for prison labor, and was claimed to be contrary to law, and complainants had received the benefit of the services, and had violated the contract by neglecting to pay for services rendered after the judgment. It was held that if the contract was illegal the remedy was at law, and if not illegal there was no ground for an injunction. Young v. Beardsley, 11 Paige, 93.

And where the grounds were that the debt was contrary to public policy and was to compound a crime, an injunction was refused for neglecting to defend at law. The injunction was also refused on the further ground that the note given to make good an embezzlement was not to compound a crime. Bibb v. Hitchcock, 49 Ala. 468, 20 Am. Rep. 284.

And where the defense against a foreclosure was that the mortgage was owned by a national bank, but the prohibition against dealing in mortgages did not apply as this mortgage was owned by a state bank prior to its organization as a national bank. Scotfield v. State Nat. Bank, 9 Neb. 316, 31 Am. Rep. 412.

But an injunction was granted where the ground was that the consideration was a bill of exchange given for the promotion of complainant to a lieutenantancy, but that as soon as promoted he was removed by the defendant in the injunction suit, and that the debt was contrary to public policy, and complainant also prayed for a discovery. It was held that the rule pariceps criminis did not apply, and that in the case stated equity had jurisdiction although defense was not made at law. Whittingham v. Burgoyne, 3 Anst. 900.

And where the action was on a bond for failure to marry, and was granted on the ground of public policy or want of mutuality in the contract. Cock v. Richards, 10 Ves. Jr. 429.

And where the consideration was three notes given to an occupier of the same parish, who was interested in defending another acting against complainant as rector, and who had advanced money for that purpose and promised that no improper use should be made of the notes, but soon afterwards put them in suit, which was contrary to good conscience. Chednel v. Churchman, 3 Bro. Ch. 16, note.

And where the action was on a bond for indemnity for costs, conditioned to pay plaintiff at law one half the value of the property recovered, and plaintiff at law was at no expense, and the consideration was unconscionable. Tooley v. Jasper, 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 383.

b. Debt for confederate money.

In Texas when the consideration of confederate money was held to avoid a judgment on the ground of public policy, injunctions were granted, but subsequently such consideration was held to be valid to the extent of the value of the confederate notes. In Louisiana the failure to make a defense where such was the consideration prevented equitable interference.

An injunction was granted against a judgment where it was rendered on a receipt for confederate money, as the same was contrary to public policy and illegal, and the judgment was void. The question of failure to defend at law was not discussed, brought, and had no knowledge of such conversion until after the recovery of the judgment sought to be enjoined herein.

Judgment having gone against the plaintiff in the case at bar upon the pleading, in reviewing the decision of the trial court we must regard as true every fact well pleaded in the petition, and that every allegation of the answer put in issue by the reply should be taken as not true. In other words, if the facts set up in the petition, taken in connection with the admission of the plaintiff in the reply that it had notice at the time of the pendency of the action of Deere, Wells, & Co. against Bollman, and that of Bollman against the sureties on the indemnifying bond, were insufficient to entitle the plaintiff to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment in ques-though insisted upon in the briefs. Fox v. Woods, 34 Tex. 220. (But this was in effect overruled as to such consideration avoiding the contracts, in Mathews v. Rucker, 41 Tex. 636.)

In Thompson v. Bohannon, 38 Tex. 241, an injunction was granted against a judgment where the debt was confederate money although no defense was made at law, as the court erred in rendering a default judgment without requiring the plaintiff at law to show that he had a good cause of action. (This case is not referred to in Roller v. Wooldridge, infra, but the doctrine in regard to such judgments is regarded as changed by the decision in the United States Supreme Court.)

In Thompson v. Bohannon, supra, it was held that in actions on contracts made by administrators, trustees, and guardians, for confederate money, such contracts may be enforced for the benefit of heirs, legatees, and creditors to the extent of the actual value of the consideration, changing the former rule of court; but on individual contracts the same will be enjoined even after twelve months from judgment.

In Mathews v. Rucker, 41 Tex. 636, and Roller v. Wooldridge, 46 Tex. 485, it was held that confederate money may be a consideration for a contract, overruling Fox v. Woods, 34 Tex. 220; Shepard v. Taylor, 35 Tex. 774; Scott v. Atchison, 36 Tex. 76; McGar v. Nixon, Id. 289; Lacy v. Clements, Id. 661; Grant v. Ryan, 37 Tex. 37; Lane v. Thomas, Id. 157; Kyle v. House, 38 Tex. 155; Vance v. Burtis, 39 Tex. 88; Dittmar v. Myers, Id. 295; Sutton v. Sutton, Id. 549.

In McManus v. Scott, 48 Tex. 601, which was not an injunction suit, the change in the line of decisions in Texas in regard to confederate money is noted as conforming to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Thorington v. Smith, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 1, 19 L. ed. 361.

In Thorington v. Smith, supra, which was not an injunction suit, it was held that under a contract for payment in confederate treasury notes a recovery could only be had for the actual value at the time and place of contract, in lawful money of the United States.

In Schroeder v. Fromme, 31 Tex. 602, the court took no notice of a petition to enjoin a judgment, where the consideration was claimed to have been a treasonable loan of confederate money.

An injunction was refused where the defense was that the debt was payable in confederate currency, but the failure to defend at law was not excused. Butman v. Forsbair, 21 La. Ann. 165.

c. Gambling debts.

Where the consideration was a gambling debt which is declared void by the statute, injunctions have been granted. Some cases have refused injunctions in the absence of such a statute, on the ground that such a defense should have been made at law, or where such consideration was not established, or where the same had been used on the trial, or where the element of estoppel entered into the judgment.

So, an injunction on the ground that the consideration was a gambling debt and was granted against a judgment where the Virginia statute declared judgments given on a gaming consideration were utterly void. And it was further held that the 31 L. R. A.

failure to defend at law need not be excused. Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. (Va.) 214.

And where the consideration was a gambling debt, and Va. Rev. Code, chap. 147, p. 561, taken from 9 Anne, chap. 14, rendered the gaming transaction unlawful and avoided all judgments for money won at play, and was granted on the ground of surprise at the testimony of one of complainant's witnesses. It was said that a party may defend at law or may obtain relief in equity if it does not defend at law,—the case of a gaming promise being an exception to the general rule in regard to defenses at law. White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.

And where the judgment was against a sheriff for damages for defective levy of an execution under a judgment as a gambling bond, as Va. acts 1748, chap. 25, and 1779, chap. 42, provided that all promises or other contracts, judgments, etc., for money won at gaming, shall be utterly void, and this statute was held to apply even if the gaming bond had passed to an assignee without notice. The failure to defend at law was not discussed in the opinion. Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612.

And where the defense could have been made at law but was not, as the Mississippi statute make the note and contract void. Lucas v. Waul, 12 Smedes & M. 157.

And where the consideration was a gambling debt, as Clay's (Ala.) Dig. 350, gives the right to defend against a note on a gaming consideration at law, or, if a party neglects to do this, to assail the judgment afterwards on that ground by a bill in equity. But as complainant neglected for seven years to take any steps he was required to pay all costs. Paulding v. Watson, 21 Ala. 279.

And in Mallett v. Butcher, 41 Ill. 332, where no defense was made at law, as Scates's (Ill.) Comp. Stat. chap. 66, § 1, provides that all promises, judgments, etc., for money won at gaming shall be void, and § 3 provides that such judgments may be set aside by any court of equity, and § 4, that no assignment shall affect the defense or remedy in such a case. This is an exception to the general rule that a legal defense must be made at law. (Overruling Abrams v. Camp, 4 Ill. 290, to that extent.)

And in Beveridge v. Hewitt, 8 Ill. App. 467, where the consideration was a gambling contract on a grain deal, and the failure to defend at law was excused, as gambling contracts in grain are prohibited by Ill. Crim. Code, § 130, providing that contracts on grain options to sell or buy in the future are void, and the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Brud's Appeal, 55 Pa. 294, held that a contract to purchase shares of stock without the intention to receive them was a gaming contract. (But see Smith v. Kammerer, infra.)

And where defense was not made at law, as Ky. act 1798 provides that all promises, agreements, notes, bills, bonds, judgments, etc., won at gaming are void. The remedy was either at law or in equity. Clay v. Fry, 3 Bibb. 248, 6 Am. Dec. 654.

And where the action was upon a bond held by a bona fide holder without notice, although no defense was made at law, as Statute Anne, chap. 14, providing that such notes, judgments, etc., are void, was in effect in Maryland. Emerson v. Townsend, 73 Md. 224.

So, under 9 Anne, chap. 14, providing that all notes, bills, bonds, judgments, mortgages, or other tion, the order of dismissal was properly entered.

It is too well settled by the courts of this country to require the citation of authorities in support thereof that, in a proper case, equity will grant relief against a judgment fraudulently obtained, when a meritorious cause of action or defense is shown. An exception to this general rule is that a judgment at law obtained through the fraudulent conduct of the judgment creditor will not be enjoined where the defense could have been made at law. Stated differently a court of equity will not interfere because of fraud alone, but the person aggrieved must make it appear that a good reason existed why the defense was not interposed in the original suit. As stated by Mr. High in his valuable work on Injunctions: "Where defendant has allowed a suit to proceed to judgment without any attempt on his securities or conveyances whatsoever, given for a gambling consideration, shall be utterly void. This was held not to be repealed by Md. act 1813, chap. 84, providing that such securities shall not be demandable or recoverable before any court of justice, and which act only rendered them voidable. The fact that complainant alleged that the party to whom the note was given did not win, but that complainant was the winner, will not prevent equitable relief. Gough v. Pratt, 9 Md. 523.

And where the consideration could not be pleaded at law, although the master of rolls had held that complainant by appearing to a sci. fa. instead of pleading to the same could have no relief. Lord Cremorne v. Bruen, 2 Molloy, 496, 12 Eng. Ch. 573.

In Nelson v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. 354, an injunction was granted against a judgment where the consideration was a gambling debt. But it was said that if the holder of the draft in suit was induced to take the same by complainant's representation that the consideration was good an injunction would be denied. The question as to failure to defend at law was not discussed.

An injunction was granted against a judgment where the defense was not made at law, as Mo. Stat. gaming act, § 1, says that all moneys, notes, bonds, judgments, etc., made, given, granted, etc., where the whole or any part of the consideration thereof shall be for money won at gaming, or playing at cards, dice, or any other game, shall be void and of no effect. The second section provides that all judgments, mortgages, assurances, bonds, notes, bills, specialties, promises, covenants, agreements, or other acts, deeds, securities, or conveyances, given, granted, drawn, or executed contrary to the provisions of this act, may be set aside and vacated by any court of equity. And it is further held that this statute applied notwithstanding the act respecting chancery practice provided that in all cases where adequate relief cannot be had at law, the several courts shall have the power to proceed according to the rules in equity. Collins v. Lee, 2 Mo. 16.

But in Wilkerson v. Whitney, 7 Mo. 296, it was held that "the Missouri act of December 30, 1824 (Rev. Code 1825, p. 410), declared that all judgments, mortgages, assurances, bonds, notes, bills, specialties, etc., given, granted, drawn, or executed contrary to the provisions of that act, might be set aside and vacated by any court of equity, upon bill filed for that purpose by any person so granting, giving, and entering into, or executing the same. The act of March 9, 1835 (Rev. Code 1835, p. 290), merely declares that all judgments, conveyances, bonds, bills, notes and securities when the consideration is money or property won at any game or gambling device, shall be void. The act further provides that any defense under it may be specially pleaded or given in evidence under the general issue. The judgments spoken of in the act of 1825 (1824) I understand to be judgments by confession, or warrant of attorney. The words given, granted, executed, entering into, could hardly be applicable to a judgment upon plea or by default. And though the act of 1835 has omitted these words, and speaks generally of judgments, bonds, notes, and other assurances, yet it is plain that no other judgments were embraced in this provision than judgments by confession;" and it was held that the failure to make a defense at law that the consideration of the judgment was a gambling debt prevented an injunction where the judgment was not by confession. This construction of this statute in effect overrules Collins v. Lee, 2 Mo. 16, although that case is not referred to and does not appear to have been noticed in any subsequent decision in the supreme court.

In Thomas v. Phillips, 4 Smedes & M. 358, it was said that equitable interference against judgments on gaming contracts are granted where the statute provided that such agreements are void.

In OWENS v. VAN WINKLE GIN & M. Co. (Ga.) 23 S. E. 416, an injunction was refused against a judgment on a gambling debt because in that state there was no statute making such judgments void, and the right to defend at law prevented an injunction. This is in accord with the general doctrine.

An injunction was refused against a judgment where the consideration was a gambling debt and no excuse was given for not defending at law. Giddens v. Lea, 3 Humph. 130; Dunn v. Holloway, 1 Dev. & Eq. 322.

In Graves v. Houlditch, 2 Price, 147, an injunction was refused against a default judgment on a bill of exchange given for a gambling debt, where defense was not made at law.

An injunction was refused against a judgment where the consideration was a gambling debt and complainant had advised the holder of the same to purchase it, and the purchaser had no notice of any equity against it. Hoomes v. Smock, 1 Wash. (Va.) 389; Buckner v. Smith, Id. 296, 1 Am. Dec. 463.

And where the defense in Pennsylvania was that the debt was a gambling transaction in Chicago in wheat, and that the mortgage on which a sci. fa. had been issued was a collateral to secure that debt in judgment, and was refused because of proceedings in another court to open the judgment, and on the further ground that Ill. Crim. Code, § 130-132, making a gambling contract void, did not apply, as this was an executed contract, and that complainant was in pari delicto. Smith v. Kammerer, 152 Pa. 198. But see Beveridge v. Hewitt, 8 Ill. App. 467.

And where the defense was made at law that the debt was a gaming one. Moffett v. White, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 325.

And where the consideration was a gambling debt, and defense was or might have been made at law. Jones v. Jones, N. C. Term Rep. 110.

In Abrams v. Camp, 4 Ill. 290, an injunction was refused against a judgment where the consideration was a gambling debt, and a defense was made at law, and the failure to defend successfully was due to complainant's negligence. Under Ill. Rev. Law (Gale Stat. 320), providing that all notes given in consideration of money won at play are void, relief will not be granted in matters of concurrent jurisdiction after a trial at law. And it was said that relief would not be granted after a failure to defend. But this last proposition was overruled in Mallett v. Butcher, 41 Ill. 382.

An injunction was refused where the defense was a gaming consideration, but the same was not part to obtain proof, an injunction will not be allowed on the ground of fraud in the original transactions on which the suit was founded. So, where the fraud relied upon might have been used as a defense to the action at law, but it does not appear whether it was so used, or whether defendant neglected to avail himself of it, the judgment will not be restrained." 1 High, Inj. § 194.

Applying the principles already stated to established by the evidence, the judgment having been assigned and the assignee having denied all knowledge of the consideration, although the assignor did not answer the bill. Timberlake v. Cobbs, 2 J. J. Marsh. 136.

d. Usury.

In regard to injunctions on the ground of usury the general rule is that injunctions will be refused where the bill of discovery was not filed in time, or if there is a failure to make a defense at law, or if the usury is not established, or if no tender is made, or if the bill of complaint does not put usury directly in issue, or if the complainant is not the party entitled to plead usury. Some cases have granted injunctions without regard to the failure to make a defense at law, and some on the ground that the bill of complaint was for an accounting, and some where the defense was embarrassed, and where the statute provided for such relief, and where the same was in the nature of a penalty against which equity grants relief.

As to usury in judgments on confession, see note to John V. Farwell Co. v. Hilbert (Wis.) 30 L. R. A. 235. Injunctions against judgments entered on confession.

Generally an injunction on the ground of usury will be refused for the failure to make such defense at law where such failure is not excused, or if a bill of discovery is not filed before judgment. Robb v. Halsey, 11 Smedes & M. 140; Teague v. Russell, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 420; Barrows v. Doty, Harr. Ch. 1; Smith v. Walker, 8 Smedes & M. 131; Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496; Yeizer v. Burke, 3 Smedes & M. 439; McRaven v. Forbes, 6 How. (Miss.) 569.

So, an injunction on the ground of usury was refused against a judgment because the same was a legal defense and the failure to make the same was not excused where the defense was that the note in suit was executed for a previous judgment which contains usury, and it was a compromise of the prior suit, and the note was assigned to another party. Standifer v. McWhorter, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 532.

And where the defense was not made at law, on account of a mistake at law. Jones v. Watkins, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 81.

And where complainant in the injunction suit was a surety. It was further held that 1 N.Y. Rev. Stat. 772, § 8 (Stat. 1837, p. 477, § 4), providing that a "borrower" seeking relief need not pay any interest or principal, did not apply to a surety. Vilas v. Jones, 1 N. Y. 274.

And where Ky. Civ. Code, § 14, provided that a judgment obtained in an action by ordinary proceedings shall not be annulled by equitable proceedings except for a defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered and this modified Ky. Rev. Stat. p. 420, § 3, providing for equitable defense for usury. Chinn v. Mitchell, 2 Met. (Ky.) 92.

An injunction on the ground of usury was refused for negligence in not making a defense in law, which was not excused. Berry v. Thompson, 17 Johns. 436. Affirming Thompson v. Berry, 3 Johns. Ch. 365; Moran v. Woodyard, 8 B. Mon. 537; Crawford v. Wingfield, 25 Tex. 414; Perrine v. Carlisle, 19 Ala. 686; Smith v. Powell, 50 Ill. 21.

81 L. R. A.

the case made by the pleadings, it is plain that plaintiff is not in a position to invoke the aid of equity to prevent the enforcement of the judgment obtained against the sureties upon the ground of fraud. The act of fraud imputed to Bollman and his deputy consisted in converting to their own use certain property of Deere, Wells, & Co. at the time of the levying of the executions against Fisher, and in suing for and recovering the value thereof against the sureties

And an injunction was refused on the same ground where Illinois interest law of 1845, § 6, provided for a suit in equity to recover usury that has been paid, as this did not change this rule. Lucas v. Spencer, 27 Ill. 15.

And where the complainant in the injunction suit was an executor. Cantey v. Blair, 1 Rich. Eq. 41.

And where the laws of Ohio did not render usurious contracts void. It was said that if such a contract was void, an injunction would not be granted where there was negligence in not defending at law. Morgan v. England, Wright (Ohio) 112.

And where no reason was given for negligence in not making such defense at law, or for delaying until after judgment before asking for relief. Lansing v. Eddy, 1 Johns. Ch. 49.

An injunction on the ground of usury was refused where no excuse was given for failure to defend at law. It was further held that a bill for discovery should have been filed before judgment at law. Jones v. Kirksey, 10 Ala. 579; Mallory v. Matlock, Id. 595; McCollum v. Prewitt, 37 Ala. 573, 1 Ala. Sel. Cas. 498.

And where complainant suffered a verdict at law when he might have pleaded the statute of usury, or upon certain terms obtained the aid of a bill of discovery and neglected to use such defense. Thompson v. Berry, 3 Johns. Ch. 395. Affirmed Berry v. Thompson, 17 Johns. 436.

And where the Virginia statute against usury, § 3, provided that the borrower may compel the disclosure in chancery on oath of usury, and there was no reason given why such disclosure was not sought before judgment. The statute does not apply if the same could be established by other evidence than probing the conscience of the plaintiff at law. Brown v. Swann, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 497, 9 L. ed. 508.

Some cases have refused injunctions against judgments containing usury because there was no tender of the amount justly due, as he who seeks equity must do equity. McRaven v. Forbes, 6 How. (Miss.) 569; Hill v. Reifsnider, 39 Md. 429; Topping v. Van Pelt, Hoffm. Ch. 545; Neurath v. Hecht, 62 Md. 221.

An injunction will not be granted if the bill of complaint does not show that there is usury in the judgment, or if the alleged usury is not established.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment where the bill did not allege with any exactness the amount of usury or tender the principal. Neurath v. Hecht, supra.

And where the usury was not established. Compound interest is not usury. Hale v. Hale, 1 Coldw. 233, 78 Am. Dec. 490.

And where the bill did not put usury directly in issue. Bloss v. Hull, 27 W. Va. 503.

And where the only allegation of the bill was that since the death of the obligee his widow had been paid $100 for extra interest, and there was no statement that this was in pursuance of the original agreement, as it might have been for delay of payment and then it would not have affected the note; and the denial of the answer was not contradicted by the evidence. Brown v. Toell, 5 Rand. (Va.) 543, 16 Am. Dec. 759.

upon the indemnifying bond. It is true that both in the reply and in one place in the petition it is stated that plaintiff had no knowledge of such conversion until after the rendition of the judgment in favor of Bollman and against the sureties; but such allegation is inconsistent with the following averment of the petition: "Plaintiff further alleges that prior to the bringing of said action against said Pilger, McClary and Pasewalk, and against this plaintiff, the Norwegian Plow Company offered to account to and pay said defendant Bollman for all the property levied upon by him or by said defendant Rothwell on said judgment in favor of this plaintiff and against said Fisher, together with all damages, costs, or other expenditures occasioned or incurred by said Bollman or Rothwell, or either of them, on account of, and for the seizure and sale of, property claimed by Deere, Wells, & Co., under

And where the grounds were that it was obtained by fraud and was usurious, and the complaint failed to set forth the sum actually due with legal interest. Hill v. Kelfsnider, 39 Md. 429.

And where it was only shown that the holder of the notes paid less than their nominal amount for them, as this was not usury. Fitzgerald v. Peck, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 125.

And where complainant had agreed to pay the face of a mortgage containing usury, as a part of the consideration of his purchase of property. Hough v. Horsey, 36 Md. 181, 11 Am. Rep. 484.

And where the transaction was held to be a conditional sale with a privilege of purchase, and not a loan and mortgage. Spence v. Steadman, 49 Ga. 133.

In Gee v. Southworth, 10 Paige, 297, it was said that an injunction will not be granted against a judgment on the ground of usury, unless complainant waives the forfeiture in his bill and permits the defendant to collect the principal and legal interest; but if complainant insists upon the forfeiture, he must bring the money into court to abide the event of the suit.

An injunction on the ground of usury was refused on account of complainant not being the party entitled to any relief, where he was a junior creditor and alleged usury in a prior judgment, as Ga. Code, §§ 3536, 3538, providing that creditors or bona fide purchasers may attack a judgment for defects on the face of the records rendering it void, or for fraud or collusion whenever it interferes with their rights, does not apply. Gatewood v. City Bank, 49 Ga. 45.

And where a junior judgment creditor claimed a sale was about to be made under a senior judgment containing usury, as a defense of usury was a personal privilege and could not be made the ground of injunction by another party where there was no fraud. Phillips v. Walker, 48 Ga. 55.

An injunction on the ground of usury was refused where the defendant had voluntarily waived his defense and the judgment was entered upon a warrant of attorney, and the judgment was attacked by a subsequent purchaser with notice of the judgment. French v. Shotwell, 5 Johns. Ch. 555. And on exceptions to the master's report the same was affirmed in 6 Johns. Ch. 235, and was affirmed on exceptions in 20 Johns. 668. (Shufelt v. Shufelt, 9 Paige, 137, 37 Am. Dec. 381, referring to 20 Johns. 668, says the reporter erred in supposing there was an appeal from the chancellor's decision upon the rehearing of the plea; the only appeal was from the order overruling exceptions to the defendant's answer.)

And where complainant's property was sold under a power of sale in a usurious mortgage, to the holder of the mortgage for a small amount, and the judgment was obtained against him for the balance,—as the remedy under N. C. Code, § 133, providing for setting aside the same on motion was sufficient. Walker v. Gurley, 83 N. C. 429.

And where complainant in the injunction suit did not tender the principal and interest, and had pleaded the general issue at law and made default at the trial. No relief can be had after a judgment in invitum, under N. Y. act May 15, 1837, § 8, pro- 81 L. R. A.

viding in effect that a borrower filing a bill merely for discovery of usury need not pay any interest, but must pay the principal, and a borrower filing a bill for relief where he had no opportunity of defense at law need not pay the principal but must pay the interest. Topping v. Van Pelt, Hoffm. Ch. 545.

And where the complainant in the injunction suit delayed for nine months after judgment seeking relief in equity. But it is said that relief may be granted against usury where defense was not made at law. Hitch v. Fenby, 6 Md. 218.

But an injunction was granted against a judgment where the defense was usury, although such defense was made in a justices' court, but a trial on appeal was prevented by irregularities of the justice or clerk. In cases of concurrent jurisdiction the trial at law will usually prevent relief in equity. Cave v. Davis, 5 T. B. Mon. 368.

And where the defense was usury and the borrower had paid the principal and lawful interest. The case does not discuss defense at law. Ennis v. Ginn, 5 Del. Ch. 180.

In Brockway v. Clark, 6 Ohio, 45, where the defense was that the action was on a note for a greater amount than due, with a provision in the note that on the payment of the amount due with interest the same would be discharged, an injunction was granted on the ground that equity will regard this as a penalty and relieve against it. This case is noted in Greenleaf's Overruled Cases, citing several subsequent cases. But the case of Brockway v. Clark refused to hold that a contract for usury was void, which was the same doctrine held in the subsequent Ohio cases.

In Chaney v. Cooke, 5 T. B. Mon. 248, it was said that a judgment of debt on a chattel mortgage will be enjoined for usury on a bill for an accounting if complainant tenders the amount due.

In Thomas v. Phillips, 4 Smedes & M. 358, it was said that injunctions are sometimes granted in cases of usury where the judgments were on confession, and in some cases are granted without regard to any special circumstance giving jurisdiction; but other courts refuse to interfere unless excuse is given for not defending at law.

In Brown v. Toell, 5 Rand. (Va.) 543, 16 Am. Dec. 759, it was said that even after the judgment at law equity will give relief for usury without requiring any reason for failing to defend at law.

In Tennessee the cases hold that, except during the time of the existence of Tenn. act 1844, relief cannot be had in equity unless the question of usury involves intricate and embarrassing matters of account.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment where the defense was usury paid by one of the complainants, although relief might have been had at law; but it was not plain and unembarrassed and the Tennessee statutes contemplated equitable relief against usury. Coleman v. Childress, 6 Yerg. 286 (1834).

And where the defense at law would be embarrassed, owing to the complex nature of the accounts. Frierson v. Moody, 3 Humph. 561 (1842).

But an injunction was refused against a judgment where the defense was usury and was not made at and by virtue of said executions; and that said defendant Bollman unlawfully and fraudulently and for the purpose of cheating, wronging, and defrauding this plaintiff for property so taken and sold, but then demanded that this plaintiff should account to and pay said defendant Bollman for the property taken by said defendants Bollman and Rothwell, and converted by them to their own private use." The foregoing quotation from the petition is an admission, it seems to us, that plaintiff prior to the inception of the suit in which the judgment sought to be enjoined was pronounced, was fully cognizant of the alleged fraudulent conduct of Bollman and his deputy, of which complaint is now made. If that is not a fair inference to be drawn from said averment of the petition, we are at a loss to know why this plaintiff offered to pay merely for the property seized and sold under the executions, together law, as Tenn. act 1835, chap. 50, §§ 4, 5, provided that a defendant who may be sued on a usurious contract may plead the usury on oath, to which the plaintiff may reply on oath and thus make an issue to be tried by a jury. It was said that if a defense at law was embarrassed relief would be given in equity. McKoin v. Cooley, 3 Humph. 559 (1842).

And where the defense was usury and complainant was negligent in not defending at law, and no embarrassing or complicated question was involved. Buchanan v. Nolin, 3 Humph. 63 (1842).

In Brandon v. Green, 7 Humph. 130 (1846), an injunction was granted where the defense was usury, under Tenn. act Jan. 26, 1844, providing for equitable relief on the ground of usury, where no defense was made at law or where the defense failed at law. It was said if it was not for this statute, relief would not be granted where the right to defend at law was unembarrassed.

In Bumpass v. Reams, 1 Sneed, 595 (1854), an injunction on the ground of usury was refused where complainant had made his defense at law, as Tenn. act 1850, chap. 53, authorizing discovery in a court of law, prevented equitable relief where the benefit of such defense was had at law. The act of 1844 gave relief in equity notwithstanding a trial at law. But since the act of 1850 a discovery obtained in an action at law was held res judicata. If no defense was made at law relief might be had in equity under act 1854, chap. 107.

In Lindsley v. James, 3 Coldw. 477 (1866), which was an action to enjoin an action at law on the ground of usury where it was claimed that Tenn. act 1844, chap. 167, conferring jurisdiction on courts of equity, was repealed by the Code, it was held that the act of 1835 conferred no new jurisdiction on courts of equity, and after a trial at law except on complicated matters equity would not give relief. But this was changed by Tenn. act 1844, chap. 167, and this was repealed by implication, if not directly, by Tenn. Code, § 41, and Tenn. act 1835, chap. 50, was substantially retained with the additional provision, § 4300, providing for concurrent jurisdiction, and the rule was therefore that the law involving jurisdiction of courts of law and equity stood precisely as it did prior to the passage of the act of 1844, chap. 167, and relief should be refused in equity unless a defense at law was embarrassed, and relief was denied on account of the bill for discovery not having been properly framed.

In Parham v. Pullian, 5 Coldw. 497 (1868), where usury was not established, it was said that chancery will not give relief on the ground of usury, against a judgment at law, where the debtor could have made his defense at law without embarrassment.

An injunction was granted where the defense was usury and the remedy at law was embarrassed by complication of renewals, as in Tennessee courts of equity and law have concurrent jurisdiction in regard to usury, and under the practice in that state a tender of the principal and interest was not necessary. It was said that the Tennessee act of 1844, providing for equitable relief notwithstanding a trial at law or failure to defend was not carried into the Code, and that the law stood as it did before the passage of that act, and the act of 1835, chap. 50, §§ 4, 5, which enlarged the power of a court of law, left the jurisdiction of a court of chancery where it was before. Chester v. Apperson, 4 Heisk. 659 (1871).

An injunction was refused against a judgment where the defense was usury and was not made at law through negligence, as Tenn. Code, § 4300, which was the same as Tenn. act 1835, providing for concurrent jurisdiction of law and equity in regard to usury, repealed Tenn. act 1844, providing for relief in equity. Greenfield v. Frierson, 7 Heisk. 633 (1872).

For usury, see Collins v. Clayton, 53 Ga. 649, infra, IV. a.

IV. Set-off.

a. Failure to assert at law.

Injunctions on account of set-offs that should have been used at law as a defense to the action were refused where no equitable ground for relief was shown. Cabell v. Roberts, 6 Rand. (Va.) 580; Donnell v. Parrott, 13 La. Ann. 251; Benton v. Roberts, 3 Rob. (La.) 96; Monroe v. McMicken, 8 Mart. N. S. 510; Lafon v. Desessart, 1 Mart. N. S. 71; Kennard v. Henderson, 9 Rob. (La.) 165; Cook v. Murphy, 7 Gill & J. 282; Standifer v. McWhorter, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 532; Risher v. Roush, 2 Mo. 95, 22 Am. Dec. 442; Carlyle v. Long, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 167.

And where the defense was also failure of consideration of the notes sued upon. Howell v. Motes, 54 Ala. 1.

And where the defense was also illegality of plaintiff's demand. Montgomery v. Griffin, Walk. (Miss.) 453.

And where the defense of an accommodation indorser arose out of a trust and an equitable right to have trust funds applied in discharge of a bill of exchange in suit. Foster v. State Bank, 17 Ala. 672.

And where such set-off was notes of the plaintiff held by complainant before judgment was rendered. Crow v. Watkins, 12 La. Ann. 845.

And where the answer in the equity suit denied the allegations of the bill that plaintiff at law failed to use diligence in collecting collaterals, and the motion to dissolve the injunction was on the bill and answer, and negligence in not defending at law was not excused. Cardin v. Jones, 23 Ga. 175.

And where the action was on a note by an indorser, and the obligee of the note was an insurance company, and complainant in the injunction suit had tendered notes issued by it, but there was negligence in failing to make a defense at law. Robbins v. Mount, 3 Ga. 74.

And where the action was by trustees of a corporation against stockholders on their subscription, and the injunction suit was to procure an accounting, but nothing was alleged which might not have been set up in the action at law. But the court stayed the collection of the judgment until the account was taken where the trustee assented to such a decree. Franklin Mill Co. v. Schmidt, 50 Ill. 208.

And where the same was damages for breach of warranty on the sale of property and for money loaned. Winchester v. Grovenor, 48 Ill. 517.

with costs. He must have been apprised that property belonging to Deere, Wells, & Co. other than that applied upon the executions had been taken by the sheriff, and for which the latter claimed compensation; since the petition avers that, when the proposition of settlement was made by plaintiff, Bollman "then demanded that this plaintiff should account to and pay said defendant Bollman for the property taken by said Bollman and Rothwell, and converted to their own use." The allegation of want of notice in the reply must be disregarded. As to the petition alone, we must look for the statement of the facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action. Two allegations of the petition in regard to notice or knowledge of the alleged fraud being inconsistent with each other, we must regard as true and

And where the judgment was for trespass and the complainant in the injunction suit had obtained title to the land before the judgment for trespass. Peytavin v. Winter, 8 La. 271.

And where the action was on a distress warrant. Nicolson v. Hancock, 4 Hen. & M. 491.

And where in three suits for $488 each, the set-off was $450, and usury $900, and the jurisdiction of the court was $500, as complainant could have used his set-off in one case and plea of usury in another. Collins v. Clayton, 53 Ga. 649.

And where the same was claimed because complainants in the injunction suit were prevented from using the same in the settlement in the probate court, by the advice of their counsel. Duckworth v. Duckworth, 35 Ala. 70.

And where the complainant failed to use the same on account of mistake of law as to jurisdiction to allow set-off. Pearce v. Winter Iron-Works, 82 Ala. 68.

And where La. Code of Pr. art. 367, provided that "the defendant may plead compensation or set-off at every stage of the proceedings, provided it be pleaded specially," and art. 368 provided that "it may be pleaded either in the answer to the principal claim, or by a distinct and separate demand." De Lizardi v. Hardaway, 8 Rob. (La.) 22.

And where the plaintiff in an execution from the supreme court was insolvent and the injunction suit was in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, it was held in Missouri one court cannot even enjoin an execution from another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and no reason was given why relief could not be obtained in the supreme court. Kinealy v. Staed, 55 Mo. App. 176.

And where it was not shown that the demands attempted to be used were acquired at such a time that they could not be pleaded in the ordinary action. Morgan v. Driggs, 3 La. Ann. 124; Todd v. Fisk, 14 La. Ann. 13; Hart v. Cannon, 10 La. Ann. 721.

And where such set-off was or might have been tried at law, and it was impossible to ascertain which was the case. Russ v. Wilson, 22 Me. 207.

And where the sole ground for an injunction was that complainant in that suit did not assert his right at law. Cook v. Murphy, 7 Gill & J. 282.

In Matta v. Gayle, 10 La. Ann. 347, it was said that where the defense of intermeddling by plaintiff in an execution with the estate of her deceased husband existed before the judgment and might have been pleaded as a defense in a hypothecary action, the same would not be available to enjoin the execution.

But an injunction was granted against a judgment on a note given for an instalment due on a mortgage in Demerara until the plaintiff therein should give security that the defendant should not suffer loss by reason of the existence of grosse copies of the mortgage if in other hands. These grosse copies under the Dutch law are orders of court authorizing a mortgage to be made, and correspond to title papers, and are necessary in order to procure loans. No question was made as to asserting this defense at law. Bentinck v. Willink, 2 Hare, 1.

And an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where, pending the suit, the debtor purchased the plaintiff's interest in the debt sued upon at a judicial sale, although confusion of claims might have been pleaded to defeat the judgment, yet the complainant had the right to permit the debt to be litigated, treating the plaintiff at law as his trustee. Eastin v. Dugat, 4 La. 397.

And where the bond in suit was held by an assignee, who took the same subject to all the equities of the obligor, and Va. act 1748, chap. 27, § 7, provided that the plaintiff shall allow all discounts against the first obligee before notice of an assignment is given. The question of failure to defend was not discussed. Norton v. Rose, 2 Wash. (Va.) 233.

In Fannin v. Thomasson, 45 Ga. 533, it was said that the failure to plead at law a set-off will not estop the defendant from setting it up by a bill to enjoin the common-law judgment. (See Radcliffe v. Varner, 56 Ga. 222, next subd.)

b. Parties.

An injunction will not be granted on account of a set-off, if the allowance of the same would prejudice either party, or if the set-off does not exist against the party in interest.

So, an injunction was refused where a judgment was against a husband for purchase money of property of the estate sold by executors, and the set-off was a claim of the wife as distributee of the estate. Dunnahoo v. Holland, 51 Ga. 147.

And where the judgment was on a purchase note for goods bought by a creditor at a sale made by assignee for creditors. Capehart v. Etheridge, 63 N. C. 353.

And where the same had been denied at law because in different rights, and the plaintiff at law had assigned his judgment for value to a third party prior to the institution of the injunction suit, and the bill did not show when the insolvency of the plaintiff began or that it existed at the time of the assignment. Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa, 163.

And where the action was on a note given for purchase of horses and the set-off was breach of warranty, and the plaintiff at law was a nonresident. But the warranty in this case was made by an agent individually and not by the principal; and besides, another note still due protected the complainant in the injunction suit. Overton v. Stevens, 8 Mo. 622.

And where the judgment was in favor of a partnership and the set-off was against a member of the firm. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 223.

And where the action was on a note held by an assignee after maturity, and the set-off was against the prior holder of the note. A set-off against a note is not an equity which attaches to it in the hands of a holder. (This proposition was affirmed in Stannus v. Stannus, 30 Iowa, 451.) Way v. Lamb, 15 Iowa, 79.

But an injunction was granted where a judgment was in favor of bank B on a note payable to bank A and bank B did not own the note or authorize the suit, and it was a fraudulent transaction to prevent a set-off against bank A in favor of the defendant. Stovall v. Northern Bank, 5 Smedes & M. 17.

And where the note in suit was fraudulently transferred to a party having no interest so as to give effect to the one which is against the interest of the plaintiff. This is but an application of the rule that a pleading, when attacked by demurrer,—and such is the nature of the motion to dismiss,—is to be construed most strongly against the pleader. It does not appear that plaintiff exercised due diligence. Having notice of the alleged fraud he should have urged that as a defense to the suit on the bond of indemnity. We know, although outside of the record before us, from the opinion in Pasewalk v. Bollman, 29 Neb. 522, which cannot properly be considered here, that the sureties in their answer interposed the defense that the judgment recovered by Deere, Wells, & Co. "was for the conversion of goods by plaintiff and his agents other than the goods taken by Rothwell under said executions."

prevents such a defense from being made, and this was not known in time to use as a defense. Ibid.

And where the judgment was in favor of a guardian for dividends due the ward, and the defendant had made payments improperly to the guardian on account of her not having given a statutory bond, and which funds were used for the necessities of the ward, as a defense could not be made at law because the ward was not a party to that suit. Southwestern R. Co. v. Chapman, 46 Ga. 557.

And under Ga. Code, §§ 3061, 3082, providing that an equitable defense may be set up at law, such defense must be made at law, but where good reasons exist why an equitable defense of set-off could not be made at law, as want of parties and want of power in the common-law court to make them, an injunction will be granted. Radcliffe v. Varner, 56 Ga. 222.

For party, see also infra, IV. j.

c. Unliquidated damages.

An injunction will be refused if the set-off is a demand which is not liquidated. Webster v. Couch, 6 Rand. (Va.) 519; Smith v. Foster, 5 La. Ann. 551; Cox v. McIntyre, 6 La. Ann. 471; Harvard v. Stone, 5 Mart. N. S. 126.

So, an injunction was refused for a set-off of unliquidated damages, where such set-off was damages in an action of slander then pending. Parkinson v. Trousdale, 4 Ill. 337.

And where such set-off was damages not connected with the judgment, although plaintiff was insolvent and a nonresident. Jackson v. Bell, 31 N. J. Eq. 554.

And where the same was asserted in Louisiana, as La. Civ. Code, § 2203, provided that compensation only takes place between debts which were equally liquidated and demandable. Hereford v. Babin, 14 La. Ann. 332.

And where the matter was cognizable at law and no ground for equitable relief was shown, and no discovery required or insolvency charged. Dugan v. Cureton, 1 Ark. 31, 31 Am. Dec. 735.

And where the plaintiff at law was insolvent and the action was for assault and battery and the set-off was a similar claim but was not liquidated. Barry v. Green, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 67.

And where the plaintiff at law was a nonresident but was not insolvent and the set-off was a claim for unliquidated damages. Smith v. Washington, Gaslight Co. 31 Md. 12, 100 Am. Dec. 49.

In Cabell v. Roberts, 6 Rand. (Va.) 550, it was said that unliquidated damages arising out of the same contract on which the judgment sought to be enjoined was founded, cannot be set off in equity.

In Wolcott v. Jones, 4 Allen, 367, an injunction on the ground of set-off was refused where the same was not asserted, under Mass. Gen. Dig. chap. 118, § 28, providing for a set-off of debts due from an insolvent person against those which may be owing to him. Under this provision claims not liquidated may be used as set-off in the action at law.

For unliquidated damages see Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Greer, 87 Tenn. 698, 4 L. R. A. 858, infra, IV. f.

d. Trial at law.

* An injunction will be refused if there has been 31 L. R. A.

a trial of the set-off at law, or if it was attempted to be asserted and was refused, and there was a remedy by appeal or certiorari.

An injunction on the ground of set-off was refused on account of the same having been used in the action at law. Hooper v. Rhodes, 7 La. Ann. 137; Garvin v. Squires, 9 Ark. 533, 50 Am. Dec. 224; Burton v. Hynson, 14 Ark. 32; Harrison v. Nettle-ship, 2 Myl. & K. 423, 3 L. J. Ch. N. S. 86, 8 Cond. Eng. Ch. Rep. 66; Buckmaster v. Grundy, 8 Ill. 626; Scott v. State Nat. Bank, 9 Neb. 316, 31 Am. Dec. 412.

And was refused in such a case where the defense was complicated set-offs. Williams v. Sadler, 4 Jones, Eq. 378, 75 Am. Dec. 424.

And where the same was mutual accounts not complicated. Howell v. Stewart, 17 Ala. 719.

And where the defense was that the warrant of the auditor in controversy was not a loan to complainant in the equity suit, but a payment on account. Cunningham v. Caldwell, Hardin (Ky.) 123.

And where complainant in the injunction suit failed in his trial of the same at law, and fraud in transferring the note in suit so as to prevent a set-off was not established. Briesch v. McCauley, 7 Gill, 180.

An injunction was denied, although the set-off has been refused at law, where the same was a debt accruing in a different right. It was said that if it was a set-off at law that would be no foundation for a bill in equity. Menifee v. Ball, 7 Ark. 520.

And where the same was presented on a trial before justice's court and complainant was negligent in not prosecuting the same. Ewing v. Nickle, 45 Md. 413.

And where the same was rejected improperly in the justice's court, and complainant failed to prosecute certiorari. Halcomb v. Kelly, 57 Tex. 618.

And where the equitable ground was that the adverse party was an administrator and that complainant could not testify at law, but the same disability existed in equity. Robinson v. Wheeler, 51 N. H. 398.

e. No set-off.

An injunction on the ground of set-off will not be granted where the right to such set-off is not established by pleading or proof.

So, an injunction on the ground of set-off was refused where the allegations in regard to such set-off were indefinite and there had been much litigation between the parties, and complainant had delayed asserting this claim. Parks v. Spurgin, 3 Fred. Eq. 153.

And where the petition for injunction did not meet the requirements of Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 2376, providing that it shall contain "a plain and intelligible statement of the grounds for such relief," and it alleged an indebtedness from the defendant to complainant in the injunction suit, and the answer specifically denied such indebtedness and intelligently averred facts excluding the possibility thereof. Wheeler v. Gray, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 12.

And where the bill was to settle the account between the parties, and did not allege that a balance was due. Robinson v. Wheeler, supra.

And where the judgment was obtained by a bank

Moreover, the petition herein is defective for another reason. It contains no averment as to the value of the goods not levied upon by the sheriff which it is claimed he converted to his own use. The petition refers us to Exhibit B for the value of the property, but it is not there stated, except a trifling sum appears opposite a few of the articles alone. For all that this record shows, they may have been of little or no value. It does not appear that the judgment obtained by Bollman exceeded the value of the property sold, and applied on the executions in favor of the Norwegian Plow Company, including Bollman's damages and costs growing out of the transaction. For this reason there is no equity in the bill. Scotfield v. State Nat. Bank, 9 Neb. 316, 31 Am. Rep. 412.

Affirmed.

and the set-off was that the debtor had deposited notes with that bank for collection, as a depository to receive is not required to bring suit. Crow v. Mechanics' & T. Bank, 12 La. Ann. 602; Fitzhugh v. Orton, 12 Tex. 4.

And where the plaintiff at law was insolvent but the claim had been presented and rejected on the trial, and complainant had withdrawn his motion for a new trial, and an appeal was taken. Miller v. Duvall, 26 Md. 47.

And where complainant's demand was barred by limitation and no particular equitable ground was shown. Brown v. Scott, 2 Bibb. 635.

And where the plaintiff and defendant had mutual notes, and the day before complainant's notes expired by limitation the other party brought suit and obtained a judgment, and the agreement for mutual cancelation and exchange of the notes was not established. Fletcher v. Warren, 18 Vt. 45.

In Rives v. Rives, 7 Rich. Eq. 353, an injunction on the ground of set-off was denied where the set-off existing at the time of the decree was barred by limitation, and the defendant in the injunction suit was insolvent. It was said that in an old case cited in Francis' Maxims, p. 36, the court does seem to have given relief on this ground, but no other cases from the decisions of the English court of chancery and none of our own reports have been cited. Complainant could have obtained a judgment at law and by a casus have compelled an assignment of this decree, and was guilty of laches.

An injunction on the ground of set-off was refused where the assignor and maker of a note rescinded their contract after a judgment was taken on the note, and the assignor gave the maker his note for that amount, and after judgment was taken on the same the assignor sought to have this enjoined, claiming that he was still liable on his assignment of the other note and that the maker was insolvent, but the complainant had repudiated his liability and should have paid off his own note. Hill v. Gordon, 6 J. J. Marsh. 520.

And where the judgment was in favor of a city, and the set-off was based on a report in condemnation which was not approved by the common council, as the debt was not equally liquidated or demandable, and it could not be pleaded in compensation. New Orleans v. Cordeviulle, 10 La. Ann. 734.

And where it was claimed that the debt in judgment was not to be paid until a settlement of a partnership was had, but it was to be held subject to rebates ascertained on a settlement, and the evidence as to this was not clear, and complainant had other securities for indemnity. Graham v. Gray, 87 Ala. 440.

And where the judgment was on a note for a balance in settling a partnership account, and the set-off was that since the making of the note there might be, on an accounting, money coming to the defendant, as the account once liquidated must be paid unless a second account has been taken. Preston v. Strutton, 1 Anst. 50.

A defendant in an execution cannot obtain an injunction against the same on the ground that in another case before judgment money was paid under a mistake of law and afterwards such judgment was reversed.

When one voluntarily pays money to another with full knowledge of all the facts, but under a mistake of law, he cannot recover it, and cannot maintain a set-off on that ground. Beard v. Beard, 25 W. Va. 488, 52 Am. Rep. 219.

f. Insolvency and nonresidence.

The insolvency or nonresidence of the plaintiff at law will usually be sufficient ground for an injunction against the judgment, if complainant has a set-off which was not tried in the action at law.

So, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where the plaintiff at law was insolvent and the defendant in the equity suit did not show that the set-off, which was money paid by an indorser, existed at the time of the institution of the suit at law so that the defense at law could have been made, and objection to the jurisdiction of equity was not made by demurrer. Brazelton v. Brooks, 2 Head, 197.

And where the party against whom it was held was insolvent and he was the party in interest in the suit, although the set-off was ruled out as a defense at law. It was also said that the neglect to use a set-off at law would not prevent relief in equity. Hubbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 598.

And where the judgment was on an insurance policy assigned with a knowledge of the set-off, which was for a premium on another policy, being a note made by an insolvent agent, and in the action on the policy in judgment the company had been enjoined by a court in Virginia from using the same as a defense, and the beneficiaries in both policies were the same. The injunction was also granted as a protection to the indorser of the note, and this on the ground that the agent had a lien on both policies for advancement of the premium. Leeds v. Marine Ins. Co., 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 565, 5 L. ed. 332.

And where the defendant in the injunction suit was insolvent and complainant's equity was multiplicity and complicity of accounts. But as to judgments obtained by assignees of notes, an injunction was refused where the assignor held sufficient claims to set off complainant's demands and there was no agreement for a mutual set-off of particular claims. Anderson v. Mason, 6 Dana, 217.

An injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where complainant held a judgment against plaintiffs at law, who were insolvent, although such set-off was not used as a defense at law, as this will not prevent the use of the same in equity. Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 93.

And where plaintiff at law was insolvent at the time of the judgment and had assigned the same to his wife, and he was indebted to the defendant. No question was made as to failure to defend at law. Levy v. Steinbach, 43 Md. 212.

And where complainant in the injunction suit had procured an assignment of a note against the plaintiff at law before the judgment in the action at law, and the plaintiff at law was a nonresident and insolvent, although plaintiff at law had assigned his judgment to a third party, complainant's equity being superior to that of the assignee of the judgment. Dorsey v. Reese, 14 B. Mon. 157.

And where complainant held judgments against

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

John S. OWENS et al., Piffs. in Err.,
v.
VAN WINKLE GIN & MACHINERY COM-PANY.

(.....Ga.....)

*A judgment regularly rendered, even by default, is binding upon parties and privies;

*Headnote by ATKINSON, J.

and that the cause of action was the failure to pay a promissory note founded upon a gaming consideration is no such exception to the general rule as will authorize a court of equity, after judgment, to interfere by injunction with its enforcement.

(June 15, 1895.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff at law which were dormant when the bill was filed but were revived, and the plaintiff at law had taken the benefit of the homestead exemption act which rendered him insolvent, and this made an equitable right to set-off. Tomney v. Ellis, 41 Ga. 280.

And where the suit was by a stockholder to enforce the liability of other stockholders on a judgment against a corporation. And Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 22, §30, allowed a cross bill after an answer in chancery, and the defendant, a corporation, pleaded the complainant's liability as stockholder, and that complainant was a nonresident and insolvent. Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 578.

And where complainant held a prior judgment and the plaintiff in the action at law was a nonresident and insolvent. No question was made as to failure to use the same at law. Buckmaster v. Grundy, 8 Ill. 226.

And where the plaintiff at law was insolvent, and as the Illinois statute of set-off was permissive and not compulsory, a party defendant was not bound to set off his demand in the action at law. "The occurring insolvency of the railroad company subsequent to the judgment affords ground for the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction here invoked." Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Field, 86 Ill. 270. (But see next case.)

In Galena & S. W. R. Co. v. Ennor, 116 Ill. 55, it was said that a set-off may be allowed in equity as against a judgment at law where the plaintiff is insolvent, whether such insolvency occurred before or after the judgment, and it was not compulsory on the defendant to make a defense at law. And Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Field, supra, indicating that insolvency must occur after judgment, is misleading.

And where complainant in the injunction suit held a judgment against A and B, and A thereafter obtained a judgment against complainant and assigned it to C. As Iowa Rev. Stat. 1880, §§ 2764, 3328, 2880, cl. 6, abrogated distinctions between joint and joint and several liabilities and authorized a set-off to be pleaded at law, and the insolvency of A gave an equitable right to a set-off although not pleaded at law. Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa, 491, 85 Am. Dec. 527.

And where plaintiff at law was insolvent, although the set-off had been denied on motion in the court at law. It was held that the exercise of the power by a court of law would not be res judicata in this case, as the application was on a summary motion, and such decision could not be thrown into the shape of a record and become the subject of review; and it was said that in the same court these decisions are not considered final or a bar to another discussion on the same question. Simson v. Hart, 14 Johns. 63, Reversing 1 Johns. Ch. 95.

And where the plaintiff at law had removed from the state, although such set-off was claimed and disallowed on the trial at law. Edminson v. Baxter, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 112, 9 Am. Dec. 751.

In Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Greer, 87 Tenn. 608, 4 L. 31 L. R. A.

R. A. 858, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted at the instance of a railroad company where the conductor of a freight train recovered a judgment against the company for personal injuries, and there was a suit pending in another state for damages for injuries caused to a passenger at the same time, and the freight conductor had violated the rules of the company in allowing such person to ride on such a train, although such action was not yet determined and the claim was unliquidated damages. The bill was allowed as a quia-timet bill on account of the insolvency of the plaintiff at law.

But in Sayre v. Harpold, 38 W. Va. 553, an injunction on the ground of set-off was refused although the plaintiff at law was insolvent. It was said that insolvency alone was not recognized as a ground for relief in equity.

And an injunction was refused where the judgment was on a note payable to an administrator, and complainant had a claim for damages for an eviction from land which he had bought from the intestate, and for which damage he had obtained an assignment from some of the heirs of their claims against the administrator; but the complainant had a remedy on the administrator's bond, although the administrator was insolvent. Cummins v. Bradford, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 753.

And where complainant declined to plead the same at law reserving it for a further action, although plaintiff at law was a nonresident. Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 58 U. S. 17 How. 443, 15 L. ed 123.

And where such set-off was a cross-demand on a warranty growing out of the same transaction, and the plaintiff at law was a nonresident, as such set-off could have been used in the trial of the original action. Beall v. Brown, 7 Md. 393.

In Waldrop v. Green, 63 N. C. 344, an injunction on the ground of set-off was refused where the judgment was for the recovery of a horse, which the complainant in the injunction suit had taken from the plaintiff at law because he had previously made an exchange with him of horses and the title of the one he had received was not valid, and he had brought suit on an implied warranty of title against the plaintiff at law who was insolvent, which action was pending. The case only says the bill of complaint does not state a cause of action.

And an injunction will be refused if there is no allegation in the bill of complaint that the party against whom the set-off exists is insolvent or is a nonresident, or if no other equitable ground is shown. Ponder v. Cox, 26 Ga. 486; Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379; Markham v. Todd, 2 J. J. Marsh. 364.

So, an injunction on the ground of set-off was refused where a judgment subjecting a homestead was assigned to a party employed by complainant to defend the action and a claim of damages was asserted for his negligence in not making defense. Baker v. Ryan, 87 Iowa, 708.

And where the judgment was in detinue and the set-off was damages for breach of warranty. Ellis v. Gosney, 1 J. J. Marsh. 346.

defendant in an action brought to enjoin collection of a judgment. Affirmed.

Defendant recovered judgment against J. H. Mountain on a promissory note which he had made and delivered to one Rexinger who indorsed it for value to defendant. During the progress of that suit J. S. Owens became his surety to dissolve a writ of garnishment. The suit was defaulted and judgment was entered against Mountain and Owens on the garnishment bond. Subsequently this action was brought to enjoin the collection of that judgment on the ground that the note which formed the basis for it was given for a gambling consideration.

Messrs. Mayson & Hill, for plaintiffs in error:

A judgment based upon a note given for a gambling consideration may be enjoined, although plaintiff is an innocent purchaser,

And where the set-off was an independent transaction and there was no peculiar equity shown in the bill or insolvency charged and the demand was stale, and the remedy, if any, was at law. Dade v. Irwin, 43 U. S. 2 How. 383, 11 L. ed. 308.

And where the judgment was in favor of A against C, who had obtained an award against B, and A was a surety in the award, and he was not insolvent or a nonresident. Hinrichsen v. Reinback, 27 Ill. 296.

In Brady v. Hancock, 17 Tex. 361, an injunction was refused where complainant held a set-off which he could not plead because in excess of the justice's jurisdiction and there was no allegation of insolvency. It was said that the reporter's syllabus in Fulgham v. Chevallier, infra, would seem to make an injunction a matter of course where the plaintiff in the judgment rendered by a justice was indebted to the defendant in a sum above the jurisdiction of the justice; but this was not warranted by the statement of the case nor by the opinion of the court, and the statement of the case is defective in failing to show that the object of the plaintiff at law was to harass the defendant when the defendant did not owe him anything.

In Fulgham v. Chevallier, 10 Tex. 518, the ground of injunction was that a judgment had been obtained on three several notes before a justice of the peace, and on account of the jurisdiction of a justice's court the petitioner was not allowed to plead in reconvention the matters set forth in his petition and he prayed for an account and an injunction. It was held, that "if the facts contained in the petition are true, and they must be regarded as true, in deciding on the exception the plaintiff clearly showed good cause of action, and it was error to dismiss the suit on the exception."

Forset-off, insolvency, and nonresidence, see also Hall v. Clark, 21 Mo. 415, supra, I. b. 8; Jackson v. Bell, 31 N. J. Eq. 554, supra, IV. c; Barry v. Green, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 67; Smith v. Washington Gaslight Co. 81 Md. 12, 100 Am. Dec. 49; Wolcott v. Jones, 4 Allen, 387; Kinealy v. Staed, 55 Mo. App. 176, supra, IV. a; Ellis v. Kerr (Tex.) 23 S. W. 1050; O'Neill v. Perryman, 102 Ala. 522, infra, IV. b; Pharr v. Reynolds, 3 Ala. 521, infra, IV. g. See also infra, IV. i, j.

g. Accounting.

An injunction will be granted on the ground of set-off if an accounting is necessary to establish complainant's claim and such relief could not be had at law.

So, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where the suit for injunction was also for an accounting and a defense at law was not made, and the accounts were mutual and multifarious. Power v. Reeder, 9 Dana, 6.

And where an assignee in bankruptcy had obtained a judgment for money paid by a bankrupt after a secret act of bankruptcy, although such set-off was offered at law and disallowed and the action was for an accounting, and the verdict at law disallowing a set-off was not conclusive in equity in matter of contract and account. Billon v. Hyde, 1 Atk. 126, 1 Ves. Sr. 327.

And where the action was on a foreign judgment which was claimed to have been obtained by fraud, and complainant filed a bill for accounting showing that the plaintiff at law was in reality indebted to him on account of credits. Bowles v. Orr, 1 Younge & C. Exch. 484-473.

And where the same was for meane profits in ejectment, and the equitable title of the property was in a stock company which was indebted to complainant, and the parties to the suit were stockholders, and the bill to enjoin sought to have an accounting. Wells v. Strange, 5 Ga. 22.

And where it was necessary to have an accounting and the plaintiff at law was insolvent and had left the state. Pharr v. Reynolds, 3 Ala. 521.

h. Equitable set-off.

If the set-off is an equitable one, or if for other reasons it is not available at the trial at law, because not a legal set-off or not due, or because the defense is prevented by fraud, an injunction will be granted.

So, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where the complainant had an equitable demand and paid into court the amount admitted to be due. Greaves v. Stritho, 2 Dick. 469.

And where such set-off was an equitable claim and was refused at law. Farquharson v. Pitcher, 2 Russ. Ch. 81.

And where the defendant at law acquired a note after the commencement of the suit and the plaintiff was insolvent, as such note could not be set up in the action at law. Fields v. Carney, 4 Baxt. 137.

And where the defense was that the action was upon a bond given for indemnity to an indorser, and that the consideration had failed and the indorser was insolvent, as there was no remedy at law. A contract of indemnity resting in damages not being the subject of set-off at law. Scott v. Shreeve, 12 U. S. 12 Wheat. 605, 6 L. ed. 744.

And where the judgment was for tort and plaintiff at law was insolvent, although the judgment was assigned to attorneys to secure their liens. The set-off could not be pleaded in the action of tort. Marshall v. Cooper, 43 Md. 46.

And where the judgment was assigned and complainant had a previous judgment against the assignor who was insolvent, as a court at law had no jurisdiction to grant a set-off in such a case, and an assignment of a judgment only vests an equity in the assignee, as a judgment was not assignable by statute or by the common law. The assumption of jurisdiction by courts of common law of the right to set off judgments did not oust equity of its jurisdiction. Besides the assignee was not a party to the suit at law so as to enable a court of law to dispose of his equity. Merrill v. Souther, 6 Dana, 305.

And where the debtor had to pay for plaintiff since the action began larger amounts than recovered, but which could not have been set up as a defense because not due, and the plaintiff at law was insolvent although the judgment was assigned. Ellis v. Kerr (Tex.) 23 S. W. 1050.

And where the defendant in an action at law obtained a judgment against the plaintiff on his ground of set-off, and the plaintiff at law had claims against the defendant which could not be set off as against the set-off at law, and the defendant at law was insolvent and complainant sued where judgment was taken by default and the issue has not heretofore been heard.

High, Inj. § 235; White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645; Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612; Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. (Va.) 214; Clay v. Fry, 3 Bibb, 248, 6 Am. Dec. 654; Mallett v. Butcher, 41 Ill. 382; Given's Appeal, 121 Pa. 260; Fraser v. Moody, 3 Humph. 561; Lucas v. Nichols, 66 Ill. 41; Lindley v. James, 3 Coldw. 477; Buchanan v. Nolin, 3 Humph. 63; McKoin v. Cooley, 3 Humph. 66; Bonney v. Bowman, 63 Miss. 166.

for an accounting between the parties. O'Neill v. Perryman, 102 Ala. 622.

And where complainant was only liable to plaintiff at law in contribution for a part of the judgment, and defense was prevented by fraud. Markham v. Angier, 57 Ga. 43.

i. In matters of an estate.

In matters of an estate, if there is no reason for collecting the judgment or if the plaintiff at law is insolvent, and the granting of the judgment will not prejudice the rights of other parties, an injunction will be allowed because of a set-off.

So, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where the judgment was in favor of an administrator, who was insolvent and was indebted to the complainant as distributee in a sum more than sufficient to pay the claim. Carter v. McMichael, 20 Ga. 96.

And where the judgment was in favor of an executor, and complainant was a legatee, and the amount due him was greater than the amount named in the execution, and the estate was free from debts, and the executors were insolvent. Dobbs v. Prothro, 57 Ga. 15.

And where complainant was a purchaser from commissioners, under Ky. act 1821 to sell the estate of decedents for his debts, and he had a judgment in his favor against the administrator of the estate with a return of no property. But if there were other demands entitled to precedence an injunction would not be granted. Dickinson v. Chism, 2 T. B. Mon. 145.

And where a sale was by administrators, and the purchaser filed a bill for settlement of the administrator showing that there was more coming to him on distribution than the judgment for purchase money, and that there were no debts against the estate. Parker v. Britt, 4 Heisk. 245.

And where the judgment was against a distributee in favor of the representative of the estate, and such distributee had a set-off of a share due from the estate, and no reason existed for the collection of the judgment. Dorsey v. Simmons, 40 Ga. 245.

In Gregory v. Hasbrook, 1 Tenn. Ch. 218, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where the judgment was in favor of an administrator and the estate was insolvent and no defense was made at law. It was held that Brazelton v. Brooks, 2 Head, 194 (supra, IV. f) did not lay down the rule that complainant could not obtain equitable relief without showing why he did not make defense at law.

In Riddell v. Gormley, 4 La. Ann. 140, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where the complainant as the legal representative of S.'s estate had a claim against a party who obtained a judgment, and which claim was not pleaded in that action; holding: "There having been mutual indebtedness between S.'s estate and G., and their respective claims being equally litigated, the debts up to the amount due by G. were extinguished by compensation before either were prescribed, and that compensation may now be pleaded by the 31 L. R. A.

That plaintiff was an innocent purchaser is no defense.

High, Inj. § 235; Woodson v. Barrett, and Skipwith v. Strother, supra; Scott v. Pound, 61 Ga. 579; Porter v. Jones, 6 Coldw. 324; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 307; Cunningham v. National Bank, 71 Ga. 404, 51 Am. Rep. 266.

Messrs. Ellis & Gray, for defendant in error:

At common law and under the statutes which simply declare that gambling obligations shall be deemed to be given for an illegal plaintiff." This case was criticised in Todd v. Fisk, 14 La. Ann. 13, and it was held that it could only be sustained on the theory that the court must have presumed that the compensation only took place when the representative consented, and that this must have been after the judgment.

An injunction on the ground of set-off was granted where complainant, an administrator, discovered evidence after judgment showing a mistake in the settlement of the accounts, and the statute of limitation did not affect this owing to the connection between the demands. Terrill v. Southall, 3 Bibb, 458.

And where the judgment was in ejectment in favor of heirs, and complainant had purchased the land from an heir who had bought the land at administrator's sale, and the purchase money had been applied to the debts and was divided among the heirs, as relief could not be had at law. Brown v. Boynton, 69 Ga. 754.

And where the judgment was against an administrator, and the set-off was not known in time to have used the same at law. Terrill v. Southall, 3 Bibb, 458.

And where no defense was made at law because the administrator, defendant therein, believed the set-off was barred by limitation, and he had no knowledge that the plaintiff at law had previously taken the benefit of the insolvent act in another state and had omitted this claim, and it was questionable whether the defense could have availed at law. Hewlett v. Hewlett, 4 Edw. Ch. 7.

But an injunction was refused where a surety of an administrator was compelled to pay a decree against the administrator in favor of an administrator de bonis non, and on the reversal of the decree obtained a judgment for the same against the administrator de bonis non, who claimed as ground of injunction that he had paid over the money to distributees who were insolvent and non-residents, and had obtained another decree against the administrator. There was no mutuality in the claims. Simmons v. Williams, 27 Ala. 507.

And where complainants were administrators and held judgments against the plaintiffs at law, who were administrators but the allowance of such set-off would have prejudiced prior judgments and devested them of their lien. Clay v. Sheftall, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 263.

And where such set-offs were judgments acquired against an estate by assignment after the assignee became the debtor of the succession by purchase at the administrator's sale, and the estate was insolvent, as his claim can only be paid contradictorily with the other creditors. Dwight v. Carson, 2 La. Ann. 459.

And where the execution was in favor of an administrator, and complainants were distributees and did not tender the amount due on the execution exclusive of their interests, and there were other distributees. Gibson v. Carreker, 92 Ga. 801.

And where the administratrix should have made a claim for the same on the settlement with the ordinary. But equitable jurisdiction was retained where the defendants in equity did not object and consideration they are, if negotiable, valid and enforceable in the hands of bona fide holders.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1018, 1019.

Where a deed to land is made on Sunday, and the money paid, the possession of the land having been previously given to the vendee, the law will leave the parties in pari delicto, where it finds them.

Ellis v. Hammond, 57 Ga. 179.

Equity will not enjoin a judgment at law upon any ground which either was tried, or might have been tried, at law.

Emerson v. Udall, 18 Or. 477, 37 Am. Dec. 604.

A defendant is in diligence bound to plead to an action at law every defense, legal or equitable, which he may have to such action.

Brown v. Boynton, 69 Ga. 754.

A court of equity will not grant relief from a judgment that could have been prevented consented to an account. McClure v. Miller, Ball. Eq. 107, 21 Am. Dec. 522.

For administrator and executor, see also Cummins v. Bradford, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 753, supra, IV. f.

j. Mutual agreements.

Equity will interpose by injunction in aid of a set-off, if there is a mutual agreement between the parties that one demand will offset the other.

So, an injunction was granted on the ground of set-off where complainant was induced to become a surety on an appeal bond on the understanding that an amount owing by him would be held as a security for his liability on the bond, and notwithstanding such agreement a judgment was obtained against him for that debt and the defendant in the injunction suit was insolvent. Mattingly v. Sutton, 19 W. Va. 19.

And where the action was by an assignee of a note made to an individual member of a firm, and assigned after maturity, and the firm had purchased wheat of the payee and agreed that the note should be taken in satisfaction of the same, and promised to give up and cancel the note, and the maker was insolvent, as the assignment was subject to the equitable right of relief. McDonald v. Mackenzie (Or.) 14 Pac. 866.

And where the equity of the bill was that the judgment really belonged to A though nominally for the use of B, and that A had agreed to a mutual credit and there was no other remedy, and justice could not be done at law, and the bill was for the settlement of a partnership account. Graves v. Hull, 27 Miss. 419.

And where such judgment was obtained by an assignee of a note, and the assignor had purchased a negro from complainant, and, after the note was due agreed that the note should be taken out of the price of the slave but the note was not given up at that time, an injunction was granted on the ground that payment after the day was a plea unknown to the common law and could not there be made; although the statute afterwards allowed the plea, but this did not oust equity of its jurisdiction. Whittington v. Roberts, 4 T. B. Mon. 173.

In Hughes v. McCoun, 3 Bibb, 254, an injunction on the ground of set-off was granted. It was held that "the subject-matter of relief in this case could have been only available at law under a plea of set-off, a plea unknown to the common law, and long before it was admitted by the statute courts of chancery retained jurisdiction for the purpose of setting off accounts where, under particular circumstances, such as attend the present case, an agreement to set off the one demand against the other is evident. And it is believed courts of chancery still retain this jurisdiction unless where defense is made at law under the statute allowing set-offs."

V. Payment.

a. Failure to defend.

The rule is well established that the defense of payment or credit is a legal defense, and an injunction will not be granted on the ground of payment if the failure to make such defense at law is not excused. But will be granted if good reasons are given for not defending at law.

31 L. R. A.

So, an injunction on the ground of payment was refused because the failure to defend at law was not excused. Brown v. Toell, 5 Rand. (Va.) 543, 16 Am. Dec. 759; Beaudry v. Felch, 47 Cal. 183; Benton v. Roberts, 3 Rob. (La.) 224; Champion v. Miller, 2 Jones, Eq. 194; Clark v. Clapp, 14 R. I. 248; Garlick v. Reece, 8 La. 101; Gravler v. Roche, 5 La. 441; Greene v. Johnson, 21 La. Ann. 464; Jones v. Cameron, 81 N. C. 154; Lansing v. Eddy, 1 Johns. Ch. 49; Lee v. Hubbell, 20 La. Ann. 551; Monroe v. McMicken, 8 Mart. N. S. 510; Prather v. Prather, 11 Gill & J. 110; Prout v. Gibson, 1 Cranch, C. C. 399; Rider v. Morse, 3 MacArth. 186; Strong v. Hopkins, 1 Mo. 530; Turpin v. Thomas, 2 Hen. & M. 139, 3 Am. Dec. 615; Yancy v. Fenwick, 4 Hen. & M. 423; Quackenbush v. Van Riper, 1 N. J. Eq. 476; Brickell v. Jones, 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 357; Greenlee v. Gaines, 13 Ala. 128, 48 Am. Dec. 42.

And an injunction was refused for that reason where the defense was payment and set-off. Cummins v. Bentley, 5 Ark. 9.

And where the defense was that the bond upon which the suit was brought had been discharged. Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504.

And where the defense to a mechanic's lien was a tender discharging the lien, and such defense could have been, but was not, pleaded in the action to enforce the lien. Patch v. Collins, 158 Mass. 468.

And where the defense was the right to pay the debt in depreciated paper. Hampton v. Dudley, 1 J. J. Marsh. 272; Fannin v. Thomasson, 45 Ga. 538.

And where the defense was tender of bank notes made a legal tender by statute, and the failure to make such defense at law was not excused. Dayton v. Commercial Bank, 8 Rob. (La.) 17.

And where it was claimed a note was to be paid in state paper and not in specie, but the plaintiff at law was a bona fide holder for value before maturity and had no notice of such contract. Duncan v. Morrison, 1 Ill. 118. (As to tender in notes issued by plaintiff at law, see also Robbins v. Mount, 3 Ga. 74, supra, III. d.)

But an injunction was granted against a judgment without discussing the failure to defend, where the intention was to enforce the judgment in specie and the defense was that the consideration was a loan by the plaintiff at law of notes on the Bank of the Commonwealth at their nominal value, and at the time of the loan they were greatly depreciated, although Ky. act 1820 provided that the consideration of such loan shall not be questioned in any suit against the obligor; but this was construed to mean that the bank should accept in payment of such note its own notes at their nominal value or notes of the Bank of the Commonwealth. Bank of Kentucky v. Hancock, 6 Dana. 284, 32 Am. Dec. 76.

An injunction was refused on account of the failure to make a defense at law where the suit was on a foreign judgment and the defense was that collections had been made under an execution issued on such judgment in the state in which it was rendered. Yantis v. Burdett, 3 Mo. 457.

And where complainant failed to appear and resist an application to renew an execution and plea but for the negligence of the party seeking it. Smith v. Hornsby, 70 Ga. 552.

Judgment can never be void where the court has jurisdiction over the suit, and the right to determine whether the demand on which it was rendered was legal and enforceable or not.

Arnold v. Shields, 5 Dana, 18, 30 Am. Dec. 669.

Where there was a judgment at law against a defendant in Mississippi, and he sought relief in equity upon the ground that the consideration of the contract was the introduction of slaves into the United States and consequently illegal, a court of equity will not grant relief because the complainant was in pari delicto with the other party.

Sample v. Barnes, 55 U. S. 14 How. 70, 14 L. ed. 330; Creath v. Sims, 46 U. S. 5 How. 192, 12 L. ed. 111; Giddens v. Lea, 3 Humph. 135; Lucas v. Nichols, 66 Ill. 41.

payment of the judgment. Sullivan v. Shell, 36 S. C. 578.

And where the defense to an action by an administrator against a trustee of the decedent was that such trustee had paid an heir his share without authority, as a probate court had full jurisdiction to settle all estate matters. Green v. Tittman, 124 Mo. 572.

And where the judgment sought to be enjoined was on a scire facias, and the defense was satisfaction of the previous judgment. Nevit v. Hamer, 5 Smedes & M. 145.

And where the defense was that complainant was entitled to a credit, and that the plaintiff at law held collaterals, and that they should have been transferred to complainant before judgment, and that the original mortgage for the debt on which judgment was rendered was still uncanceled. McMicken v. Millaudon, 2 La. 180.

And where the defense was that the plaintiff at law had in his hands for collection demands belonging to complainant, and that more than sufficient amount had been collected to satisfy the demand. Russ v. Wilson, 22 Me. 207. (See Mann v. Bamberger, 4 Heisk. 496, infra, V. c.; Whales v. Bank of Michigan, infra.)

And where the defense was a credit, and the plaintiff supposed that the complainant would allow his claim after judgment. Coleman v. Goyné, 37 Tex. 552.

And where the defense was that the plaintiff's demand was unconscientious, and that complainant was entitled to credit for payment. Bateman v. Willoe, 1 Sch. & Lef. 201.

And where the defense was that complainant was an indorser, and that in another action against him and others a judgment was rendered on the same day in his favor on the same note, and that in the latter action a forthcoming bond was given and forfeited, which was claimed to be a satisfaction of the judgment against such indorser. Besides, a satisfaction by the substitution of new judgment on the bond for the original judgment was not a discharge. Benton v. Crowder, 7 Smedes & M. 185.

And an injunction on the ground of payment will be refused if complainant is negligent in not making such defense at law. Semple v. McGatagan, 10 Smedes & M. 98; Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40; Floyd v. Swayne, 6 Johns. Ch. 479; Allman v. Owen, 31 Ala. 167; Collins v. Jones, 6 Leigh. 530, 29 Am. Dec. 216; Cabell v. Roberts, 8 Rand. (Va.) 580; Foster v. Wood, 6 Johns. Ch. 87; Grindol v. Ruby, 14 Ill. App. 439; Harding v. Hawkins, 141 Ill. 572; Kinney v. Ogden, 3 N. J. Eq. 168; Lott v. Michel (Miss.) 16 So. 794; Norris v. Fristoe, 3 La. Ann. 646; Mellendy v. Austin, 69 Ill. 15; McRae v. Purvis, 12 La. Ann. 85; Rudman v. Bockel, 28 La. Ann. 276; Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Patrick, Smedes & M. Ch. 110; Tutt v. Ferguson, 13 Kan. 45.

So, an injunction on the ground of payment was refused on account of negligence in not making such defense, where there was also the remedy of new trial, appeal, or recordari. Woodfin v. Smith, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 451.

And where there was a remedy at law by rule to stay execution. Gorsuch v. Thomas, 57 Md. 334. 31 L. R. A.

And where the defense was that a joint defendant had paid off the debts in judgment, and had the same assigned to a third party for his own use. Stein v. Benedict, 83 Wis. 603.

And where the defense was accord and satisfaction at law. Armaworthy v. Cheshire, 2 Dev. Eq. 234, 34 Am. Dec. 273.

But an injunction on the ground of payment or satisfaction, accord or acquittance will be granted if such defense is prevented by the conduct by fraud of the prevailing party.

So, an injunction on the ground of payment was granted where such defense was prevented by conduct of creditors. Paddock v. Palmer, 19 Vt. 581; Dickenson v. McDermott, 13 Tex. 248; Gates v. Steele, 58 Conn. 316.

And where the defense at law was prevented by reason of the plaintiff therein obtaining the note before maturity, and while it was so held the complainant paid the payee who claimed that it was at his house, and subsequent to maturity the payee's brother obtained an assignment of the judgment, but which was in pursuance of a fraudulent scheme and subject to complainant's equities. Barhorst v. Armstrong, 42 Fed. Rep. 2.

And where the defense was payment after the suit was filed, and complainant was led to believe that the action would be dismissed. Bigham v. Gorham, 52 Ga. 329.

And where the defense to an alternative judgment of replevin was that during the trial of such action the property was all returned, and evidence of such fact was refused on the trial, and a motion for new trial was prevented by fraudulent conduct of plaintiff's attorney agreeing to accept a compromise which he refused to carry out. Thompson v. Laughlin, 91 Cal. 313.

And where complainant in the injunction suit was a receptor in attachment for the amount of the debt, and no allowance was made for payments, and he was prevented from making a motion for new trial by representation that the judgment was paid. Paddock v. Palmer, 19 Vt. 581.

And where the debt in suit was settled under an award by the execution of a note with securities, and a judgment was taken for the debt and costs, and plaintiff at law did not surrender the note. The injunction was granted on the ground of surprise. Sneed v. Town, 9 Ark. 535.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment where complainant was a joint obligor and paid one half of the debt, and the obligee subsequently informed him that he would not be required to pay any more, as such a declaration preventing a defense was without consideration and not binding, and did not constitute a defense. Strong v. Hopkins, 1 Mo. 530.

And an injunction on the ground of payment will be granted where complainant is entitled to credits existing before judgment, and which fact could not have been discovered by the use of reasonable diligence in time to have been used as a defense to the action, or where sufficient excuse is given for not making the defense at law.

So, an injunction was granted where evidence of payment was discovered after the trial. Hubbard v. Hobson, 1 Ill. 147; Winchester v. Jack-

Atkinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this state, judgments conclude the parties, not only upon the matters of fact which were expressly involved in the litigation, but also upon all that might have been called in question under the pleadings in the case. If to an ordinary common-law action the party defendant has a good defense, of the benefit of which he was not deprived by the fraud of the adverse party, unmixed with negligence upon his part, and he fail to make that defense, the judgment concludes him, as though it had been expressly put in issue and expressly adjudged against him. This is the general rule prevailing elsewhere, as well as here; but to son, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 306; Pearce v. Chastain, 3 Ga. 226, 46 Am. Dec. 423.

And where the complainant in the injunction suit was a surety, and had no knowledge at the time of the judgment of the payment. McGeehee v. Gold, 63 Ill. 215.

And where the defense of a deputy sheriff to an action for the failure to return an execution was that the debt was paid and the failure to defend at law successfully was due to complainant's ignorance of the settlement. Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 137.

And where the judgment of the supreme court directed a sale and application of the proceeds to two persons, and the debt of one of them had been paid before the appeal was taken, of which payment the other party had no knowledge. Massie v. Mann, 17 Iowa, 131.

In Price v. Fuqua, 4 Munf. 68, where an executor found evidence of a receipt against the debt after the judgment, and failed to make a defense of the statute of limitations under the mistake of counsel, and there was misconduct of the jury, an injunction was granted.

In Countess Gainsborough v. Gifford, 2 P. Wms. 424, it was said that after a judgment, if a receipt was found under the plaintiff's own hand for the debt, equity will grant relief.

So, an injunction on the ground of payment was granted where sufficient excuse was given for not defending at law. Winchester v. Jackson, and Hubbard v. Hobson, supra; Harvey v. Seashol, 4 W. Va. 115; Wales v. Bank of Michigan, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 308; McGeehee v. Gold, supra; Terrill v. Southall, 3 Bibb, 458; Brown v. Luehrs, 79 Ill. 575; Price v. Fuqua, supra; Reed v. Harvey, 23 Ark. 44; Wilday v. McConnell, 63 Ill. 278.

And where a defense that a claim had been satisfied by reason of another judgment against two members of a firm of which complainant was a member, and of which defense complainant was ignorant in time to have used the same, but was refused as to one third of the judgment, as complainant was liable for that amount. Pearce v. Chastain, 3 Ga. 226, 46 Am. Dec. 423.

And where the defense was that the plaintiff at law had collected sufficient on collaterals to secure the debt, and excuse was given for not making such defense at law. Wales v. Bank of Michigan, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 304. See McMicken v. Millaudon, 2 La. 180.

And where the defense was that the bond in suit had been satisfied, and such defense was prevented by the belief that the action was upon another bond. Mason v. Nelson, 11 Leigh, 227.

b. Defense made.

An injunction will be denied if a defense of payment is used at law or is attempted to be asserted and fails, or if there is a remedy by appeal, error, or the like.

So, an injunction on the ground of payment was refused on account of trial at law where no equitable ground was shown. Huston v. Ditto, 20 Md. 305.

And where the bill in chancery stated that complainant was now able to prove his defense of payment to the obligee of a bond before notice of an assignment, but did not suggest fraud or ask discovery. Norris v. Hume, 2 Leigh, 334, 21 Am. Dec. 631.

And where the defense was that a sheriff was released from liability for not returning an execution by acts of the creditor in staying a previous execution, and that the debt in the replevin bond on which this execution issued was settled. Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 137.

And where no showing was made that the result would be changed in the injunction suit. Deaver v. Erwin, 7 Fred. Eq. 250.

And where the defense was payment or accord and satisfaction, which was unsuccessful at law on account of incompetency of a witness, and the incompetency existed at the time of the injunction suit. Williams v. Carr, 4 Colo. App. 368 (1894).

And where the debt had been settled and the court refused to admit the defense, as there was a remedy by appeal or writ of error. Dunn v. Fish, 8 Blackf. 407.

And where the defense was payment, and there was a remedy at law by motion to vacate. Ede v. Hazen, 61 Cal. 360.

And where the defense at law was ruled out on the ground that relief should be had in equity, and complainant failed to take exceptions and prosecute a writ of error. Risher v. Roush, 2 Mo. 95, 22 Am. Dec. 442.

And where the judgment was in ejectment by a mortgagee and the defense was part payment, but the plaintiff in ejectment was not summoned, and complainant might have filed a bill for redemption. Todd v. Pratt, 1 Harr. & J. 465.

In Stark v. Thompson, 3 T. B. Mon. 296, it was said an injunction would be refused where the defense was payment, and which had been tried at law, and no ground for equitable interference was shown.

An injunction was refused where the defense was that credits should have been allowed, and it is not shown but what they were contested on the trial at law. Hahn v. Hart, 12 B. Mon. 428.

c. Equitable defenses.

An injunction was granted against a judgment where the same was by default on an indorsement of a note of $80, which note was only given to plaintiff at law under a parol agreement as a security for a loan of $4, and which sum had been tendered before judgment. Smith v. Coble, Phil. Eq. 332.

And where the judgment was on a claimant's bond given by a trustee for creditors for property levied upon under a judgment rendered after the deed of trust, and such property had been taken from him under executions on prior judgments, as such defense could not be made at law. Ferriday v. Selcer, Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 258.

And where the defense was that the note was paid, and complainant, though not a party to the action, was contingently liable as indorser, and the note was obtained through fraud by the plaintiff at law. Hager v. Buechler, 6 Ill. App. 462.

And where the defense was that complainant had satisfied the note in judgment by executing and paying a note given by him to a third party to whom the plaintiff at law was indebted, although this defense was not made at law, as the remedy in equity was concurrent. "At common law 'payment after the day' could not be pleaded in an

this, in some of the states, exceptions have been allowed, and one of these exceptions is in favor of a defense that the debt was based upon a gaming consideration. Mr. High in his work on Injunctions (§ 285) uses this language: "Where the consideration for the contract on which the action at law is founded was money lost at gaming, and judgment is obtained against defendant, courts of equity are inclined to be somewhat more liberal in the exercise of their restraining jurisdiction than in ordinary cases, and upon considerations of public policy and the necessity of the prevention of gaming, they will generally restrain proceedings under the judgment." He cites as authority for the text the cases of White v.

action at law. The only relief was in chancery. The statute authorizing 'payment after the day' to be pleaded at law is cumulative, not exclusive." Harlan v. Wingate, 2 J. J. Marsh. 138.

And where the defense was payment, and that the note in suit was given individually by the personal representative of an estate on the understanding that it was not to be payable unless that amount should be due and the amount due had been paid, as it is doubtful if such a defense could have been made at law. Breeden v. Grigg, 8 Baxt. 163.

And where a judgment was on a negotiable note held apparently by assignee but held for collection only, and the beneficial owner had been paid, and insolvent agents of plaintiffs at law, contrary to instruction, attempted to collect the same. It did not appear by the record that complainant had an opportunity to make proof of payment, and the injunction was granted on the ground of fraud in the use of the judgment. Perry v. Siter, 37 Mo. 273.

And where the defense of garnishees was that the same debt had been paid on a judgment in favor of other parties, and the judgment attempted to be enjoined was unauthorized by the plaintiff who disclaimed all interest in the matter, and complainant was not guilty of negligence. Marchman v. Sewell, 93 Ga. 653.

And where the plaintiff at law had sufficient collaterals in his hand to discharge the debt, and the injunction suit was on the ground of payment and for discovery and for an account and set-off. Mann v. Bamberger, 4 Helsk. 486. See Russ v. Wilson, 22 Me. 207, supra, a.

And where the defense was accord and satisfaction moving from a stranger not a privy to the bond in suit, as such defense could not be pleaded at law. Stark v. Thompson, 3 T. B. Mon. 296.

d. Summary proceedings.

An injunction on the ground of payment will be granted where the judgment is in the nature of a summary proceeding and an opportunity is not given for making a defense.

So, an injunction on the ground of payment was granted where the same was claimed against a judgment via ordinaria, and was allowed for the amount to which complainant was entitled. Savoie v. Thibodeaux, 28 La. Ann. 169.

And where there was a defense of payments and credits against a sale on a summary judgment. Ludeling v. Frelsen, 4 La. Ann. 534.

And where a sale was via executiva and the note had been paid and the plaintiff in that action had obtained fraudulent possession of the note with knowledge. Halsey v. Lange, 28 La. Ann. 248.

But an injunction was refused where the defense to a summary judgment on a replevin bond was payment, but such payment was made to a person not authorized to receive it. Chinn v. Mitchell, 2 Met. (Ky.) 92.

e. Pleading bill of discovery.

An injunction will be refused if the bill of complaint is not specific and definite, or if for a discovery, and it is not filed in time.

So, an injunction was refused where, in an action of nullity, a payment was not alleged to have been made after the judgment was rendered. Todd v. Paton, 12 La. Ann. 88.

31 L. R. A.

And where bill of discovery was filed to obtain evidence of set-off and the bill was not filed before judgment. Powell v. Stewart, 17 Ala. 719.

And where the bill of complaint does not allege whether the action was upon a note which was a specialty or simple contract, or if on the latter a defense could have been made at law. Craig v. Whips, 1 Dana. 375.

VI. Conditions.

Injunctions on the ground of nonperformance of conditions have generally been refused, where such defense was made at law, or might have been but was not.

So, an injunction was refused on a defense having been made at law where the defense to an action of covenant was that a condition precedent had not been performed. Brown v. Street, 6 Rand. (Va.) 1.

And where the defense in ejectment was that the several covenants in a lease had been performed and there was one against which there was no equitable ground for relief, although there was as to all the others. Nokes v. Gibbon, 3 Drew. 681, 3 Jur. N. S. 726, 26 L. J. Ch. 433.

And where the defense was that the condition of the judgment had been performed and was tried on a rule to show cause why a judgment in ejectment should not be enjoined, and was the same as the ground for injunction, and was res judicata. Gordinier's Appeal, 89 Pa. 628.

And an injunction was refused for failure to defend at law where the defense was that a parol condition was omitted from a written contract and there was no charge of fraud, as such a defense would not be available either at law or in equity. It was said that if he could have made any defense, it was a legal one. Gatlin v. Kilpatrick, N. C. Law Repos. 524, 6 Am. Dec. 557.

And where the defense was that a plaintiff at law had not performed his part of the contract sued upon. Buckmaster v. Grundy, 8 Ill. 626.

An injunction was refused where complainant in the injunction suit failed in the partition suit because a decree that he desired to use in evidence did not describe the land and at the time of the trial the complaint in the preceding case was lost, as he should have procured a continuance. Besides he was guilty of laches in seeking equitable jurisdiction. Ratliff v. Stretch, 130 Ind. 282.

VII. Partition and dower.

An injunction was refused where full relief could be had at law, although such defense was rejected and appeal taken, which was pending when the suit for injunction was filed. Hopkins v. Medley, 99 Ill. 509.

And an injunction was refused for failure to defend at law where the defense against an assignment of dower was equitable estoppel, which might have been made at law. Milliken v. Dockray, 80 Me. 82.

VIII. As to party.

An injunction was refused on account of the right to defend at law which was not asserted where the defense was that the plaintiff at law was not a corporation as alleged. Mahan v. Accommodation Bank, 26 La. Ann. 34.

And where the defense was that the action was

Washington, 5 Gratt. 645; Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612; Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. (Va.) 214. It will be seen from an examination of the decisions referred to in support of the text that the cases cited by the author were from Virginia, and are predi-premature and petitioners at law could not sue, and that the holders of a judgment were exhausting an estate to the injury of complainants who were legatees. Lafon v. Desessart, 1 Mart. N. S. 71.

An injunction was refused on account of the matters having become res judicata, where the defense was that the party controlling the judgment was not the party in interest, which was made in a prior injunction suit. Moody v. Harper, 38 Miss. 599; Tompkins v. Drennen, 56 Fed. Rep. 694, 13 U. S. App. 308.

And where the defense was want of service of process, and that the plaintiff was not the party in interest, and that the notes in suit were obtained by fraud and duress, and there had been a prior injunction suit against the same judgment. Bass v. Nelms, 56 Miss. 502.

And an injunction was refused where the only ground for injunction was that there were new parties to the injunction suit, as "new parties without new facts, changing the rights of the plaintiffs in the common-law judgment to have the land, in the ears of equity are but 'sounding brass and tinkling cymbal' to which she gives no heed." Robinson v. Veal, 78 Ga. 301.

For party, see Gatewood v. City Bank, 49 Ga. 45; Phillips v. Walker, 48 Ga. 55; French v. Shotwell, 5 Johns. Ch. 555, supra, III. d; Hager v. Buechler, 6 Ill. App. 462; Perry v. Stite, 37 Mo. 273; Marchman v. Sewell, 98 Ga. 653; Stark v. Thompson, 3 T. B. Mon. 296, supra, V. c; Hauser v. Mann, 1 Murph. 410, supra, II. b; Donelson v. Young, Meigs, 155, supra, II. c; Radcliffe v. Varner, 56 Ga. 222, supra, IV. a. See supra, IV. b, Parties; infra, X. Nonliability in general.

An injunction was refused because the grounds therefor had been previously tried, against an action for tort for assisting a debtor to remove his property in order to prevent a levy where the defense was that the complainant was the owner of the property. Meredith v. Johns, 1 Hen. & M. 585.

And where the defenses that the plaintiffs at law were not the owners of the judgment, and payment, and bar of the statute of limitations, had been made, on a rule to show cause why the execution should not be quashed, as the judgment discharging the rule was equivalent to a judgment dissolving an injunction. Trescott v. Lewis, 12 La. Ann. 197.

And where the defense in an action of trespass for damming water against plaintiff was that complainant was the owner of the land in dispute, and that since the judgment he had acquired the title to the same; but on affirmance the supreme court had held that so much of the verdict as related to the title might be disregarded, and so much of it as assessed damages for the trespass ought not to be disregarded. Peytavin v. Winter, 8 La. 271.

IX. Title to property.

An injunction was refused because the ground therefor was a legal defense and should have been made at law, where the defense against an action by a tutor for the balance of an account due, was that complainant was entitled to the property or its usufruct during her life. Thibodeaux v. Thibodeaux, 5 La. Ann. 598.

And where the action was by the husband's administrator against the widow for rent and the defense was that the husband had no title to the land. Kirby v. Kirby, 70 Ala. 370.

And where the action was for rent against a tenant and the defense was that he had bought the property on an execution against his landlord 31 L. R. A.

prior to such action. Casey v. Gregory, 13 R. Mon. 505, 56 Am. Dec. 581.

And where the defense to an action for the price of a wagon was that the plaintiff was not the owner of the same. Menfee v. Myers, 33 Tex. 690.

And where the defense in replevin was that the complainant held the goods merely as bailee of plaintiff. Davis v. Baylis, 51 Iowa. 435.

And where the defense was that the title of the prevailing party in ejectment was invalid. Ballance v. Forsyth, 65 U. S. 24 How. 183, 16 L. ed. 738.

An injunction was refused where a suit of claim and delivery had been dismissed for want of jurisdiction, by a justice after the plaintiff therein obtained the property, and a judgment was rendered in the alternative for the return of the property or its value, and the plaintiff claimed that if he paid the money over he would be without remedy. Powell v. Allen, 108 N. C. 46.

And where the ground for injunction was that the defendant in a replevin suit had no title to the property, but that it belonged to a partnership of which the plaintiff at law was a member, and that the property had been appropriated for firm purposes, and that the firm was insolvent. Bowman v. McGregor, 6 Wash. 118.

And where the defense was that the plaintiff at law had no right or title to the claim sued upon, which was an alleged surplus after a foreclosure sale. Tompkins v. Drennen, 56 Fed. Rep. 694, 13 U. S. App. 308.

And where the defense in trover was that the property was owned by complainant in the injunction suit. Haughy v. Strang, 2 Port. (Ala.) 177, 27 Am. Dec. 648.

And where the defense was that the title of the personal property recovered in detinue was in the complainant in the injunction suit. Glasgow v. Flowers, 1 Hayw. (N. C.) 238.

And where the defense to an action for conversion was that the plaintiff at law had no title to the property, but the bill did not show that a defense could not have been or was not made at law. McClanahan v. Stovall, 6 Lea. 506.

X. Nonliability in general.

An injunction was refused because the grounds therefor could have been and were not used as a defense in the action at law, where the defense was nonliability of a shareholder. Hardinge v. Webster, 1 Drew. & S. 101, 6 Jur. N. S. 88, 29 L. J. Ch. 161.

And where the defense was that the notes in the action should never be collected or enforced against complainant. Harmon v. Harmon, 51 Fed. Rep. 113.

And where the action was in assumpsit for money had and received, against which every equitable defense may be had upon the general issue. Tompkins v. Drennen, 56 Fed. Rep. 694, 13 U. S. App. 308.

And where the defense of rescission of contract was rejected at law. The remedy was by appeal. Moore v. Dial, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 157.

And where the defense was that the note in suit was not given for a debt which had inured to complainant's separate benefit, and that she was a married woman and the failure to make a defense at law was not excused. Hall v. Carroll, 10 La. Ann. 412.

And where the answer of a married woman was withdrawn by an attorney, who answered for her and her husband, at her husband's request, and a judgment was taken by default without her knowledge. Cayce v. Powell, 20 Tex. 767, 73 Am. Dec. 211.

cated upon a statute of that state which expressly declares judgments rendered upon a gaming consideration void. A similar statute was of force in Kentucky, and while it was of force the courts of that state likewise held that, the judgment being void by the statute,

And where the defense was that the attachments were improperly issued under Md. act 1831, chap. 271, providing for attachment proceedings on judgments. Windwart v. Allen, 18 Md. 196.

And where the action was on a constable's receipt, and he did not make the defense at law that the money was not collected, believing that the plaintiff at law would have to prove the collection before he could obtain judgment. This mistake of law was no ground for equitable interference. Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 506.

And where the defense against a motion for a penalty incurred by a clerk on nonpayment of taxes on process was that he had used due diligence to obtain a settlement with a commissioner of the revenue. Auditor of Public Accounts v. Nicholas, 2 Munf. 31.

And where the defense of a surety on a sheriff's bond was that the sheriff was prevented from returning an execution on account of the death of a party in whose hands it had been placed. Bierne v. Mann, 5 Leigh, 364.

And where the defense was that the sheriff was not indebted as shown by a settlement and judgment thereon. Price v. Johnson County, 15 Mo. 433.

And where a school district declined to defend on the ground that the claim was just, and a taxpayer sought to have the judgment enjoined. Skirving v. National L. Ins. Co. 59 Fed. Rep. 742, 19 U. S. App. 442.

And where the defense was that a village was not liable for an accident, as it had no funds and was unable to procure the means to keep a bridge in repair. Carney v. Marseilles, 136 Ill. 401.

And where the common council directed the city attorney to withdraw the defense in an action by a contractor against the city and a taxpayer brought a suit for an injunction on the ground that the charge for extras was illegal, but fraud was not shown. Chaffee v. Granger, 6 Mich. 51.

And where the defense was an agreement to extend the time of the payment of the debt, and such agreement was made before the judgment was rendered. Bartlett v. Peck, 5 La. Ann. 670.

And where a defense to a suit of forcible entry and detainer was that the lease had been extended. Curd v. Farrar, 47 Iowa, 504.

And where a defense to a scire facias was that the defendant was entitled to the benefit of Ga. act 1868 entitled "An Act for the Relief of Debtors, and to Authorize the Adjustment of Debts upon Principles of Equity." Dibble v. Pease, 59 Ga. 618.

And where the defense was the statute of limitations. Eatis v. Patton, 3 Yerg. 382.

And where the defense was that the complainant was not a member of the partnership firm which issued the bill in controversy. Protheroe v. Forman, 2 Swanst. 227.

And where the note sued on was made by complainant's partner after a dissolution of the firm, and complainant was negligent in not making such defense at law. Leggett v. Morris, 6 Smedes & M. 723.

And where the defense against a summary judgment on an injunction bond was that the judgment enjoined had become dormant and could have been had under N. C. Rev. Stat. chaps. 32, 33, providing that proceedings on injunction bonds shall be had under the same rules, regulations, and restrictions as bonds on appeal from the county to the superior court. McReynolds v. Harshaw, 2 Ired. Eq. 195.

And where the defense against a sci. fa. on a mortgage and two nihilis was minority, and the complainant was of age at the time of judgment and slept upon his rights ten years until the claim was barred by limitation before the injunction suit was filed. Clark v. Bond, Wright (Ohio) 282.

But an injunction was granted where the debt was barred by limitation and the action at law was on a foreign transcript, notwithstanding there was a remedy by motion in the courts of Illinois where the judgment was rendered, as this did not prevent the exercise of equitable jurisdiction in the state where the suit was brought. Brown v. Parker, 28 Wis. 21.

In Hampson v. Weare, 4 Iowa, 13, 66 Am. Dec. 116, where the defense against an execution was that private property of the members of a corporation was exempt, and that statutory proceedings had not been followed, and that the members were only liable for the amount of their stock, and then only on certain conditions, an injunction was refused, as these were matters of defense, but was granted because the judgment was against the corporation and execution did not follow the judgment.

An injunction was refused on grounds which had been asserted in defense of the action at law, where the defense was that the right to dividends on insurance policies was forfeited. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Currier, 58 Vt. 229.

And where the defense was that credit was given exclusively to one partner and it was not intended that the other should be looked to for payment. Smith v. Durrett, Sneed (Ky.) 236, 2 Am. Dec. 714.

An injunction was granted against a judgment on sufficient excuse having been shown for failure to defend, where the note sued upon was made in a firm name long after complainant had left the firm. Baltzell v. Randolph, 9 Fla. 366.

And where complainant was a member of a partnership firm and the note in suit was given for a debt of the predecessors of the firm, and complainant did not know such fact until after judgment. Vennum v. Davis, 35 Ill. 563.

An injunction was granted against a judgment, where the defense was that although the debt was for necessities it was on a contract made by a drunkard after the appointment of his guardian, who was not a party to the suit. Devin v. Scott, 34 Ind. 67.

An injunction was granted against a judgment where the grounds were that complainants were taxpayers and the judgment was on a contract in favor of a teacher who had no certificate as required by law, and complainants were not parties to that action. Barr v. Deniston, 19 N. H. 180.

In Pendleton v. Taylor, 77 Va. 580, an injunction was granted against a judgment where the action was for having collected a bond belonging to an estate, and such bond had not been collected by complainant but by the plaintiff at law. The question as to failure to defend was not made.

For injunctions in cases in favor of or against "executors and administrators;" in "ejectment cases;" and in "summary proceedings in forcible entry and detainer," see note to Parsons v. Hartman (Or.) 30 L. R. A. 98, "Injunctions against execution sales or other proceedings under final process."

For negligence in asserting a defense generally, see note to Payton v. McQuown (Ky.) ante, 33, "Negligence as a cause for and as a bar to injunctions against judgments."

Foreinjuncting judgments against or in favor of sureties, see note to Michener v. Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. (Ind.) ante, 59.

Matters in regard to defenses of bankruptcy are not included in this note. I. T.

a court of equity will enjoin proceedings under such judgment. See Clay v. Fry, 3 Bibb, 248, 6 Am. Dec. 634. In this state we have no statute which renders void judgments founded on debts based upon a gaming consideration, and, if that defense be relied upon to defeat an action, it must be pleaded as any other at common law; and, if the defendant suffer judgment to go against him, the debt of the plaintiff stands purged of its impurity, and the defendant is thereafter concluded. So far as the moral aspect of the two defenses is concerned, usury and gaming consideration stand upon the same footing, and in this state they stand upon the same legal footing with respect to the conclusiveness of judgment based thereon. In neither case is the judgment rendered void, and after judgment the defendant is concluded, either as to usury or gaming consideration. See Owen v. Gibson, 74 Ga. 465.

Judgment affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Nathaniel JARVIS, Jr., Respt.,

v.

MANHATTAN BEACH COMPANY, Appt.

(148 N. Y. 652.)

Information that a certificate of stock is in a condition for transfer, given by a person in charge of the office of a corporation in response to an inquiry on the faith of which a broker guaranteed its genuineness, estops the corporation from denying its liability to indemnify him or his assignee against loss on account of the fact that the certificate was spurious and worthless.

(March 3, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the New York County Circuit in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for defendant's refusal to permit a transfer on its books of certain certificates of its stock. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William J. Kelly, for appellant:

At the close of the plaintiff's case the defect in his title was apparent. His vendor could transfer no better title than he himself possessed.

A complete transfer of shares in a corporation involving a novation of the contract of membership can be effected only in the manner prescribed by the charter or articles of association.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 169; Mechanics' Bkg. Asso. v. Mariposa Co. 3 Robt. 395; Purchase v. New York Exch. Bank, Id. 164.

There is no equity, no question of estoppel which can work against the defendant in this case.

Holbrook v. New Jersey Zinc Co. 57 N. Y. 616; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of North America, 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Bank of Commerce v. Union Bank, 3 N. Y. 280.

The original certificate was issued and signed by the company's officers in the regular course of business and without knowledge that Big-nell was a fictitious character.

Shipman v. Bank of the State, 126 N. Y.

318, 12 L. R. A. 791; Irving Nat. Bank v. Alley, 79 N. Y. 536; Turnbull v. Bowyer, 40 N. Y. 456, 100 Am. Dec. 523; Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L. R. A. 331. •

The transfer is not a part of the certificate, is something the corporation cannot guarantee, nor has it in its possession stock books or any other means by which it could be assumed to testify to the genuineness of a third party's signature.

Manhattan Beach Co. v. Harned, 27 Fed. Rep. 486; Phillips v. Mercantile Nat. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 23 L. R. A. 584.

There is no estoppel arising from the statements alleged to have been made at the company's office.

Iselin v. Henlein, 16 Abb. N. C. 73; Bigelow, Estoppel, 4th ed. 559.

There can be no estoppel when the party claiming one is obliged before changing his position to inquire for the existence of other facts to make the inducements sufficient and to rely upon them also in acting.

Bigelow, Estoppel, 4th ed. p. 622; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of North America, 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239; People v. Bank of North America, 75 N. Y. 548; Manhattan Beach Co. v. Harned, 27 Fed. Rep. 484.

Messrs. Charles Steele and William D. Guthrie, for respondent:

An examination was a duty because it was the obvious dictate of good sense as the easiest and safest check upon the agent's conduct.

New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30, 59.

Ignorance is unavailable to the defendant, for it could only have existed by reason of the most inexcusable carelessness which would render defendant liable to precisely the same extent as if they had knowingly issued the spurious certificate.

New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; Shipman v. Bank of the State, 126 N. Y. 818, 12 L. R. A. 791; Phillips v. Mercantile Nat. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 23 L. R. A. 584; Coggill v. American Exch. Bank, 1 N. Y. 113, 49 Am. Rep. 310; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 1047.

Checks and drafts drawn to fictitious payees may be legally indorsed by the real party in the fictitious name. In principle this rule is equally applicable to stock certificates.

NOTE.—In connection with the above case, see also the following case of Knox v. Eden Musee American Co. (N. Y.) post, 779, as well as the note to Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. (N. Y.) 19 L. R. A.

331, on the liability of a corporation for fraud or forgery of its officers in the issue of stock.

Robertson v. Coleman, 141 Mass. 231, 55 Am. Rep. 471; Emporia Nat. Bank v. Shotwell, 85 Kan. 360, 57 Am. Rep. 171; Forbes v. Espy, 21 Ohio St. 474; Dodge v. National Exch. Bank, 30 Ohio St. 1.

No privity is needed to make the estoppel available other than that which flows from the wrongful act and the consequent injury.

Bank of Batavia v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 440; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30.

When a certificate of its stock was presented for transfer or for information as to its transferability, the defendant was bound to determine upon its own responsibility whether or not such certificate was in all respects a genuine and valid certificate of stock, whether or not the person therein named was a stockholder in the company, and whether or not the certificate, in the form presented, was acceptable for transfer.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 1047.

What difference does it make in legal effect whether Fox & Co. were misled by an actual transfer or by the defendant's statement that it would transfer when requested.

Continental Nat. Bank v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 50 N. Y. 575; Clews v. Bank of New York Nat. Bkg. Assn. 103 N. Y. 398.

Relying upon the defendant's representation that it would accept the certificate for transfer, Fox & Co. indorsed and sold it, and became liable for its value. After the opportunity for arrest and detention of the criminal was past the defendant sought to retract its statements. It is estopped from doing so.

Manhattan Beach Co. v. Harned, 27 Fed. Rep. 484; Continental Nat. Bank v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 50 N. Y. 575; Justh v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 56 N. Y. 478.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in this action recovered a judgment for damages sustained by his assignors in consequence of the defendant's refusal to transfer a certificate for 100 shares of its capital stock upon request, whereby the holders of the certificate were compelled to purchase other shares of equal amount. The defendant had a capital stock of $5,000,000 divided into 50,000 shares of $100 each. A large portion of the stock was issued, and the certificates were listed upon the New York Stock Exchange, and were the subject of purchase and sale by the public. The certificates were signed by the defendant's president and assistant treasurer, and in order to guard against frauds, countersigned and registered by the Central Trust Company, which acted as registrar of transfers, in order to authenticate the genuineness of the certificates. The defendant had an office in the city of New York, where the transfers of its stock were made, and a transfer clerk was in attendance there to make the transfers. On the 30th of September, 1882, this transfer clerk delivered to a firm of brokers in New York, in the ordinary course of business, a certificate for 100 shares of the defendant's capital stock, to sell for his account. The certificate bore the genuine signatures of the defendant's president and assistant treasurer, and was countersigned by the Central Trust Company, with a certificate of its registration on the day of its date indorsed thereon. It was in all respects regular in form, and carried upon its face every assurance of genuineness, and certified that one B. Bignell was the owner of 100 shares of defendant's capital stock. What purported to be the signature of Bignell was indorsed thereon, under the blank form of transfer; and this signature was witnessed or purported to be witnessed, by the transfer clerk, who presented it to the brokers. It appeared that this certificate was in fact spurious, fabricated by the transfer clerk over the genuine signatures of the president, assistant treasurer, and registrar, upon the blanks used by the defendant in issuing genuine certificates; that Bignell was not a holder of any stock; and that his name upon the paper was a mere fictitious and fraudulent device. It was shown that, by the rules of the stock exchange, certificates sold there must either stand in the name of some member, and be indorsed in blank by him, or, if standing in the name of some other person, and indorsed in blank by him, must be guaranteed by a member of the exchange. The purpose of this rule is to give to the purchaser the security of the indorsement or guaranty of some member, and hence the selling broker becomes a surety for the validity and genuineness of the certificate. The defendant had knowledge of this rule or custom, but did not follow it in practice. When making transfers of stock, in case the signature of the holder was unknown to it, then it had to be attested by a witness whom it did know. In the present case the signature indorsed on the certificate was attested by its own transfer clerk, whose signature was well known; and so the certificate was apparently in a condition for transfer, under the practice adopted at the defendant's office. The brokers to whom the certificate was presented by the transfer clerk sold it in the open market for his account, but were, as already stated, obliged to guarantee its genuineness. In order to ascertain whether they could safely do so, they sent the certificate by a messenger, first to the office of the Central Trust Company, the registrar, and then to the defendant's office, to inquire whether it was genuine and acceptable for transfer. The Central Trust Company informed him that the certificate was properly registered, and the person in charge at the defendant's office informed him, as the plaintiff claims, that the certificate was all right for transfer. The brokers did not procure it to be transferred, but, being thus assured that it was in a condition for transfer at any time, they made the guaranty upon it, and sold it for the account of the transfer clerk, paying to him the proceeds, retaining only the regular commissions. Subsequently, and about two years after, when it was ascertained that the certificate was spurious and worthless, the brokers were obliged to make their guaranty good, and took it back from the purchaser; procuring and delivering to him a genuine certificate, which they purchased in the market. Upon the refusal of the defendant to recognize the certificate or indemnify the brokers for their loss, they assigned the right of action to the plaintiff. In March, 1884, the transfer clerk, who had been in the defendant's employ for several years, absconded, and then the defendant, for the first time, ascertained from an examination of the books that for years he had been engaged in fraudulently issuing certificates of its stock, including the one in question. The evidence tended to show that prior to his departure he had the sole charge of the business of transfers, and of the stock ledger and transfer books; that practically no supervision was exercised over his conduct, and no examination made of the books, though, if made, the fraud of the clerk would have appeared, as it did when the examination was made after the absconding. On these facts and circumstances the case was submitted to the jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount which it cost the brokers to replace the spurious certificate with a real one, with the interest, and the general term has affirmed the judgment.

The principles upon which a corporation may be held liable to a bona fide holder of certificates of stock fraudulently issued or put in circulation by the wrongful or criminal acts of its officers or agents are quite well settled. Numerous cases involving these questions have received the attention of this court, and quite recently some new features of such transactions have appeared. Schuyler Case, 34 N. Y. 30; Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L. R. A. 331; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 146; Knorr v. Eden Musee American Co. 148 N. Y. 441, post, 779. The liability in such cases is determined by an application of the general rules of law that govern the relations of principal and agent as developed and applied to corporations, acting solely through such agencies. The principal is liable to a third person, in a civil action, for the fraud or other malfeasance of his agent perpetrated by the latter in the course of his employment, although the principal did not authorize, justify, or know of the misconduct. In this case the certificate contained the genuine signatures of three authorized officers or agents of the defendant, namely, the president, the assistant treasurer, and the registrar. The paper, upon its face, was an assurance to the public, through the acts of its officers, that a person named therein, whether a real or fictitious person, was the owner of 100 shares of its capital stock. It had upon its face all the essential evidence of genuineness and it was presented to the brokers for sale, apparently in proper form for transfer, by the very agent of the defendant that it had held out to the public as the person who had the power to represent and act for it in making such transfer. When the paper was delivered to the brokers by the transfer clerk, having indorsed thereon what appeared to be a regular transfer, it is difficult to see why it was not received by them with every reasonable assurance that the defendant was able to give, that the certificate was not only genuine stock, but in a condition to be transferred upon the books in favor of any one 31 L. R. A.

who should receive it in good faith. The paper, in fact, however, was nothing but a fictitious and fraudulent device on the part of the transfer agent, which he had fabricated for purposes of his own; and although the evidence tended to show that his frauds in this respect could have been detected or prevented by the exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of the defendant's officers, yet, as the brokers knew, or ought to have known, that he was dealing with himself in respect to the certificate, it may very well be that this circumstance was sufficient to put them on their guard, and to impose upon them the duty of making some inquiry as to its origin and validity. The paper came to them accredited by the genuine signatures of the proper officers of the defendant, and countersigned by the registrar, whose duty it was to guard against unauthorized or fraudulent issues of the stock. These signatures carried with them—to strangers, at least—the very highest assurance of the genuine character of the security. But we do not think it is necessary, in this case, to decide what the liability of the defendant would be in case it appeared that the brokers took the certificate without inquiry, since the proof tended to show that they were not negligent in that respect. This was really the only question of fact contested at the trial, and submitted by the court to the jury. While such certificates do not possess all the qualities of commercial paper, they do possess some of them; and innocent parties dealing in them will be protected upon analogous principles, and, in a proper case, will be entitled to compel recognition as stockholders, where power exists to issue new certificates, or to indemnify if there was not.

We think that the judgment in this case can stand upon the verdict of the jury, which implies a finding of fact that before the brokers received the certificate for sale, or guaranteed its genuineness, they sent it to the defendant's office, in order to ascertain whether they could safely do so, and were informed by the person in charge that it was in a condition for transfer. This was, in substance, an assurance that the stock would be transferred in case the brokers took it, or, at least, that there was no defect in the instrument to prevent the transfer. The brokers having acted upon the faith of the assurance, the defendant must be held estopped from denying the liability to indemnify them or their assignee from the result of such action. Claus v. Bank of New York Nat. Bkg. Asso. 105 N. Y. 398; Kenyon v. Knights Templar & M. A. Aid Asso. 123 N. Y. 247, 254; Stokes v. Mackay, 140 N. Y. 640. There was some dispute at the trial as to the precise scope of the representations made at defendant's office by the person in charge, as well as his authority to make them; but these questions were submitted to the jury upon evidence which admitted of opposing inferences, and the verdict must, on this appeal, be taken as establishing not only the representations as stated, but the authority of the person in the office to deal with the subject, and to make them. Assuming, as we must, that the brokers, before assuming any liability in regard to the certificate, made general inquiry of the defendant as to its character and condition, and were then assured it was genuine and in condition for transfer, and, relying upon such assurance, they sold the certificate, making the guaranty required by the rules of the exchange, the case contains all the elements of an estoppel against the defendant. It is urged by the learned counsel for the defendant that upon the proofs the only inquiry made was as to the form of the certificate. It is scarcely to be supposed that brokers constantly dealing in stocks would take the trouble to inquire of the corporation whether its certificates were made up in proper form. The jury had the right, upon all the testimony, to adopt the more probable theory that the information sought by the brokers was, not as to the form, but as to the genuineness, of the certificate, and that they sent it to the office of the defendant in order to know whether they could safely deal with it. The evidence as to the precise representation made at the defendant's office, and the identity and authority of the person who made it, was not very clear or satisfactory. There can be no doubt, however, that the brokers sent the certificate to the defendant's office for verification. The uncertainty arises in regard to what took place there, and the parties to the transaction; and when it is borne in mind that the witnesses were testifying years afterwards to transactions of everyday occurrence, it is not surprising that they were unable to give the precise words used, or all the details of the interview. The proof was of such a character that, under all the circumstances, the court was not warranted in withdrawing from the jury the question as to what representations, if any, were actually made as to this certificate at the defendant's office, as well as the agency and authority of the person in charge to make them.

The defendant's counsel asked the court to submit to the jury the question whether, in taking the certificate, the brokers acted in good faith. The request was refused, and the defendant excepted. The only evidence on this point was that in several previous transactions these same brokers acted for the same transfer clerk in the sale of shares of defendant's stock, and, upon receiving the certificates, sent them to the defendant's office, and procured them to be transferred in the name of some of their clerks, whereas, in this case, they made no transfer. We think that bad faith on the part of the brokers could not be found, upon this testimony, especially in view of the fact that before dealing with the certificate they took the precaution to send it to the registrar, the Central Trust Company, and were informed there that it had been properly registered, and then to the office of the defendant, where they were informed, in substance, as the verdict implies, that the certificate was in a condition for transfer. While the case, in some respects, was a close one, we think that it presents no legal error that would warrant us in interfering with the verdict.

The judgment must therefore be affirmed with costs.

All concur.

Edward M. KNOX, Respt.,

v.

EDEN MUSEE AMERICAN COMPANY,
Limited, Appt.,

(148 N. Y. 441.)

1. The title of the true owner of a lost or stolen certificate of stock in a corporation may be asserted against any one subsequently obtaining its possession, even if the holder is a bona fide purchaser.
2. Directing an employee to cancel surrendered certificates of stock does not give him any authority, express or implied, to act as agent in issuing them so as to bind the corporation by his wrongful use of them to secure a personal loan.
3. Permitting surrendered certificates of stock to remain uncanceled in the safe of the corporation to which an employee has access, and relying upon him to cancel the certificates as he was directed to do, are not such negligence as will make the corporation liable for his fraudulent use of them to secure a personal loan about three weeks later, if the company did not know or have reason to suspect that he was dishonest, although a by-law requiring the cancellation of the surrendered certificates was not complied with.

(February 18, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment entered in the office of the clerk of New York County upon the report of a referee in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the value of certain of its stock which its employee had taken from its custody and disposed of to plaintiff as his own property. Reversed.

Statement by Andrews, Ch. J.:

The action was brought to recover damages claimed to have been sustained through the defendant's alleged negligence in not having accomplished the cancellation of three certificates, each for five shares of its capital stock, which had been surrendered for transfer, and which the plaintiff asserted he was thereby induced to receive as valid certificates, when, in fact, they no longer represented stock, but were mere vouchers for the actual certificates, which had been issued in their stead.

Four old certificates, including the three above mentioned, and another, also for five shares of the defendant's stock (all of which had been surrendered for transfer and a new certificate for twenty shares issued therefor), were taken without authority from the defendant's safe by one of its employees, who induced the plaintiff to make him a personal loan on the certificates, upon the representation that they were valid outstanding certificates and were his personal property. The loan fell due and was unpaid, and the defendant undertook to realize upon his collateral. He then discovered upon inquiry at the defendant's office that the certificates were not valid, but were mere vouchers for genuine stock which had been issued upon the surrender of these old certificates to the company.

NOTE.—As to the liability of a corporation for fraud or forgery by its officers in the issue of stock, see note to Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. (N. Y.) 19 L. R. A. 331. See also the case of Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. (N. Y.) ante, 776.

Messrs. William D. Guthrie, Charles Steele, and James W. Monk, for appellant:

Where recoveries have been had for stock fraudulently issued, it was put upon the ground that the fraud was committed by the agent of the company, as its official representative, in the course of his employment.

Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L. R. A. 331; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 146; Bank of New York Nat. Bkg. Asso. v. American Dock & T. Co. 143 N. Y. 559.

Stock certificates, even when indorsed in blank, are not strictly negotiable instruments.

The only ground upon which the title of a purchaser in good faith from one not the real owner of shares has been sustained, is that of estoppel, the theory being that the real owner, having clothed another with the apparent indicia of actual ownership, is estopped from denying such ownership as to one who in reliance upon such apparent evidence of title, has in good faith parted with consideration for the stock.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 412; Mechanics' Bank v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 599; Weaver v. Bartlen, 49 N. Y. 286; Hammond v. Hastings, 134 U. S. 401, 33 L. ed. 960.

A bona fide purchaser of a stolen or lost certificate indorsed in blank acquires no title to it.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 368; Anderson v. Nichols, 23 N. Y. 600; Wells v. Smith, 7 Abb. Pr. 261; Bangor Electric Light & P. Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520; Biddle v. Bayard, 13 Pa. 150; Baratow v. Savage Min. Co. 64 Cal. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 705; Sherwood v. Meadow Valley Min. Co. 50 Cal. 412; Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 13 L. R. A. 605; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2516.

Nor does it make any difference that the real owner has been negligently in the care of his property.

People v. Bank of North America, 75 N. Y. 547; Biddle v. Bayard, supra; Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415, 4 Am. Rep. 497; Codding v. Gilbert, 17 N. Y. 489; Sickles v. Richardson, 23 Hun, 559.

Any one accepting from an officer of a corporation notes or securities of such corporation, in a transaction which is for the personal benefit of such officer, is bound to make inquiry as to the right of the officer to deal with such securities, and failing to do so, he must be held to have known all that such inquiry would have disclosed.

Wilson v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 145; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 146; Bank of New York Nat. Bkg. Asso. v. American Dock & T. Co. 143 N. Y. 559; Simmons v. London Joint-Stock Bank [1891] 1 Ch. 270; Central Bank v. Hammett, 50 N. Y. 158; Moores v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 15 Fed. Rep. 141, Affirmed 111 U. S. 156, 28 L. ed. 385; Westwood Bd. of Edu. v. Sinton, 41 Ohio St. 504; Farrington v. 31 L. R. A.

South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 406, 5 L. R. A. 849; Hill v. C. F. Jewett Pub. Co. 154 Mass. 172, 13 L. R. A. 193; Garrard v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. 29 Pa. 154.

There can be no estoppel as against the defendant, for the defendant did no act which would estop it from asserting its title to these vouchers which had been stolen from its possession.

Sean v. North British Australasian Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 175.

By-laws are made, not for the protection of the public, but of the company, and so long as reasonable care is observed by the company in the transfer and cancelation of stock, it is quite immaterial to the public whether or not such transfers are made in accordance with the by-laws, because the public does not know what the by-laws are, and cannot be assumed ever to act upon the faith of their accurate observance.

Flint v. Pierce, 99 Mass. 63, 96 Am. Dec. 601; Pritchard's Case, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 956; Ward v. Johnson, 95 Ill. 215; Bank of New York Nat. Bkg. Asso. v. American Dock & T. Co. 143 N. Y. 559; People v. Bank of North America, 75 N. Y. 547.

There is no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant.

People v. Bank of North America, supra; Westwood Bd. of Edu. v. Sinton, 41 Ohio St. 504; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Guilmartin, 83 Ga. 797, 17 L. R. A. 322; Bangor Electric Light & P. Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520; Scott v. National Bank, 72 Pa. 471, 13 Am. Rep. 711; Hill v. C. F. Jewett Pub. Co. 154 Mass. 172, 13 L. R. A. 193; Patent Safety Gun Cotton Co. v. Wilson, 49 L. J. C. P. N. S. 715; Goodwin v. American Nat. Bank, 48 Conn. 550; Maas v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 83 N. Y. 223.

The defendant's negligence (if any) was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's loss.

Westwood Bd. of Edu. v. Sinton, and Hill v. C. F. Jewett Pub. Co. supra; Sean v. North British Australasian Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 175; Bank of Ireland v. Egan's Charities, 5 H. L. Cas. 388; The Staple of England v. Bank of England, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 160; Arnold v. Cheque Bank, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 578; Ledwich v. McKim, 53 N. Y. 307; Jackson v. Vicksburg, S. & T. R. Co. 13 Alb. L. J. 353.

The plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Westwood Bd. of Edu. v. Sinton, 41 Ohio St. 504; Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 23 L. R. A. 90.

Messrs. Henry D. Hotchkiss and William S. Maddox, for respondent:

The three certificates were in effect negotiable securities, and they are good in the hands of a purchaser in good faith and for value.

The current of modern authority shows that stock certificates indorsed in blank are now to be considered as negotiable instruments.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. § 415.

It is far more essential for the convenience and safety of the commercial public that stock certificates indorsed in blank should have full recognition by the courts as negotiable instruments, than either bills of lading or warehouse receipts. And yet these latter instruments have for years by statute in this state been recognized as capable at least of being made negotiable, if they are so stamped by those who issue them.

McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341; Bush v. Lathrop, 22 N. Y. 585.

All negotiable instruments have acquired that attribute only by a process of evolution.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 601, note 1; Mercer County v. Hackett, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 86, 17 L. ed. 549; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 185.

The authorities in this state justify this court, at this time, in holding that such a transferee has all the rights of a holder of negotiable paper under similar circumstances.

Kortright v. Buffalo Commercial Bank, 20 Wend. 91; Mechanics' Bank v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 599; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, supra; Leitch v. Wells, 48 N. Y. 585; Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L. R. A. 331; Johnston v. Laflin, 103 U. S. 800, 26 L. ed. 532.

The best text-writers admit that the current of modern authority is in line with the New York cases.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 190; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. § 416.

Certificates of stock are assignable, and pass from hand to hand by indorsement, as bills of exchange and promissory notes pass, and holders of such certificates are prima facie presumed to be the bona fide owners thereof, and an innocent purchaser thereof for value will hold them against the true owner, where the latter has placed it in the power of the assignor to perpetrate a fraud upon the innocent assignee.

Supply Ditch Co. v. Elliott (1887) 10 Colo. 333; First Nat. Bank v. Lanier, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 369, 20 L. ed. 172; Prull v. Tilt (1877) 28 N. J. Eq. 483; Rumball v. Metropolitan Bank, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 194.

The defendant was guilty of negligence, and is estopped from disputing the validity of these certificates.

New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; Cleveland & M. R. Co. v. Robbins, 35 Ohio St. 483; Lowry v. Commercial & F. Bank, Taney 310; Chew v. Bank of Baltimore, 14 Md. 300; Roosevelt v. Land & R. Imp. Co. 11 Misc. 595.

That which never happened before, and which in its character is such as not to naturally occur to prudent men to guard against its happening at all, cannot, when in the course of years it does happen, furnish good ground for a charge of negligence in not foreseeing its possible happening and guarding against that remote contingency.

Hubbell v. Yonkers, 104 N. Y. 439, 58 Am. Rep. 522; Gilson v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 65 Vt. 213.

Defendant is estopped from denying its liability.

Holbrook v. New Jersey Zinc Co. 57 N. Y. 616; Titus v. Great Western Turnp. Co. 61 N. Y. 237; Bruff v. Mali, 36 N. Y. 200; Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L. R. A. 331.

Defendant's officers, whose duty it was to see to it that the certificates in question were 31 L. R. A.

"canceled," wholly omitted to perform such duty, but relied upon Jurgens to see that it was done. Because of this act on the part of the defendant's officers, and because of the trust reposed by them in Jurgens, he was enabled to keep in force the "continuing affirmation" that the persons named in and who had indorsed those certificates in blank were the owners of stock as therein set forth.

The defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the loss.

Holbrook v. New Jersey Zinc Co. supra; Bank of Batavia v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 440; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 591, 34 Am. Rep. 325.

When several proximate causes contribute to an accident, and each is an efficient cause, without the operation of which the accident would not have happened, it may be attributed to all or any of the causes; but it cannot be attributed to a cause unless, without its operation, the accident could not have happened.

Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 233, 48 Am. Rep. 622; West v. Ward, 77 Iowa, 323; McCahill v. Kipp, 2 E. D. Smith, 413; Van Houten v. Fleischman, 1 Misc. 134, Affirming 142 N. Y. 624.

Although in a legal sense these uncanceled certificates were, after their surrender, retained by defendant in its own possession, as matter of fact they were in the custody of Jurgens, and it is only required that he should appropriate them to his own use to make them efficient instruments of injury to others.

This act was one to be reasonably anticipated, and was the "natural and probable consequence" of defendant's act in leaving the certificates uncanceled and under Jurgens' control.

Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 163, 52 Am. Rep. 12; Swan v. North British Australasian Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 175.

In all cases in which any person undertakes the performance of an act which, if not done with care, may involve loss or injury to one or more persons known or unknown, the law ipso facto imposes as a public duty the obligation to use due care.

Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Smith, Neg. 90 et seq.; Whart. Neg. §§ 853 et seq.; Van Winkle v. American Steam Boiler Co. 52 N. J. L. 240; Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 242, 19 L. R. A. 331.

In cases coming within this rule no privity is necessary between the parties.

Broom, Com. Law, 4th ed. 673 et seq.

Jurgens was defendant's agent to cancel and defendant is liable for his acts.

McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 330, 7 Am. Rep. 341; People v. Bank of North America, 75 N. Y. 547.

No actual notice to plaintiff of any invalidity of the stock is shown.

Plaintiff was not bound to present the certificates to the company for verification.

Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 23 L. R. A. 90. The doctrine of constructive notice does not apply.

Seydel v. National Currency Bank, 54 N. Y. 283, 13 Am. Rep. 583.

Even gross negligence on the part of the purchaser or pledgee for value will not defeat his title. It is a question simply of his good faith.

Birdsall v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 220; Welch v. Sage, 47 N. Y. 143, 7 Am. Rep. 423; Magee v. Badger, 34 N. Y. 247, 90 Am. Dec. 691; Belmont Branch of State Bank v. Hoge, 35 N. Y. 65.

Of course a defect on the face of the instrument would be of itself notice to such a buyer, but nothing less than proof of knowledge of such facts and circumstances (i. e., as show the invalidity) "can meet the exigencies of such a defense."

Goodman v. Simonds, 61 U. S. 20 How. 343, 15 L. ed. 984; Bank of Pittsburg v. Neal, 63 U. S. 22 How. 96, 16 L. ed. 323; Murray v. Lardner, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 110, 17 L. ed. 857.

The doctrine of notice, either actual or constructive, has no possible application to ordinary sales of personal property, such as chattels and merchandise.

Parker v. Conner, 93 N. Y. 118, 45 Am. Rep. 178; Bush v. Roberts, 111 N. Y. 278; Wilde v. Gibson, 1 H. L. Cas. 605.

Andrews, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The rigid rule of the common law which prohibited the assignment of choses in action was, in England, at an early day, relaxed to some extent to conform to the usages of merchants and the necessities of commerce, and at length by the aid of statutes and judicial decisions, bills of exchange and promissory notes were completely taken out of its influence, and they came to have distinct attributes and qualities not pertaining to any other form of contract. They were not only made transferable by delivery and subale in the name of the transferee, but, contrary to the general rule of the common law, "honest acquisition," for value was held to give to the transferee a new and original title, wholly independent of that of the prior holder and subject to no infirmity which affected the paper in his hands. The real owner, who had been despoiled of the paper by robbery or theft, or who had lost it without negligence, was concluded from reclaiming it, and the maker, although he had been defrauded into executing it, could not be heard to allege the fraud as a defense against a bona fide holder. And the transferee, although he may have been negligent in taking it and omitted precautions which a prudent man would have taken, nevertheless, unless he acted malu fide, his title, according to the doctrine now settled, will prevail. These familiar but arbitrary principles applicable to commercial paper, originating in commercial policy, the encouragement of trade, the convenience of having some representative of money readily convertible and commanding confidence, while they operate in many cases with great severity upon the rights of innocent persons, have contributed greatly to stimulate commerce and advance the prosperity of states. The principles applicable to negotiable paper have been extended to embrace public debentures payable to bearer, and bonds of corporations, and some of the incidents of negotiability have either by custom or statute been applied to instruments not strictly negotiable. Certificates of stock in business corporations are embraced in the class last mentioned. They are not negotiable in form, they represent no debt and are not securities for money. But the courts of this country, in view of the extensive dealing in certificates of shares in corporate enterprises, and the interest both of the public and of the corporation which issues them, in making them readily transferable and convertible, have given to them some of the elements of negotiability. The owner of shares may transfer his title by delivery of the certificate with a blank power of attorney indorsed thereon signed by the owner of the shares named in the certificate. Such a delivery transfers the legal title to the shares as between the parties to the transfer, and not a mere equitable right. McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341. The transferee in good faith and for value holds his title free from latent equities between prior parties in the line of transmission. Under the doctrine of implied agency and the application of the principle of estoppel to the situation, the true owner is in many cases precluded from asserting his title. The case of McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank is a leading case on the subject, and marks the limit to which the court has hitherto gone in subordinating the rights of the true owner of a stock certificate to the title of a transferee derived under one who, being in possession of the certificate by the consent of the true owner, has transferred it in fraud of his rights. That case holds that an agent to whom the owner has delivered a certificate of stock duly indorsed for transfer, with a limited power of disposition for a special purpose, may bind the title thereto as against the true owner by transferring it to a bona fide transferee who has no notice of the limitations of the agent's authority, although the transfer was made for an unauthorized purpose and with the intention on the part of the agent to commit a fraud upon his principal. The certificates there in question were pledged by the owner with brokers to secure advances, having indorsed thereon in form an unconditional power of attorney to make all necessary transfers, but with a limited authority to use the power only when necessary to make the pledge available. The brokers, in violation of their duty, pledged the shares for a large sum for their own purposes, and the controversy was between the original owner and the pledgees of the brokers. It was decided that, under the circumstances disclosed, the original owner, having placed the certificates in the hands of the brokers with power of disposition, was estopped as against the pledgees in good faith and for value, from denying their authority to transfer, upon the principle that the owner should rather suffer for his misplaced confidence in the brokers than those who dealt with them on the strength of an apparent authority. In the well-known case of New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30, the same principle of implied agency was applied to charge the corporation with liability in damages for spurious stock issued by Schuyler, the president and transfer agent of the company.

The courts have been frequently importuned to extend the qualities of negotiability of stock certificates beyond the limits mentioned and clothe them with the same character of complete negotiability as attaches to commercial paper, so as to make a transfer to a purchaser in good faith, for value, equivalent to actual title, although there was no agency in the transferrer, and the certificate had been lost without the fault of the true owner or had been obtained by theft or robbery. But the courts have refused to accede to this view, and we have found no case entitled to be regarded as authority which denies to the owner of a stock certificate which has been lost without his negligence, or stolen, the right to reclaim it from the hands of any person in whose possession it subsequently comes, although the holder may have taken it in good faith and for value. The precise question has not often been presented to the courts, for the reason probably that they have with great uniformity held that stock certificates were not negotiable instruments in the broad meaning of that phrase, but, whenever the question has arisen, it has been held that the title of the true owner of a lost or stolen certificate may be asserted against any one subsequently obtaining its possession, although the holder may be a bona fide purchaser (Anderson v. Nicholas, 28 N. Y. 600; Bangor Electric Light & P. Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520; Biddle v. Bayard, 13 Pa. 150; Barstow v. Savage Min. Co. 64 Cal. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 705. See Shaw v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. ed. 892). It may be observed that the elaborate opinion of Judge Rapallo in McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, to show that the plaintiff in that case was estopped from asserting his title on the ground of implied agency, was quite unnecessary if a transfer of a stock certificate indorsed in blank to a bona fide holder conferred a title as against the true owner, irrespective of the fact whether he voluntarily parted with the possession or was deprived of it by felony or fraud. It is plain, we think, that the argument in support of the judgment in this case, based on the complete negotiability of stock certificates, is not supported by, but is contrary to, the decisions. If public policy requires that a further advance should be made in more completely assimilating them to commercial paper in the qualities of negotiability, the legislature, and not the courts, should so declare. Under the law as it has hitherto prevailed there does not seem to have been any serious hindrance in dealing with property of this character. It may, perhaps, be doubted, taking into consideration the interests of investors as well as dealers, whether it would be wise to remove the protection which the true owner of a stock certificate now has against accident, theft or robbery. The system of registry of negotiable bonds, which prevails to a considerable extent, authorized by statutes of some of the states, and of the United States, seems to indicate a tendency to restrict rather than to extend the range of negotiable instruments.

Nor, in our opinion, can the judgment below be sustained upon any principle of agency in Jurgens, express or implied, to issue the surrendered certificates, which, on the issue of the new certificates to Siebrecht, became mere vouchers in possession of the company. If it 31 L. R. A.

can be said that the direction of the president to Jurgens to cancel the certificates made him the agent of the company for that purpose, it was an authority to destroy and not to use. His act in abstracting them from the safe and uttering them as valid certificates had no relation to the authority conferred. It was not an act of the same kind as that which he was authorized to perform. He had no apparent authority to issue them as genuine certificates, because he had no authority to issue certificates for any purpose, and what he did was, as was said in Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Forty-second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 146, "a wilful and criminal act, perpetrated for private gain and not connected with the exercise of any official authority or semblance of authority which he possessed as the defendant's agent." The certificates were, at all times after their surrender and before they were abstracted by Jurgens from the safe of the defendant, in the legal possession of the company. The company never placed them in the possession of Jurgens or invested him with the indicia of ownership. He had access to the safe as the mere servant of the defendant. The doctrine of implied agency is, we think, wholly inapplicable to the circumstances of this case.

We come, therefore, to consider the ground upon which the learned referee placed his judgment against the defendant, viz.: the negligence of the company. The claim of liability of the defendant on the ground of negligence is based on the fact that in violation of its by-laws it permitted the surrendered certificates to remain uncanceled in its safe, to which Jurgens had access, and thereby enabled him to commit the fraud, and upon the further allegation that the company neglected to exercise a proper supervision over its business and the conduct of its employees, and committed to Jurgens the management of its affairs without special inquiry into the manner in which he discharged his duties. We are of opinion that the company was not chargeable with any negligence which gives a right of action for the injury caused to the plaintiff by the fraudulent use by Jurgens of the surrendered certificates. The surrendered certificates were placed by the company in its safe in its office, of which Jurgens had the key, and thereby, it may be said, afforded him the opportunity to commit the crime of which he was guilty, in abstracting and uttering them as valid. But it is not true, as a general rule, that a man may not intrust his property to the custody of his servant, except at the peril of losing his title thereto if the servant steals and disposes of it to another. There must be something more than the mere intrusting to a servant of the custody of a chattel and the consequent opportunity for theft, in order to preclude the master from reclaiming it, if stolen by the servant and sold to another. Rapallo, J., in McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 329. The rule declared by Ashhurst, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 70, frequently quoted, that "wherever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it," has no application to such a case. The case in which the rule was stated affords a good illustration of its application. The consignor and vendor of the goods had by the delivery of a bill of lading delivered the possession of the goods to the holder with power according to the law merchant to transfer them by indorsement of the bill, and it was held that as against a transferee in good faith for value, the right of stoppage in transitu was lost. It was a case where the vendor had by his affirmative act enabled the holder to commit a fraud upon his rights, and it was justly held that he should bear the loss rather than the innocent purchaser. The familiar statement of Lord Holt, in Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 289, "for seeing somebody must be a loser by this deceit, it is more reason that he that employs and puts a trust and confidence in the deceiver should be a loser than a stranger,"—was made in a case where the question was whether a merchant was liable for the deceit of his factor in the sale of goods represented to be of one quality when they were of another. The principle announced by Lord Holt has been frequently applied to such and similar cases. But the employment of a servant to whom is intrusted the master's property, with no power of disposition, is not alone such a putting of trust and confidence in the servant by the master as to enable the latter by his wrongful act to defeat the master's title. The rule which would convert the mere employment of a servant into an authority in him, as to third persons, to sell or dispose of his master's goods intrusted to him for safe keeping, would be highly dangerous and has no sanction in the adjudged cases.

It remains to consider whether there were any special circumstances in this case which take it out of the general rule adverted to. Jurgens had been in the employment of the defendant for several years prior to the transaction in question and nothing had come to the knowledge of the defendant which raised doubt as to his honesty and faithfulness. The facts found by the referee show that the defendant reposed confidence in his integrity, and, so far as appears, the abstraction and uttering of the surrendered certificates was his first act of malversation during his employment. His power in respect to the issuing of certificates on the transfer of stock was clerical only. In case of transfer, he was accustomed to cancel the surrendered certificates and paste them in the certificate book, prepare the new certificate and impress the company's seal thereon, and then procure the president of the company to sign it. In every case prior to the one in question, the president signed the new certificate only, when the surrendered certificate was presented to him by Jurgens, canceled, together with the new certificate. There was a departure from that practice in the single instance in question under the special circumstances found by the referee. The president of the company knew when he signed the new certificate that the old certificates had been surrendered and were then in possession of the company, because he had himself placed them in the safe, and the fraud of Jurgens was made possible because the president relied upon Jurgens to cancel the surrendered certificates as he had directed him. It is urged that the improper use made of the certificates might reasonably have been expected to result from leaving them in the safe of the company in his care uncanceled. In other words, the claim is that the company ought to have anticipated that Jurgens might commit the crimes of forgery and larceny, and put the certificates on the market if they were left uncanceled under his control. We do not assent to this suggestion. If the company knew that Jurgens was dishonest, or had reason to suspect his honesty, a different question would be presented. But it is not generally an omission of ordinary prudence that an employer deals with his employees on the assumption that those who have hitherto been faithful in the performance of their duties will continue so to be, or because he does not anticipate and provide against the possibility of their criminal acts. Breaches of trust and confidence unfortunately are not infrequent. But honesty is nevertheless, we believe, the general rule of human conduct, and one may indulge in this faith in human nature and trust those who have proved themselves worthy of it without subjecting himself to a charge of negligence if it should turn out that they afterwards yielded to temptation and used their position to the injury of others. "It is one thing to say that a man shall be answerable for such immediate consequences of his acts as a reasonable man might well foresee and dread, and would therefore shun. But it is another and very different proposition to maintain that a man shall forfeit his property because he has done an act which will not be perilous unless others are guilty of misconduct which that act does not cause." Williams, J., Ex parte Sean, 7 C. B. N. S. 447. See also Bramwell, L. J., Barendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 530.

The fact that in the particular instance the defendant did not observe the by-law, and issued the new certificate without the actual cancelation of the surrendered certificates, was not, we think, as to the plaintiff, actionable negligence. It may be admitted that a business corporation is bound to exercise reasonable care in respect to the transfer of its shares. The defendant had adopted the usual precautions, and its by-laws required that transfers should be made only on the surrender and cancelation of outstanding certificates. The certificates on their face carried an assurance by the company that the shares represented had not been transferred on the books of the company, while the original certificates were outstanding. There was no representation on the face of the certificates that surrendered shares would be actually canceled by the company. The company, however, had by the by-law provided that this should be done, and it is said, and it is undoubtedly true, that this regulation was in conformity to the usual practice of stock corporations. By-laws are primarily for the protection of the corporation enacting them and its stockholders. The regulation that transfers shall only be made on the books on surrender of the outstanding certificates is essential as well for the protection of the company as the dealers in the stock. The regulation for actual cancelation of surrendered certificates is a still further protection. But can it be justly said that this latter regulation was so obligatory on the company that a single departure therefrom under special and peculiar circumstances which gave an opportunity for Jurgens' crime, was, as to the plaintiff, actionable negligence? We think it was not. To constitute actionable negligence there must not only be a violation of duty owing by one to another or to the public, but the injury must be the natural consequence of the alleged negligent act or one which might reasonably have been anticipated. Parke, B., in Bank of Ireland v. Evans's Charities, 5 H. L. Cas. 889, where it was claimed a corporation was bound by the fraudulent affixing by its secretary of the seal of the corporation in his custody, to a power of attorney to transfer its funds in the Bank of Ireland, states the true ground of actionable negligence in such a case. Speaking for the judges, he says: They are all of opinion "that the negligence which would deprive the plaintiff of his right to insist that the transfer was invalid must be negligence in or immediately connected with the transfer itself." Blackburn, J., in Swan v. North British Australasian Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 181, states the principle with even greater perspicuity. He says: "The neglect must be in the transaction itself, and be the proximate cause of leading the party into that mistake; and also, as I think, that it must be the neglect of some duty that is owing to the person led into that belief, or, what amounts to the same thing, to the general public of whom the person is one, and not merely neglect of what would be prudent in respect to the party himself, or even of some duty owing to third persons, with whom those seeking to set up the estoppel are not privy."

The claim that the injury to the plaintiff was occasioned by the omission of the defendant to exercise proper supervision over the conduct of Jurgens has, we think, no force. There was an interval of about three weeks between the time when the certificates were surrendered to the company and their abstraction and transfer by Jurgens. If during this period the officers of the defendant had examined the contents of the safe, it might have been ascertained that the certificates were uncanceled. An examination after that time would not have benefited the plaintiff, at least there is no evidence that a discovery of the fraud after it had been accomplished would have changed his position. The transfers of stock on the books of the company were comparatively infrequent. The president had reason to suppose that Jurgens would obey his directions and cancel the certificates, and the omission to inquire whether he had done so, during the period mentioned, is, as we think, quite insufficient to support the charge of negligence.

Finally, if the company had been the owner of some of its own shares, or if it had owned shares in other corporations which had been deposited in its safe for safe keeping, and they had been stolen and sold by Jurgens to the plaintiff, there can be no doubt that the company could reclaim them, and the loss would fall upon him. It is difficult to see how he could acquire a better right to the surrendered certificates or charge the company with damages resulting from Jurgens' crime.

Having reached the conclusion that there was no actionable negligence on the part of the defendant, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions argued at the bar.

The judgment below should be reversed and a new trial ordered, with costs in all the courts to abide the event.

All concur.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CONSOLIDATED GAS COMPANY OF BALTIMORE CITY, Appt.,

v.

John J. CROCKER.

(82 Md. 113.)

1. Carrying a lighted lamp into originating matches in a cellar filled with gas which afterwards explodes cannot be pronounced contributory negligence as matter of law so as to defeat a recovery for the injury resulting from the explosion, unless it appears affirmatively and without dispute that such acts caused the explosion.
2. Failure of a gas company to exercise any care to discover and remedy a leak which proves to be in its street mains, when notified that gas is escaping into the cellar of a building abutting on the street, may render the escape of the gas evidence of negligence which will make it liable for injuries caused thereby.

(December 6, 1896.)

NOTE.—A very extensive note on liability for negligence in the escape and explosion of gas is found with the case of Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews (Ohio) 29 L. R. A. 337. See also Evans v. Keystone Gas Co. (N. Y.) 30 L. R. A. 651.

31 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by an explosion of gas for which defendant was responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Alexander Preston, Alexander Preston, and William A. Fisher, for appellant:

The evidence presents a clear case of contributory negligence.

Lanigan v. New York Gaslight Co. 71 N. Y. 29; Bartlett v. Boston Gaslight Co. 117 Mass. 533, 19 Am. Rep. 421; Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1; Hampton v. Cradley Heath Gas Co. 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1274, note; Vallée vs Qualité v. New City Gas Co. (Montreal Super. Ct.) 7 Am. L. Rev. 767; Holden v. Liverpool New Gaslight & C. Co. 3 C. B. 14; Brown v. New York Gaslight Co. Anth. N. P. 351; Dietrich v. Baltimore & H. S. R. Co. 58 Md. 358; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. State, 54 Md. 655.

There is no evidence of negligence.

According to the evidence produced by the appellee, gas continued to escape into the cellar until the time of the explosion in considerable volume, but no notice was given to the defendant until after the explosion.

Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co. 8 Gray, 121, 69 Am. Dec. 233; Bartlett v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 213.

Messrs. John F. Preston and E. Beverly Slater, for appellee:

To justify a court in taking a case from the jury on the ground of contributory negligence of the plaintiff, there must be no room for ordinary minds to differ as to such contributory negligence.

People's Bank v. Morgolofski, 75 Md. 442; Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Maugans, 61 Md. 61, 48 Am. Rep. 88; North Baltimore Pass. R. Co. v. Arnreich, 78 Md. 593; Baltimore Traction Co. v. State, 78 Md. 422.

The question of contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury, and it "was a question which the trial court could not properly decide for itself, but was bound to submit to the jury as one which they alone could answer."

Greany v. Long Island R. Co. 101 N. Y. 419.

As to the duties and responsibilities of gas companies generally and the degree of care required of them, see —

Butcher v. Providence Gas Co. 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626; Emerson v. Lowell Gaslight Co. 3 Allen, 413; Mose v. Hastings & St. L. Gas Co. 4 Post. & F. 324; Schermhorn v. Metropolitan Gaslight Co. 5 Daly, 144; Bartlett v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 209.

Evidence of contributory negligence sufficient to raise a question of law to be decided by the court must establish without contradiction the direct fact in issue, and such fact must be decisive of the cause under trial.

McMahon v. Northern C. R. Co. 39 Md. 449; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Md. 44; Baltimore Traction Co. v. State, supra; Grabrues v. Klein, 81 Md. 83; People's Bank v. Morgolofski, and Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Maugans, supra; Cooke v. Baltimore Traction Co. 80 Md. 551.

The weight of the testimony produced at the trial, the credibility of witnesses, etc., as to whether or not the accident was caused by an explosion of illuminating gas or gasoline, belong peculiarly to the jury, and will not be considered by this honorable court.

Grabrues v. Klein, supra.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only questions we have before us on this appeal are those which arise in consequence of the rejection by the trial court of the prayers presented by the defendant for instructions to the jury, and those which grow out of the granting by the court of three instructions of its own. The case is one founded in alleged negligence. The fundamental principles which must govern its decision are thoroughly settled and established. To apply those principles correctly is all that is required. The defendant below (the appellant here) is a gas company. It manufactures and supplies gas for illuminating purposes. The gas is transmitted through mains and pipes underneath the surface of streets into houses and elsewhere. The plaintiff below (the appellee here) leased and occupied certain premises in Baltimore city.

31 L. R. A.

In those premises he conducted a saloon. He moved into them on or about the 20th of November, 1891. At that time the odor of escaping gas was very perceptible in the cellar of the house. When an employee of the gas company was notified that the gas was escaping and accumulating in the cellar, he stated that another employee of the company would be sent to remove the old meter and to replace it with a new one, as was customary whenever there was a change in the occupants of premises; and, when the attention of the employee who did remove the old meter was called to this odor, he stated that he guessed the new meter would remedy the matter. In fact, however, this did not furnish a remedy, and gas continued to flow into the cellar to such an extent that it was necessary to keep the door closed at the head of the stairway leading from the cellar into the dining room. There was evidence tending to show that the gas escaped from a main which ran under and parallel to the sidewalk, and that, thus escaping, it penetrated the front wall of the premises occupied by the plaintiff. In the cellar there was a gasoline stove, used for cooking oysters. On the evening of December 8, 1891, Mrs. Staengler, an employee of the appellee, went into the cellar for the purpose of frying some oysters. She closed the door behind her at the head of the cellar stairway. She took with her a lighted coal-oil lamp, and placed it on a bracket near the top of the cellar, and then proceeded to ignite the gasoline in the stove. The cellar had been opened but once in the preceding twenty-four hours, and then only for a brief period. She struck several matches, but there being, apparently, some water in the cup of the stove, the gasoline did not vaporize and burn. Mrs. Bryant, an acquaintance of Mrs. Staengler, then entered the cellar, but left the door leading to the dining room open. In the dining room, and just opposite the door leading into the cellar, two gas jets were burning. According to the testimony of Mrs. Staengler, she threw a basin of water, containing a few spoonfuls of gasoline, on the coal pile, and in about two minutes after again lighting the gasoline stove, which immediately went out, she happened to look in the direction of the steps leading up to the dining room, and there she saw a sheet of bluish flame, which was instantly followed by an explosion. This explosion occurred in about ten minutes after Mrs. Staengler had entered the cellar with the lighted coal-oil lamp. This lamp continued to burn during the whole time Mrs. Staengler was in the cellar. The force of the explosion was so great that it threw Mrs. Bryant out of the front cellar door, and did considerable damage to the building. The coal-oil lamp suspended in the cellar was uninjured, but the globes on the gas jets in the dining room were shattered. According to the testimony of Mrs. Bryant, who was called as a witness for the defendant, Mrs. Staengler emptied the gasoline out of the stove into a basin, and then replenished the stove, and threw the basinful of gasoline on the coal pile. She further stated that after this Mrs. Staengler lit several matches to start the fire in the stove, and that shortly after the explosion occurred. It was further shown that after the explosion had taken place several persons entered the cellar, and found a blaze proceeding apparently from burning oil in the coal pile.

By rejecting the defendant's first prayer the court refused to rule that, in law, the act of entering the cellar with the lighted coal-oil lamp, under the circumstances stated, was such a glaring act of contributory negligence, contributing to the injury complained of, as to preclude a recovery by the plaintiff. Had it been a concessum in the case, or had it even been clear, from the evidence, that the lighted coal-oil lamp carried into the cellar caused the explosion, there would have been some foundation for imputing contributory negligence to the plaintiff's employee in carrying it there. Not only does it not appear that the carrying of the lamp into the cellar actually caused the explosion, but the defendant, on the contrary, strenuously insists that there was no explosion of gas at all, but that the explosion proceeded from gasoline. When large quantities of gas have escaped into a building, and have commingled with the air therein, and thus formed a highly explosive compound, and this condition is known to a person entering such building, it is obviously, in law, a grossly negligent act to enter with a lighted candle or lamp, or to strike a match after entering, because, according to known and unvarying laws, an explosion, or a suddenly liberated mechanical energy, resulting from the instantaneous combustion of the inflammable compound when brought in contact with a flame, will inevitably follow. And when, under these conditions, an explosion does instantly result the moment a flame is brought in contact with such a compound of gas and atmosphere, the fact that the flame caused the combustion and the consequent and simultaneous explosion is beyond reasonable dispute or question. The deliberate or the careless application of a flame to such an explosive compound is clearly an act of negligence so unequivocally contributing to the production of the injury that no recovery can be had by the person guilty of, or chargeable with, that act of concurrent negligence. And this is precisely what was decided in Lunigan v. New York Gaslight Co. 71 N. Y. 29; Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1. In these cases the explosion instantly followed upon a light being brought in contact with the gas, and there could be no possible dispute that the bringing of the light in contact with the gas caused the explosion. But where there is not such a connection between the act of entering the house with a lighted lamp and the explosion of the gas as to establish with certainty, and to the exclusion of any other reasonable hypothesis, the relation of cause and effect, the question as to what did cause the explosion is for the jury to solve under proper instructions from the court. When, therefore, as here, more than ten minutes intervened between the time the lamp was taken into the cellar and the time that the subsequent explosion occurred, and when, as here, the lamp itself was uninjured, it would be impossible for the court to assume that the lighted lamp caused the explosion, and to rule, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff's employee was guilty of contributory negligence in taking the lamp into the cellar. And this is true, also, with respect to the lighting of the matches to ignite the gasoline in the stove. Assuming, as must be done in discussing this prayer, that all the evidenced adduced by the plaintiff was true, then at least two minutes intervened between the period of time when the last match was struck, and the stove was lighted and extinguished for the last time, and the period when the explosion took place; and there was obviously, therefore, no evidence to show that the explosion proceeded from these matches or from the stove. If, then, the evidence failed to show affirmatively, and without dispute, that the explosion resulted from the lighted lamp or from the burning matches being brought in contact with the gas, it would have been improper for the court to say, as a legal conclusion, that the taking of the lighted lamp into the cellar, or the striking of the matches there, was an act of contributory negligence, directly contributing to the production of the injury complained of, because, unless the explosion did result from the one or the other causing a combustion, then neither the one nor the other contributed to the explosion. If there is no evidence to show that a particular act of imputed negligence did actually concur in producing an injury, then there is no evidence that the doing of that act was in itself contributory negligence, and it would be clearly erroneous to ascribe to it that character or quality. To justify a court in pronouncing a given act such an act of contributory negligence as to defeat a recovery, it must be a distinct, prominent, and decisive fact, about which ordinary minds would not differ, because, where the nature and attributes of the act relied on to show negligence contributing to the injury can only be correctly determined by considering all the attending and surrounding circumstances of the transaction, it falls within the province of the jury to pass upon and characterize it, and it is not for the court to determine its quality, as matter of law. Cooke v. Baltimore Traction Co. 80 Md. 558. Under the conditions we have stated, and in view of the failure of the evidence to show that the lamp or the matches, to the exclusion of every other reasonable probable cause, occasioned the ignition or combustion that produced the explosion, the court was right in declining to rule, as requested in the defendant's first prayer, that the plaintiff had been guilty of such pronounced negligence, directly contributing to the injury, as to preclude a recovery.

The defendant's second prayer was also properly rejected. It asked the court to instruct the jury that the plaintiff had offered no legally sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. Assuming the truth of the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, it was clearly negligence on the part of the defendant to allow gas to escape from its pipes after receiving notice that a leak existed. "While no absolute standard of duty in dealing with such agencies can be prescribed, it is safe to say in general terms that every reasonable precaution suggested by experience and the known dangers of the subject ought to be taken. This would require in the case of a gas company not only that its pipes and fittings should be of such materials and workmanship, and laid in the ground with such skill and care, as to provide against the escape of gas therefrom when new, but that such system of inspection should be maintained as would insure reasonable promptness in the detection of all leaks that might occur from the deterioration of the material of the pipes, or from any other cause within the circumspection of men of ordinary skill in the business." Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. 152 Pa. 355, 18 L. R. A. 759. A neglect or a failure to use such precautions would be clearly negligent. It cannot be doubted, if the evidence adduced by the plaintiff be credited, that the least attention or diligence on the part of the company's employees would have apprised them of the escape of gas into the street and through the walls of the plaintiff's house. The defendant's employee had been notified of the escape of gas. He had promised to remedy it when the new meter should be placed in position, but he failed to search for or to discover whence the leaking gas proceeded. He seems to have assumed that the change in the meter would obviate the trouble, but he made no search, nor did the other employee who put the new meter in position endeavor to locate the leak. It was clearly negligence on the part of these employees not to make some effort to discover the location of the defect which caused the leak. They were aware of the leak, and that was notice to the company. It then became obligatory on the company to use reasonable efforts, in a reasonable time, to ascertain where the leak was, and to stop it. Mose v. Hastings & St. L. Gas Co. 4 Fost. & F. 324. If, instead of doing this, the company's employees chose to assume that a change of the meter would remedy the complaint, though confessedly they did not know whether it would or not, they obviously did not discharge the duty incumbent upon them, and their negligence in this particular was the negligence of the company. When a gas company is made aware, as in this case, that large quantities of gas are escaping into a building, it becomes its plain duty to use reasonable diligence to discover and to stop the leak. It cannot discharge that duty by assuming, without knowing, that the leak proceeds from one source, when in fact it proceeds from a totally different source, which could have been discovered by proper inspection. This rule requires nothing unreasonable. It does not require that the company shall keep up a constant inspection all along its lines, without reference to the existence or nonexistence of a probable cause for the occurrence of leaks or escapes of gas; but it does require that, when notice of the existence of a leak has been given to a company, the company shall use reasonable care and appropriate means to discover the cause of the leak, and to remedy it. This doctrine is not in conflict with the principle laid down in Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 219, and other cases of a kindred character. "There the escape of gas complained of was the result of an overwhelming calamity that laid a great part of the city of Boston in ashes, and fractured and severed the company's pipes in so many places that all the force it could employ could not guard against all possible consequences of the escape of gas immediately, without shutting off the supply from the whole city, and this it was excused from doing on the ground that more mischief would result therefrom than was likely to result from the neglect so to do." Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. supra. The escape of gas from the defendant's main was, under the circumstances stated, after it had received notice that gas was escaping into the plaintiff's house, and after it had failed or neglected to use reasonable care or proper inspection to discover the location of the leak and to stop it, some evidence of negligence; and the court would not have been justified in withdrawing the question of negligence from the consideration of the jury. We are not called on to go further, or to lay down a broader rule than this, in the pending case, and we are not to be understood as doing so, though it has been held by courts of high authority that the escape of gas from the mains underneath the surface of a public street, unless explained, is prima facie evidence of some neglect on the part of a gas company. The case of Smith v. Boston Gaslight Co. 129 Mass. 318, is an illustration of this doctrine.

The defendant's third and fifth rejected prayers were fully covered by the court's instructions, and the appellant has therefore no reason to complain of the refusal of the court to grant them. We find no errors in the instructions given by the court. There were two opposite theories presented by the evidence. The plaintiff founded his case upon the theory that the gas which escaped into the cellar, and was confined there while the doors leading into the cellar were closed, rose when Mrs. Bryant entered the cellar and omitted to close the door behind her, and in a few moments came in contact with the lights at the head of the cellar steps, and then exploded. It was, according to the testimony of Mrs. Staengler, at the head or top of these steps that she saw the bluish flame spread out at the moment of the explosion. A slat partition across the cellar was partially blown down, towards the street and away from the steps, as though the force had been applied from the side next to the cellar steps—the side nearest the lighted gas jets at the head of the stairway. On the other hand, assuming, first, that the explosion was a gas explosion, it was insisted that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence: and, secondly, denying that it was a gas explosion, it was contended that the explosion was caused by gasoline. The first contention we have already considered. It is not necessary to state the evidence relied on by the appellant to support the second alternative. Suffice it to say that both theories were fairly submitted to the jury by the instructions given by the learned and accomplished trial judge, and that upon both theories the law was accurately and clearly announced. It became then solely the province of the jury to determine the facts, and if they found, as they were required to find before returning a verdict for the plaintiff, that the gas escaped by reason of the negligence of the defendant, that the explosion was a gas explosion, and that the act of Mrs. Staengler in going into the cellar with a lighted lamp and striking matches there was, under all the circumstances, such conduct as a person of ordinary prudence and care would have pursued, they were warranted in finding a verdict for the plaintiff. If, on the contrary, they found that the explosion was a gasoline explosion, or that, being a gas explosion, Mrs. Staengler had been guilty of negligence in entering the cellar with a lighted lamp, or in striking matches there, and that either of these acts caused the explosion, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The second instruction correctly defined where the burden of proof rested. As we find no error in the rulings of the trial court, its judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs above and below.

BOLTON MINES COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Francis STOKES et al.

(82 Md. 50.)

Bringing a suit in replevin for goods sold, and discontinuing it before judgment without obtaining benefit therefrom because the value of the goods was paid by the plaintiff to satisfy his replevin bond, do not estop him from claiming payment of the purchase price out of the assets of the estate of the purchaser.

(December 6, 1895.)

A PPEAL from an order of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City denying the claim of appellant against the insolvent estate of the Waring Manufacturing Company. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Fielder O. Slingluff and William S. Bryan, Jr., for appellant:

It was error to hold that the appellant was estopped, by its attempt in the replevin case to rescind the contract of sale, from now claiming under that contract.

McQueen's Appeal, 104 Pa. 601, 49 Am. Rep. 592.

A party is not estopped from assuming a position forced upon him by the opposite party.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 22, note; Potter v. Brown, 50 Mich. 436; Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 719; Pendleton v. Dalton, 92 N. C. 185.

It is familiar practice for attaching creditors who have unsuccessfully assailed a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors as fraudulent to afterwards come in and take their dividend under the deed.

Burrill, Assignm. p. 607; Brashear v. West, 82 U. S. 7 Pet. 615, 8 L. ed. 804; Vernon v. Morton, 8 Dana, 254; 2 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 873, note; Re Van Norman, 41 Minn. 494.

Messrs. Gans & Haman and Vernon Cook, for appellees:

The Bolton Mines Company having declared its intention to rescind this contract, it is now bound by its election, and cannot be allowed to change front and assume the wholly inconsistent position that the contract is binding and the note still enforceable.

Edes v. Garey, 46 Md. 41; Beall v. Pearre, 12 Md. 366; Walsh v. Chesapeake & O. Canal

Co. 59 Md. 427; Kiddall v. Trimble, 1 Md. Ch. 143; Wile v. Brownstein, 35 Hun, 68; Farwell v. Myers, 59 Mich. 180; Goss v. Mather, 2 Lans. 283; Vorhees v. Earl, 2 Hill, 268, 38 Am. Dec. 588; Strong v. Strong, 102 N. Y. 69.

A party cannot, either in the course of litigation or in dealings in pais, occupy inconsistent positions. And where a man has an election between inconsistent courses of action, he will be confined to that which he first adopts.

Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 673; Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 309; Steinbach v. Relief F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 498, 33 Am. Rep. 655; Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co. 114 Mass. 175; Fisher v. Boyce, 81 Md. 46.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In December, 1889, the Bolton Mines Company contracted to sell to the Waring Manufacturing Company a quantity of fertilizers. The sale was made, the goods were delivered, and the purchaser gave its promissory note to the vendor on March 15, 1890, for the price agreed on, payable in four months after its date. On the 28d day of May, 1890, before the maturity of this note, the Waring Manufacturing Company executed to Hanson H. Haines and Francis Stokes, trustees, a deed of trust for the benefit of its creditors, and the trustees filed their bond in Cecil county on May 31, and in Baltimore city on June 11, 1890. On June 9 of the same year the Bolton Mines Company sued out a writ of replevin, and under it the sheriff seized and took from the possession of the trustees, and turned over to the Bolton Company, the same fertilizers that had been sold by it to the Waring Company under the contract of December, 1889; and five days afterwards the Bolton Company tendered the trustees the promissory note given for the purchase price, but the trustees declined to receive it. After the Bolton Mines Company got possession of the fertilizers under the writ of replevin, it discontinued or dismissed the replevin suit without trial, and thereafter, on April 10, 1891, the trustees instituted suit in the superior court of Baltimore city against the surety of the Bolton Mines Company on the replevin bond which had been given by it, and that suit resulted in a judgment in favor of the trustees for the penalty of the replevin bond, to be released on the payment of the sum of $4,464.72, the value of the replevied fertilizers at the date of their seizure under the writ of replevin, together with interest to the date of the verdict. Part of this judgment has been paid, and the residue is to await the result of this proceeding, but may be treated as actually paid. The Bolton Mines Company then filed in the Waring Company's trust estate proceeding the note of the Waring Company held by the Bolton Company; and when the auditor made his report, distributing the cash assets in the hands of the trustees among the creditors of the Waring Company, he allowed to the Bolton Mines Company its ratable share or percentage upon the note of March 15. To this allowance Haines and Stokes, who are creditors, as well as trustees, filed objections. The ground upon which the trustees, in their character as creditors, object to this allowance is that the Bolton Mines Company, having by replevying the fertilizers for the payment of which the note was given, disaffirmed the sale, and having treated the contract of purchase as rescinded, cannot after a judgment has been obtained against it on the replevin bond for the value of the identical articles replevied, reaffirm the sale, and claim to participate in a distribution of the proceeds of the debtor's assets. The court below so decided and hence this appeal.

NOTE.—As to election of remedies, see also Miller v. Hyde (Mass.) 25 L. R. A. 42, and cases cited in footnote thereto.

31 L. R. A.

Does the fact, then, that the Bolton Mines Company sued out a writ of replevin, and seized thereunder the same fertilizers which it had previously sold to the Waring Company, preclude the vendor, the Bolton Company, from asserting a claim to a proportion of the creditor's assets, if the vendor abandoned the replevin suit without a trial, and then paid to the vendee's trustees the full value of the replevied articles? This is the single question which the pending appeal presents.

The situation is a peculiar one. The Bolton Mines Company and the trustees are precisely in the position both would have occupied had not the replevin been sued out; for the Bolton Mines Company still has the note of the vendee, the trustees have in money the value of the fertilizers, and the note is unpaid. This being so, the Bolton Company asks a court of equity to allow to it from the assets of the debtor—in which assets are included the values of the creditor's fertilizers—a percentage equal to that distributed to the debtor's other general creditors; but the court, by its order, refuses this request, and excludes the Bolton Company from participating in the distribution of even the very funds which have been realized from the identical property that the Bolton Company sold and delivered to its insolvent debtor, and for which the vendor has received no payment whatever. Can that order be maintained? It is not pretended that it can be supported upon any other theory or ground than this: that the creditor, having, by the replevin of his suit, elected to treat the original contract of sale as rescinded, cannot afterwards assert the validity of that same contract, and claim to be paid for the goods furnished under it; that, having two alternative remedies, and having selected one of them, and having failed to prosecute it to a final judgment, it cannot resort to the other. Thus abstractly put, the proposition appears far more reasonable and just than when it is practically applied. The actual result of its application to the facts of this case is that the Bolton Company loses the full value of the fertilizers which it sold to the insolvent vendee, and is besides entirely cut out from sharing in the vendee's assets. The vendor, the Bolton Company, therefore gets nothing, and the other creditors get the value of the Bolton Company's fertilizers. It must be an exceedingly rigid and stringent rule of law that will constrain a court of equity to work out such a singular and inequitable result. Is there such a rule as that? It cannot be denied that "the law is adverse to multiplying suits; and, if a party has a choice between two actions upon the same demand, and he selects one, which is decided by a competent tribunal either for or against him, as a general rule he will not be permitted to resort to the other." Beall v. Pearre, 12 Md. 566; Walsh v. Ches- apeake & O. Canal Co. 59 Md. 427. And so in Edey v. Garey, 46 Md. 24, where Carson was both executor and trustee under a will, and as executor, transferred certain funds to himself as trustee, and to secure these funds executed a deed to himself, as trustee, conveying certain lots in Baltimore city, but failed to place the conveyance on record. After his death a creditor's bill was filed, and these lots were sold. The parties for whose benefit the unrecorded deed was executed claimed the proceeds of the sales of the lots conveyed thereby, and these proceeds were allowed to them. They afterwards filed a bill in equity against the sureties on Carson's bond as executor, but this court held that common sense and common justice require that, having claimed and having received the entire proceeds of the sale of the property conveyed by the unrecorded deed upon the express ground that it was executed by Carson to secure the complainants on account of the money belonging to them, and which he held as trustee under the will, they should not be permitted to deny those facts in a suit brought against the sureties on the administration bond." And so in the still more recent case of Fisher v. Boyce, 81 Md. 46, it appeared that the will of James Boyce was duly admitted to probate by the orphans' court of Baltimore county; that thereupon the executors filed a bill in equity against all the parties interested in the estate of the decedent, asking the court to construe the will, and to assume jurisdiction over the administration and settlement of the entire estate. This bill was answered by all parties in interest, including those who subsequently sought to caveat the will. In those answers the defendants (two of whom were the same persons who afterwards assailed the will by caveat) unequivocally admitted the due execution, publication, and probate of the will. Later on, the circuit court, by its decretal order, assumed jurisdiction of the whole estate and of its administration. Afterwards one of the defendants filed a petition in the equity case, claiming that she was entitled under the will, to certain income, and praying an allowance under the will for her maintenance pending the settlement of the estate. This petition was answered, and both petition and answer were heard upon proof adduced, and finally the petition was dismissed by the court. Two years later two of the defendants in the equity proceeding filed in the orphans' court a caveat to a part of the will, and upon appeal this court held they were estopped to question its validity. They had taken a beneficial interest under the will, whose validity they formally and solemnly asserted, and they were thereafter prohibited from setting up any adverse right, which, if successfully asserted, would have defeated the full operation of the instrument. And so in Keedy v. Long, 71 Md. 335, 5 L. R. A. 759, it was held that, where a person had two alternative remedies open to him, and proceeded upon one to a final judgment, he would be precluded from resorting to the other one afterwards. And to the same effect is Olmstead v. Bach, 72 Md. 132, 22 L. R. A. 74. It will be observed, and must be borne in mind, that in all the above and similar cases, it was not the mere instition of a suit, which was abandoned before a final judgment had been reached, that operated to estop the prosecution of a subsequent suit between the same parties, and founded on the same cause of action, but that it was the selection by the plaintiff of one of two remedies that were open to him, and a decision thereon by a competent tribunal, that precluded a resort to the other inconsistent remedy. The obvious principle which underlies this class of cases must therefore be that, when a party has deliberately selected his form of action, and pursued it to a final judgment,—and whether that judgment be for or against him is wholly immaterial,—he shall not be at liberty to again vex the same defendant with another suit in a different form of action, for the identical demand involved in, and passed upon by, the antecedent litigation. Where the remedies are alternative, and not cumulative, his choice of the one, and his pursuit of it to a final judgment, will exclude the other or opposite remedy, and, having thus repudiated the latter, he cannot afterwards ignore the judgment actually rendered, change his position, and adopt the remedy he had repudiated, and repudiate the one he had adopted. Upon the plainest principles of public policy, he "would be absolutely estopped to do this, because a man who obtains or defeats a judgment by pleading or representing an act in one aspect will be precluded from giving it a different and inconsistent character in a subsequent suit upon the same subject." McQueen's Appeal, 104 Pa. 595, 49 Am. Rep. 592. It is an inflexible and invariable rule that, when the cause of action is substantially the same, and is or might be sustained by the same evidence, no change in the form of the suit or of the pleadings shall avail to withdraw a matter, which has once been judicially determined, from the estoppel of the adjudication. Consequently, a judgment in one suit will be conclusive in every other where the cause of action is substantially identical, notwithstanding a change in the form in which the action is brought. But, for this defense to be availing, there must have been a judgment for a discontinuance of the suit, before judgment will create such estoppel. It has been established, both in this country and in England, that, whenever an act is done, or a statement is made, by a party, which cannot be contravened or controverted without fraud on his part, and injury to others, whose conduct has been influenced by the act or admission, the character of an estoppel will attach to what would otherwise be mere matter of evidence, and it will become binding, even in opposition to proof of a contrary nature. But it is perfectly obvious that the case at bar does not belong to this class of estoppels, for the change in the character of the claim by the appellant has resulted in no fraud or injury. The case of Farnell v. Myers, 59 Mich. 179, and the case of Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co. 114 Mass. 175, both cited by the appellee, sustain our conclusions. In the Michigan case the claimants sold to the defendant goods to the value of $10,000. The defendant, a few days afterwards, executed a deed of trust for the benefit of his creditors, and the vendors sued out a writ of replevin for the goods so sold to the insolvent. Under the writ a portion of these goods, valued at about $4,000, was recovered, but the rest could not be found. The vendors thus got possession of, and retained, the part of the goods which they had replevied. They then filed their account against the insolvent estate for $10,000, less $4,000, the value of the goods replevied. The court held that, having elected by the replevin suit, which went to trial and to final judgment, to rescind the contract, they were bound by that election and could not, in the distribution of the insolvent's estate, treat the contract as in force, after having proceeded in the replevin suit upon the assumption that it had been rescinded. The court held that "by rescinding the sale, and prosecuting to judgment an action of replevin for the goods sold, on the theory that the fraud of the assignor had vitiated the contract, and that they owned said goods, the plaintiffs had elected their remedy, and cannot be allowed to come into court a year afterwards, because of their failure to secure adequate relief in the replevin suit, and base a claim upon the inconsistent idea that the goods were sold to the assignor." It may not be amiss to observe that in Powers v. Benedict, 88 N. Y. 605, a case quite similar to the one at bar, a conclusion precisely the reverse of that announced in the Michigan case was reached, and the doctrine was recognized that a partial recovery of goods, under a replevin sued out under circumstances such as we have here, did not bar an action for the remainder, or preclude the vendor from filing a claim in the insolvent vendee's estate for the value of the balance of the goods which he failed to recover under the writ of replevin. In the Massachusetts case, where a person filed a bill in equity to reform a policy of insurance by striking out a clause of warranty, and afterwards brought an action at law upon the policy as written, alleging compliance with the warranty, and after a trial on that issue had judgment rendered against him, it was held that he had elected his remedy, and had waived his right to prosecute his bill for the reformation of his policy. And to the same effect are Sanger v. Wood, 3 Johns. Ch. 416, and Steinbach v. Relief F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 498, 33 Am. Rep. 655.

The record now before us discloses the fact that the replevin suit was not pressed to trial, and that a judgment was not entered therein. The suit was voluntarily discontinued. To hold that the vendor, by merely suing out the writ, though it (the vendor) subsequently abandoned the proceeding, and paid to the vendee's trustees the value of the goods replevied, forfeited all right to claim payment for these very same goods, would be to stretch the doctrine of election of remedies, and to widen its consequences far beyond any limits heretofore recognized in Maryland. It would, in fact, prescribe as a penalty for a mere mistake in bringing a suit, not the usual one of costs, but the far graver one of a forfeiture of a just and meritorious claim; and its adoption would place a court of equity in the same anomalous situation of being forced to say to a suitor: "You made a mistake in suing out this writ of replevin, but you recognized your error, and promptly discontinued the action. Your mistake has hurt no one, because the trustees have recovered from you the full value of the goods you took, and the creditors have therefore not been prejudiced. Confessedly, you delivered the insolvent the goods, and confessedly you have not been paid for them. Their value forms part of the insolvent's estate, but, because you inadvertently supposed you had a right to reclaim the goods (though when you discovered you had not such right you abandoned your suit), you shall not receive a dollar of your debtor's estate. You shall not get even a part of the money realized from the very property which you sold and delivered to the insolvent." With equal propriety could a legatee, who, having caveated a will, subsequently dismissed the proceeding without a trial, be deprived of his legacy; but it has been distinctly held that he is not estopped to recover his legacy. State v. Adams, 71 Mo. 620.

Estoppels must be reciprocal, and bind both parties. They operate only on parties and privies in blood or estate, and can be used neither by nor against strangers. "He that shall not be concluded by the record or other matter of estoppel, shall not conclude another by it." Alexander v. Walter, 8 Gill, 239, 50 Am. Dec. 688. The trustees of the vendee were not bound by the replevin suit, nor by the vendor's election of that remedy. They brought suit upon the replevin bond, and recovered a judgment for the full value of the replevied property, and this they did upon the claim that the title to the fertilizers had vested in the Waring Manufacturing Company, under the contract of sale with the Bolton Company. In other words, the trustees successfully insisted on the contract of sale being a subsisting, unrescinded contract, notwithstanding the attempted repudiation of it by the Bolton Company. Having recovered a judgment, and having collected the money due under that judgment, upon the hypothesis that the contract was not rescinded, but was in fact in full force, what standing have they, in their capacity as creditors, to object to the payment of the promissory note held by the vendor of those goods for the price at which the goods were sold? Having recovered the value of the goods on the theory that the contract was not rescinded, they object to the payment of the note on the opposite ground, that the contract had been rescinded. This is certainly, as the Scotch say, "to approbate and reprobate." Re Chesham, L. R. 31 Ch. Div. 466.

If the doctrine sanctioned in Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 309, to the effect that it is immaterial whether the plaintiff obtains redress in the first action or not, were adopted, and it were held that the mere fact of bringing a suit in one form of action, though abandoned, without trial or without judgment, forever precluded a resort to any other form of action respecting the same subject-matter, it would, when logically followed out, prevent an amendment from one form of action to another, although the right to make such amendments is expressly given by § 34, art. 75, of the Code. It would prevent such amendments, because, if the mere naked selection of one remedy is such an exclusion of another inconsistent one as to estop the party who had selected the first from ever afterwards resorting to the second, the bare bringing of a suit in one form of action would necessarily preclude a resort, even by way of amendment, to the opposite, or inconsistent, form of action. If the doctrine of Thompson v. Howard were generalized, it would amount to this: That a litigant elects his remedy in every case, in the first instance, at his peril. If he finds that he has made a mistake, whether in consequence of erroneous views of law or fact, he has nevertheless estopped himself from retracing his steps. He cannot dismiss his suit, and institute a new proceeding, of a different nature, against the same party. But no one supposes that this is the law. Anchor Mill Co. v. Walsh, 20 Mo. App. 107.

We hold, then, that the mere fact that the Bolton Mines Company sued out a writ of replevin to recover possession of these goods, and then discontinued the proceeding without trial and before judgment, and without realizing anything by its suit (for it paid the value of the goods to the trustees of the vendee), does not estop it to claim, out of the vendee's assets, payment of the note given by the purchaser for the price of the fertilizers sold. The appellant is consequently entitled to participate with the other creditors of the Waring Manufacturing Company in the funds which the trustees hold for distribution. We therefore reverse the order appealed from.

Order reversed, with costs above and below, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

W. L. THORNHILL, Appt.,

v.
Martin O'REAR.

(..... Ala.)

1. An agreement by one person to take all the chances on a proposed scheme to raffie off property, thereby eliminating all the elements of chance and fixing a definite price for the property, is not unlawful.

2. The fact that forfeits were deposited on Sunday to bind the parties to an agreement which was invalid because made on that day does not give one of them any right to recover his deposit after the holder has executed the transaction on a subsequent day by delivering the forfeit to the other party before he was notified not to do so.

(January 16, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Walker County in favor

NOTE.—As to lottery schemes, see also People v. Elliott (Mich.) 3 L. R. A. 403, and note; Yellowstone Kit v. State (Ala.) 7 L. R. A. 759, and note; Bal- 31 L. R. A.

lock v. State (Md.) 8 L. R. A. 671; State v. Bonell (La.) 10 L. R. A. 60, and note; Long v. State (Md.) 12 L. R. A. 89.

of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of a watch which defendant had obtained as a forfeit for plaintiff's refusing to carry out a contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. L. Sowell, for appellant:

The contract is void, made so by express statutory declaration.

Ala. Code 1886, §§ 1742, 1749.

It is absolutely and ab initio void, and therefore must be a nullity,—must be without legal effect, incapable of conferring right or imposing duty.

Flinn v. Barber, 64 Ala. 193.

The appellant is entitled to recover.

Dodson v. Harris, 10 Ala. 566; Wieman v. Mabey, 45 Mich. 484, 40 Am. Rep. 476.

The watches put in the hands of the stakeholder were a wager that the illegal trade would be consummated on Monday.

2 Bouvier, Law Dict. title Wager; Burrill, Law Dict.; Webster, Unabridged Dict.

If it was a wager the appellant was clearly entitled to recover his property.

Ala. Code 1886, § 1742; Trammell v. Gordon, 11 Ala. 656; Lewis v. Bruton, 74 Ala. 317, 49 Am. Rep. 816.

Messrs. Coleman & Bankhead, for appellee:

Where the forfeiture is paid over to the winner by the stakeholder with the consent of the loser the contract becomes executed.

Fisher v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 558; McKee v. Manice, 11 Cush. 357.

The appellant and appellee being parties to the transaction after the execution of the contract by the consent of appellant they were in pari delicto.

Wood v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 227; Fisher v. Hildreth, and McKee v. Manice, supra.

If a contract based on a consideration contrary to law has been fully and voluntarily executed, and the parties are in pari delicto, the courts will not interfere to disturb the acquired rights of either at the instance of the other.

Hill v. Freeman, 73 Ala. 200, 49 Am. Rep. 48; Lea v. Cassen, 61 Ala. 315; Morris v. Hall, 41 Ala. 510; 2 Kent, Com. p. 467; 1 Brickett's Dig. 377, § 32; Wood v. Duncan, supra; Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. 91 Ala. 519; Parrior v. New England Mortg. Secur. Co. 88 Ala. 279; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 882.

Haralson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

All the authorities hold, if money or property be placed in the hands of a stakeholder, to abide the result of a bet, or as a forfeit to bind parties to an illegal contract while it remains in his hands, it may be arrested by the bailor before or after the happening of the event upon which the money is to be paid or the forfeiture depends. While in his hands, it is in transitu. He is not a party to the illegal contract, and upon the revocation of his authority, the money or property remains in his hands as a naked trustee for the parties who placed it there. Wood v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 227; Shackelford v. Ward, 3 Ala. 87, 36 Am. Rep. 485; Lewis v. Bruton, 74 Ala. 317, 49 Am. Rep. 816; Ball v. Gilbert, 12 Met. 403; Fisher v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 558; Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 25. But, as was announced 81 L. R. A.

in McKee v. Manice, 11 Cush. 358, "the law seems to have been held, by the authorities, that if after the event is determined the loser pays the money to the winner, or permits, by his assent or silence, the stakeholder, into whose hands the same has been placed, to pay it over to the winner, the loser cannot recover back the same. In such case, the principle is applied that the law will refuse its aid to restore the money to the loser, both parties being in pari delicto." In Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 25, it was said by Kent, Ch. J.: "If, after the determination of the event against the plaintiff, the money had actually been paid over to the winner with the plaintiff's consent, or perhaps without notice to the defendant to the contrary, the plaintiff could not have sustained an action against the winner to recover back the deposit;" citing Houson v. Hancock, 8 T. R. 575, in which Lord Kenyon said that there is no case to be found where an action has been maintained to recover the money back again. All the decisions of this court are in line with these authorities, holding, as to suits upon executory contracts founded upon immoral or illegal considerations, they may always be defended on the ground of their invalidity; but that when executed, unless controlled by statute to the contrary, the law will not interfere, at the instance of either party, to undo that which it was originally unlawful to do, for the reason that, being equally at fault, the law will help neither. Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. 91 Ala. 522, and authorities there collected.

Section 1742 of our Code provides that all contracts founded in whole or in part on a gambling consideration are void; and any person who has paid any money or delivered anything of value, lost upon any game or wager, may recover such money, thing, or its value, by action commenced within six months from the time of such payment or delivery. If the case before us falls within the influence of that statute, it would be an exception to the rule as to executed contracts to which we have just referred. Samuels v. Ainsworth, 13 Ala. 866. The facts are, that on Sunday morning, being in the presence of defendant and others, when the subject of raffling came up, the plaintiff stated, that "he believed he would raffle off his dwelling house and lot by chances," stating the proposed scheme, the chances to be 500, at a specified valuation. The defendant said he would take all the chances, to which plaintiff assented, and said he would make out a deed to the house and lot the next day, and deliver it to defendant, when he could pay him the money for it. Both parties agreed at the same time, to put up their watches in the hands of a stakeholder, as a forfeit, to stand by the proposition as made and accepted, which was done. This statement of facts shows that all the elements of chance were eliminated from the contract, which resulted in being nothing more than an offer by the one party to sell the house and lot at a certain price, to be arrived at by calculation, and the acceptance of the offer by the other. There was nothing unlawful in this offer, as made and accepted, if it had been done on any other day than Sunday, but having been made on that day, it was void, and incapable of enforcement. Code, § 1749.

But this suit arises outside the contract of the sale and purchase of the house and lot, namely, out of the transaction of putting up the watches to secure the fulfillment of this contract. It is said this was a bet or wager, which brings the case under the influence of said § 1742 of the Code. As to this, let us see. A wager is nothing more than a bet, "by which two parties agree that a certain sum of money, or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event." 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. Wager. The transaction of putting up the watches was not a wager. It was only a pledge of the good faith of the parties to abide the terms of the agreement, in the shape of liquidated damages for a failure of either to perform his agreement. Keeble v. Keeble, 85 Ala. 552. If the transaction had occurred on any day but Sunday, the idea of gambling, perhaps, would not have occurred to any one. This suit, it will be borne in mind, is not on the contract. It is in detinue by the plaintiff, who receded from the bargain, against the defendant, who stood by it, and to whom plaintiff's watch, put up as a forfeit, had been delivered. The evidence of plaintiff tended to show that on Sunday, the day of the transaction, shortly after it occurred, he notified the stakeholder that he would not stand by the proposition, and not to deliver the watch to the defendant; that he demanded the watch from the stakeholder, before he delivered it to defendant, and did not authorize him to deliver it to him; and that on Monday or Tuesday following, plaintiff told defendant he would not abide the proposition made on Sunday before, and wanted his watch, which defendant refused to deliver to him. On the part of defendant it was shown that plaintiff did not notify him of his intention not to abide the transaction of Sunday, until after the watch had been delivered to him by the stakeholder, and further, that the next day, Monday, plaintiff told the stakeholder it was defendant's watch, and to turn it over to him, which he accordingly did, and that after he had turned it over to defendant, plaintiff told the stakeholder not to give it to defendant, when he notified him that he had already turned it over to him. The attempt of plaintiff here is to recover this property because the agreement of forfeiture was entered into on Sunday. It could not, as we have shown, have reference to any illegality growing out of the proposed raffles which was afterwards abandoned. The condition on which the forfeit was to be delivered to defendant had taken place. No delivery was made on Sunday, but on Monday or Tuesday following, and thereby, as between the parties to the transaction, it became executed. Whatever element of illegality, if any, there may have been in putting up the forfeiture, in the beginning, on Sunday, the plaintiff was as much to blame for as defendant, and if the watch was delivered according to the terms of the agreement of forfeiture, that agreement became executed, and plaintiff, in a suit in detinue for the property itself, is in no condition to ask the law to reclaim it from the predicament in which he contributed to place it. It is only in suits on contracts, void under the statute for having been made on Sunday, that the defense of invalidity for having been executed on that day can be made, if the contract remains unexecuted. If one buy a horse on Sunday, and it is delivered and paid for, it could hardly be contended that either party could sue the other, the one for the horse, or the other for the money he paid for it, because the transaction occurred on Sunday. Black v. Oliver, 1 Ala. 450, 35 Am. Dec. 381; Windham v. Childress, 7 Ala. 357; Walker v. Gregory, 36 Ala. 184; Morris v. Hall, 41 Ala. 536; Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. 91 Ala. 522. If this suit had been brought in proper form against the stakeholder, and the proof showed that he was notified not to deliver the watch before he did so, a case different from the one we now have would be presented.

It follows from what we have said that under the evidence in this case the plaintiff was not entitled to the general charge as requested. Nor was there any error of which plaintiff can complain, in giving those charges requested for defendant.

Affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Alexander McBEAN, Appt.,
v.
City of FRESNO et al., Respts.
(.....Cal.....)

1. A city may contract for the disposal of sewage from the outfall of sewers although this is outside the corporate limits.
2. The liability incurred by a city contract to pay an annual sum during a period of years for the disposal of sewage is, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that any liability "exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year" shall be void, to be deemed the amount annually payable, and not the aggregate for the whole time of the contract.

3. A contract by a municipal board extending for more than one year or beyond the term of office of the board which makes it, if it is fair, just, and reasonable, prompted by

NOTE.—On the question, What constitutes indebtedness of a municipality within the meaning of provisions limiting the amount thereof? see note to Beard v. Hopkinsville (Ky.) 23 L. R. A. 402, and also the case of Saleno v. Neosho (Mo.) 27 L. R. A. 760.

As to the limitation of municipal indebtedness in 31 L. R. A.

general, see also Rainsburg v. Fyan (Pa.) 4 L. R. A. 336; Brooke v. Philadelphia (Pa.) 24 L. R. A. 781, and Linn v. Chambersburg (Pa.) 25 L. R. A. 217.

As to the validity of contracts made by officers for a period beyond their term of office, see note to Shelden v. Fox (Kan.) 16 L. R. A. 257.

the necessities of the situation or in its nature advantageous to the municipality, is not invalid as a surrender or suspension of the legislative power of the municipal authorities.

(March 25, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fresno County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the contract price for services rendered in disposing of sewage for defendant city. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. D. Edwards and W. C. Graves, for appellant:

Decisions in our supreme court in passing upon the provision of our Constitution have, as interpreted by Dillon, construed it to mean that each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and that no indebtedness or liability in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 134a.

When in such cases a municipality contracts for work and labor its debt or liability for payment does not arise until the work is done or the labor performed under the contract.

Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 13 L. R. A. 647; East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gaslight & C. Co. 98 Ill. 430, 38 Am. Rep. 97; Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y. 113; Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 465; Vincennes v. Citizen's Gaslight Co. 132 Ind. 114, 16 L. R. A. 485.

If there is no debt or liability to pay except as each year's work is performed under the contract, the city can and will easily make provision out of each year's income and revenue for the payment for that year's debt.

Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396.

The provisions which prohibit a municipal corporation from legislating future restrictions to its own legislative power are not applicable to a time contract entered into by such a corporation.

Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & C. Co. 66 Ind. 396; Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y. 110; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 378.

There is no limitation as to time of making contracts upon the city of Fresno in its charter or the Constitution of this state.

In the absence of such limitation the board are bound by no rule other than an honest and fair exercise of the discretion reposed in them.

Cook v. Racine, 49 Wis. 243; Riehl v. San José, 101 Cal. 442; San Francisco Gaslight Co. v. Dunn, 62 Cal. 585; Territory, Woods, v. Oklahoma, 2 Okla. 158.

Mr. L. W. Moultrie, for respondents:

The common council had no authority to provide for the creation of a debt to arise in the future, any more than to create a debt directly and in presenti.

Wallace v. San José, 29 Cal. 181.

The framers of the Constitution meant that no such indebtedness or liability should be incurred (except in the manner stated) exceeding in any year the income and revenue actually received by such city.

San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641; Shaw v. Stutler, 74 Cal. 258.
31 L. R. A.

A claim could not be allowed or paid out of the funds of a subsequent fiscal year.

Schwartz v. Wilson, 75 Cal. 502; Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 644; Sutro v. Pettit, 74 Cal. 332.

This whole contract obligation is a liability to the full extent of the whole period.

Niles Waterworks v. Niles, 59 Mich. 312; Smith v. Newburgh, 77 N. Y. 131; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Prince v. Quincy, 105 Ill. 138, 44 Am. Rep. 785.

By entering into a five-year contract the city trustees surrendered or bargained away their legislative or governmental powers and duties.

Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 540; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 97; People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 499; Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65.

The inability of a business corporation to avoid its obligation upon the plea of ultra vires when it has received and retained the consideration for its obligation has no application to a municipal corporation.

Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal. 151; Young v. Independent School Dist. No. 47, Bd. of Edu. 54 Minn. 385; Gutta Percha & R. Mfg. Co. v. Ogallala, 40 Neb. 775.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Fresno duly and regularly, so far as form and procedure are concerned, entered into a contract with plaintiff by which plaintiff agreed to take care of and dispose of the sewage of the city for the period of five years for the sum of $4,900 per annum, payable quarterly. Plaintiff was required to give, and did give, a bond in the sum of $10,000, to which extent he agreed to reimburse the corporation for any liability or loss it might incur or suffer by reason of a faulty performance of his contract. No natural means were available to Fresno for the disposition of its sewage. It had provided sewers, but had made no provision for the care of their contents. These were to be discharged beyond the city limits. But, before the sewers could be used, a sewer farm was necessary for the reception and treatment of the waste matter. The city had secured no such farm. Under these circumstances, the contract with McBean was entered into. He made the necessary expenditures, and year by year performed his contract according to its letter and spirit. Each year, in turn, the city levied, collected, and apportioned to the sewer fund a tax to cover the yearly amount due McBean, and duly audited and paid his demands on the fund. This continued for three years. During the fiscal year ending May 31, 1894, plaintiff performed his contract, but the city refused payment upon the ground that the contract was void. McBean then instituted this action, charging in the first count, for the value of labor and services furnished at defendant's request, and, in the second, pleading at length and standing upon the contract in question. He also averred that there was in the sewer fund, not otherwise appropriated, and available for the payment of his demand, more than $3,000, and such is the undisputed fact. Indeed, none of these facts is disputed. Upon the trial most of them were admitted under stipulation, and others proved without conflict. The court sustained a general de-murrer to the second cause of action. At the close of plaintiff's case a motion for nonsuit upon the cause of action in assumpsit was made and granted. These two rulings are the errors complained of.

Against the validity of the contract, the first objection urged is that the city had no power to enter into this contract for the care and disposition of its sewage, because "it has no reference whatever to the sewage within the city, but provides for the care and disposal of the sewage from the outfall of the sewers some distance from the city." We see no force in this objection. Proper sewers are in this day so essential to the hygiene and sanitation of a municipality that a court would not look to see whether a power to construct and maintain them had been granted by the charter, but rather only to see whether, by possibility the power had been expressly denied. In the case of the city of Fresno, a city of the fifth class, the power is, however, expressly conferred. "The board of trustees shall have power to establish, construct, and maintain drains and sewers." Municipal Corporation Bill, § 764, subd. 5. Disposition of the outfall is an essential part of the maintenance of a sewer system, and it must often be necessary for inland cities to arrange for that disposition without their corporate limits. Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601.

But the controlling questions presented by this contract for determination are: (1) Does it violate the Constitution and charter of the city of Fresno? (2) Does it operate as a surrender or suspension of the legislative powers of the trustees of the city? The Constitution provides (art. 11, § 18): "No . . . city . . . shall incur indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without, etc. . . . Any indebtedness or liability incurred contrary to this provision shall be void." The charter of the city of Fresno provides, in terms harmonious with those of the Constitution: "The trustees shall not create, audit, allow, or permit to accrue any debt or liability in excess of the available money in the treasury that may be legally apportioned and appropriated for such purposes, etc." Stat. 1888, p. 255. The charter of the city of Fresno authorizes the levying and collecting of a tax, not exceeding 10 cents on each $100, for the sewer fund. Municipal Corporation Bill, § 764, subd. 9. No question is here presented but that the text which may thus be collected is ample for the payment of the sums due or to become due to plaintiff under his contract, and the question of the validity of the contract is free from any embarrassment from this consideration. In the constitutional provision under consideration, the framers had in mind the great and ever-growing evil to which the municipalities of the state were subjected by the creation of a debt in one year, which debt was not, and was not expected to be, paid out of the revenue of that year, but was carried on into succeeding years, increasing like a rolling snowball as it went, until the burden of it became almost unbearable upon the taxpayers. It was to prevent this abuse that the constitutional provision was enacted. In San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 31 L. R. A.

Cal. 641, and in Shaw v. Statler, 74 Cal. 258, the question is discussed, and the interpretation of the constitutional provision laid down, and the reason for it given. Each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and no indebtedness or liability incurred in one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year. The taxpayers of municipalities are thus protected against the improvident creation of inordinate debts, which may be charged against them and their property in ever-increasing volume from year to year, until he who is without any property may be in a better financial situation than one who owns much.

Upon the other hand, the correlative rights of a creditor of the city, under these circumstances and under the law, have been recently set forth with exactness and clearness by Mr. Justice Harrison in Weaver v. San Francisco City & County (Cal.) 43 Pac. 972: "Whoever deals with a municipality does so with notice of the limitation of its powers, and with notice also that he can receive compensation for his labor or materials only from the revenues and income previously provided for the fiscal year during which his labor and materials are furnished, and with the knowledge, too, that all other persons dealing with the municipality have the same rights to compensation and are subject to the same limitations, as he is. Even though, at the time of making his contract, there are funds in the treasury sufficient to meet the amount of his claim, he is charged with notice that these funds are liable to be paid out for municipal expenditures before his contract can mature into a claim against the city; and if others, whose claims have accrued subsequent to his, are able to intercept these funds, he is in the same condition as any creditor who has dealt with one whose assets are exhausted before he presents his claim. He acquires no claim in the nature of a lien upon these funds for the amount of his demand, nor is there any legal obligation upon the municipality, any more than upon any other debtor, to pay the claims against it in the order in which they are incurred, unless they are presented in that order, and in such condition and with such formalities as entitle the claimant to immediate payment. In dealing with the municipality, he must rely upon the integrity of its officers that they will not incur any liabilities during the year in excess of the income and revenue provided for that year, and as a prudent man, he will ascertain, not only the amount of that income, but also the amount of the claims already existing and of those that are likely to be incurred."

In the case of contracts extending over a period longer than one year, it may be readily seen that the municipality is abundantly protected, and that it is the contractor therewith who subjects himself to peril and risk or loss. If there are not revenues for any given year sufficient and available for the payment of his claims for that year, those claims become waste paper, and are not carried over as a charge against the income, and the revenue of a succeeding year. This determination of the law in this state removes a potent objection found by the supreme court of Michigan to sustaining a contract under a law similar to our own, where the life of the contract was for several years. Says the court: "There can be no doubt, in our opinion, that this whole contract obligation is a liability to the full extent of the thirty years rental; and it is equally clear that all unpaid sums would be aggregated until paid." Niles Waterworks v. Niles, 59 Mich. 312.

In this state such a rule would not obtain, and the contract under consideration is left with its validity to be determined primarily as the question is answered. Does it or does it not create a debt or liability for a given year exceeding the revenue of that year? And upon this it may be said, at the outset, that there is a contrariety of opinion in the courts of the states which have been called upon to interpret constitutional or charter provisions similar to or identical with our own. The state of Michigan, as will be observed from the case last cited, holds such contracts to be void, for the reason above quoted. Ohio, New Jersey, Montana, and Oregon have reached the same conclusion, and perhaps other states. State v. Medbery, 7 Ohio St. 526; Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 502; Salem Water Co. v. Salem, 5 Or. 29; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Read, 50 N. J. L. 665.

Upon the other hand, in Illinois, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York, Iowa, Indiana, and Oklahoma (and it may be in others which have not come beneath our notice), it is uniformly held that contracts such as these are not violative of the constitutional inhibition. East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gaslight & C. Co. 98 Ill. 415, 88 Am. Rep. 97; Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 498; Smith v. Dedham, 144 Mass. 177; Westen v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y. 110; Grant v. Davenport, 86 Iowa, 396; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & C. Co. 46 Ind. 396; Territory, Woods, v. Oklahoma, 2 Okla. 158.

In a certain very restricted sense it may be said that a liability is created by a contract such as this; but to call it a present liability for the aggregate amount of the payments in the contract contemplated thereafter to be made is not legally permissible. A liability to the city would arise upon breach of contract, but the Constitution never meant to protect the city from the consequences of its own wilful and tortious acts. A liability might arise against the city for the negligence of its officers, and the damages due to an individual who had suffered therefrom might be great; but such liability for a municipal wrong the Constitution never meant to protect against. When we come to consider the contractual relations between the city and appellant, it is at once seen that the city cannot be liable in any one year for more than $4,900, an amount far within the revenue derived to the sewer fund, and further that it cannot become liable for this amount at all until faithful service rendered by the contractor each year. If the city, in any one year, should fail to collect into its sewer fund money sufficient to pay the just claims of the contractor, then, as above said, it would be the contractor's loss, the city would be chargeable with no financial responsibility therefor, and the result, at the most, so far as it was concerned, would be a failure upon the part 31 L. R. A.

of its officers to observe good faith in their own dealings. There need be here no struggles with the niceties of definitions given to "debt" or "liability." An able discussion of those questions will be found in the case of Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416. We base our views upon the conviction that, at the time of entering into the contract, no debt or liability is created for the aggregate amount of the instalments to be paid under the contract, but that the sole debt or liability created is that which arises from year to year in separate amounts as the work is performed. These views find abundant support in the adjudicated cases in this state. Article 8 of the former Constitution of California provided that the legislature shall not create any debts or liabilities in any manner which shall exceed the sum of $300,000, except under certain specified contingencies. The state made a contract for the care of its prison, for convict labor, etc., for the period of five years, agreeing to pay therefor the sum of $10,000 per month. The act came before this court for review in State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429, where the question was elaborately argued, and fully considered by the court. Chief Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, spoke as follows: "The unconstitutionality of the act . . . is asserted on two grounds: First, that it appropriated the sum of $600,000, and thus created a debt or liability against the people of the state exceeding the limit prescribed by the eighth article of the Constitution. . . .

The contract provides for the payment of $10,000 a month, and the act appropriates this sum per month. The appropriations are to take effect, and the services are to be rendered in future. Until the services are rendered, there can be no debt on the part of the state. The lessee could not have claimed, at any time after the making of the contract, the aggregate of all the monthly instalments,—because the state never owed him that amount. The state only became indebted as the services were each month performed. . . . The 8th article was intended to prevent the state from running into debt, and to keep her expenditures, except in certain cases, within her revenues. These revenues may be appropriated in anticipation of their receipt, as effectually as when actually in the treasury. The appropriation of the moneys, when received, meets the services as they are rendered, thus discharging the liabilities, as they arise, or rather anticipating and preventing their existence. The appropriation accompanying the services operates in fact in the nature of a cash payment." This interpretation, after further consideration and argument, was reaffirmed in People, McCauley, v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11, and again in Koppikus v. State Capitol Comrs. 16 Cal. 248. In People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 524, it is said: "A sum payable upon a contingency, however, is not a debt, or does not become a debt until the contingency has happened."

These decisions being before the framers of the present Constitution, under familiar rules of interpretation it will be held that their enactment of similar provisions was made in the light of them. Wallace v. San Jose, 29 Cal. 181, is not in conflict with these decisions. The contract there contemplated a payment which might become a debt in the year in which the contract was executed, as well as in some future year. Under the peculiar language of the charter, which forbade the creation of any debt unless the money was actually in the treasury to meet it, it was declared that the council had no authority to provide for the creation of a debt to arise in the future, any more than to create one directly and in presenti.

Upon the second proposition, namely, whether or not the contract operates as a surrender or suspension of the legislative powers of the trustees of the city, it is to be observed that there is in this state no inhibition against the making of a contract by a municipal board which shall extend for more than one year, or even beyond the term of office of the board which makes it. If the legislature desired to restrict municipalities in this particular, it could easily do so by the passage of a law, such as exists in some other states, declaring void any contract upon the part of a municipality which is to extend beyond the current fiscal year, or beyond the term of office of the authorities which enter into it. But, even in the absence of such provisions, courts look with disfavor upon contracts by municipalities involving the payment of moneys which extend over a long period of time—First, because such contracts, in their nature, tend to create a monopoly in favor of the other party thereto for supplying the city with the article contracted for; second, because they may involve an undue restraint upon the legislative powers of the successors of the board, and prevent those successors from availing themselves of a change in the times, of opposition, of reduced rates, or other causes operating legitimately to decrease the price of the commodity, of which decrease in price the city, by reason of its contract, cannot avail itself. There is thus, by law and reason, a well-defined limit set to such contracts. In the absence of any other objection to them, they will not be upheld, in the absence of a clear showing of a reasonable necessity for their execution. But if, on the other hand, it be made to appear that, at the time the contract was entered into, it was fair and just and reasonable, and prompted by the necessities of the situation, or was in its nature advantageous to the municipality, then such a contract will not be construed as an unreasonable restraint upon the powers of succeeding boards. In San Francisco Gaslight Co. v. Dunn, 62 Cal. 585, this court says: "In the absence of an express limitation as to the period of time for which a contract may be made, we would hold, perhaps, that the contract with the plaintiff for five years was not beyond the power of the supervisors." In Riehl v. San José, 101 Cal. 442, an action was brought to set aside a contract for five years, made by the city with an electric company for the lighting of its streets. The complaint sounded in fraud, and further declared that the contract was against public policy, illegal, and void. The contract was upheld, it being found that there was no fraud, and that the "members of the common council . . . acted as honest men, and exercised their honest discretion for the best interests of the city."

We have here, then, a contract made for a purpose expressly authorized by the charter, a contract which looked to supplying the city with an absolute need, a contract which pertained to the ordinary expenses of the city, and, together with other like expenses, was well within the limit of the current revenue authorized by its charter annually to be provided for this specific purpose. The term of the contract was fair, indeed, in view of the considerable expense which the evidence showed plaintiff was obliged to undergo to fulfil his undertaking. Under these circumstances, we hold the contract to be valid, operative, and binding upon the city.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to overrule defendants' demurrer.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Garoute, J.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Missouri, ex rel. LACLEDE GAS-LIGHT COMPANY,

v.

Michael J. MURPHY, Street Commissioner of St. Louis.

(130 Mo. 10.)

1. The right to lay electric-light wires in the streets of a city by virtue of a franchise to lay pipes, fixtures, or other things for the purpose of lighting the city, is subject to the municipal control of the streets and general police power regulating and restricting the manner in which such wires, tubes, and cables may be secured or supported and insulated,—especially when the franchise was given before the use of electricity for such purposes was known.

NOTE.—Police regulation of electric companies.

- I. In general.
- II. As to the occupation of highways or waters.
- III. As to guard wires.
- IV. As to the operation of electric lines.
- V. Limitations of the police power.
 - a. Limitations in state Constitutions.
 1. Impairment of obligation of contracts.
 2. Deprivation of property without due process of law.
 3. Class legislation.
 - b. Limitations in Federal Constitution.
 1. Statutes requiring electric wires to be put underground.

2. It is a matter of common knowledge that electricity is used for the purpose of trans-

V.—Continued.

2. Statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies for not transmitting and delivering messages properly.
3. Statutes regulating telephone prices and requiring service on equal terms to all.
4. Statutes imposing license fees on telegraph companies.

I. In general.

That the regulation of electric lines is within the range of police regulations is perfectly obvious on the briefest consideration of the nature of police mitting sound by telephone and messages by telegraph, and also for generating light and producing power.

(June 18, 1895.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant as street commissioner of St. Louis to permit relator to lay electric wires under a certain street in that city. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry Hitchcock, G. A. Finkelnburg, and Isaac H. Lionberger, for relator:

If the state of Missouri has invested relator with certain powers and franchises, among which is the right to light the city of St. Louis, and to make and vend gas lights and other lights, including electric lights, and to that end to lay down "all pipes, fixtures, or other things properly required," then the city of St. Louis cannot by any ordinances or requirements on its part annul or destroy those franchises, nor can it impair or abridge them, nor can it impose substantial burdens and conditions upon their exercise, not imposed by the state itself.

Relator, its stockholders, and all those who have invested in relator's securities, have vested rights which cannot be substantially abridged or disturbed by the state itself, much less by power. The police power is the power of the legislature representing the body of the citizens to enforce the maxim "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas." "We think it is a settled principle," says Chief Justice Shaw, "growing out of the nature of well-ordered society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it may be so regulated that it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community." Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84.

"The police power of the state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state." Redfield, Ch. J., in Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625.

"The police of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its system of internal regulation, by which it is sought, not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish, for the intercourse of citizens with citizens, those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others." Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 572, 6th ed. p. 704.

Under the reserve powers of the state, which are designated under that somewhat ambiguous term of police powers, regulations may be prescribed by the state for the good order, peace, and protection of the community. The subjects upon which the state may act are almost infinite, yet in its regulations with respect to all of them there is this necessary limitation—that the state does not thereby encroach upon the free exercise of the power vested in Congress by the Constitution. Within that limitation, it may make all necessary provisions with respect to the buildings, poles, and wires of electric companies in its jurisdiction which the comfort and convenience of the community may require. Western U. Tele. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, Reversing 1 Am. Elec. Cas. 632, 95 Ind. 12, 48 Am. Rep. 662.

"The police power is so varied and comprehensive that an exact definition, as applicable to all its phases, has so far been found to be impracticable, but the instances in which the existence of such a power has been judicially recognized, in particular cases, are quite numerous, as well as various in their application to our complex system of government. This . . . power . . . embraces the entire system of internal state regulation, having in view, not only the preservation of public order and the prevention of offenses against the state, but also the promotion of such intercourse between the inhabitants of the state as is calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to promote the interests of all. It is a power inherent in every sov-eighty, and is, in its broadest sense, nothing more than the power of a state to govern men and things within the limits of its own dominion." Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 250, 55 Am. Rep. 201.

31 L. R. A.

This general power of police regulation in respect to electric wires is exercised in some states by statutes expressly providing for insulation of electric wires and other modes of preventing injuries therefrom.

A city ordinance prohibiting the suspension of electric wires over or upon the roofs of buildings, or the suspension or support of such wires upon any building unless it was to supply some occupant of the building with electric light or power or the facilities for using the wire in telegraph or telephone service, was contested in Electric Improv. Co. v. San Francisco City & County, 45 Fed. Rep. 593, 13 L. R. A. 131, but was sustained by the court. Sawyer, J., in his opinion said: "That the stretching of these wires over buildings in the manner practiced, as shown by the evidence, no one, I think, can doubt after reading the affidavits, is extremely dangerous, both as being liable to originate fires, and as obstructions to the extinguishment of fires otherwise originated. Indeed, the danger is a matter of common knowledge. We might almost as well require strict proof of the danger of storing gunpowder, or dynamite, in, under, upon, or about our houses. . . . It is certainly competent, under the police powers of the state, to suppress such dangerous erections in the interest of the common safety of the community. Who can say, in view of the constant and perpetual menace, that the provisions of this ordinance are unreasonable?"

II. As to the occupation of highways or waters.

The regulation of the occupation and use of the highways is a well-recognized exercise of the police power of the state. The highways within and throughout the state are constructed either by the state itself, or by municipalities through delegated powers from the state, which has full powers to provide all the proper regulations of police to govern the actions of persons using them and to make from time to time such alterations in these ways as the proper authorities shall deem best. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 588.

The most wide-reaching application of the police power to the regulation of the occupation of the highways by electric lines is the enactment of statutes by which the municipal authorities are given the right to regulate the erection and maintenance of electric lines on the highways. Statutes of this nature have been passed in almost every state, and are intended to delegate to the local municipal authorities such portion of the police power of the state as to designate the place in the highway which the pole shall occupy, and the number and height of the poles, and number of wires to be used, as shall, in their opinion, secure the least possible inconvenience to the the municipal authorities of the city of St. Louis.

State, St. Louis, v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 102 Mo. 472; State, Haeussler, v. Greer, 78 Mo. 188; Sloan v. Pacific Railroad, 61 Mo. 24, 21 Am. Rep. 397; Scotland County v. Missouri, I. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 123; Weston v. Charleston, 27 U. S. 2, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens Gaslight Co. 115 U. S. 683, 29 L. ed. 510; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516.

Relator cannot comply with the requirements now made by the city of St. Louis, or accept the ordinance in question, without a virtual surrender of its charter.

Police regulations must have some reference to the comfort, safety, or welfare of society. They must not be in conflict with any of the provisions of the charter; and they must not, under pretense of regulation, take from the corporation any of the essential rights and privileges which the charter confers. In short, they must be police regulations in fact, and not amendments of the charter, or curtailment of the corporate franchise.

State, Haeussler, v. Greer, State, St. Louis, v. Laclede Gaslight Co., New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co.,

traveling public. See statutes collected in Crosswell on Electricity, chap. 6.

The right to exercise this police power is inferable from the general power given to municipal governments to regulate the use of the streets, even when it is not especially conferred upon them by the direct terms of a special statute. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 691.

And the courts have uniformly held that it is a valid and proper exercise of the police power of the state. American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 13 L. R. A. 454; United States Illum. Co. v. Hess, 19 N. Y. S. R. 883; H. Clausen & Sons Brewing Co. v. Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. (N. Y. Sup. Ct.) 2 Am. Elec. Cas. 210; People, New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593; United Lines Teleg. Co. v. Grant, 137 N. Y. 7; State, Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Janesville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 72, 22 L. R. A. 759; Mutual U. Teleg. Co. v. Chicago, 16 Fed. Rep. 309; Allentown v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 148 Pa. 147.

The reason of this is obvious. The primary and fundamental object of all public highways is to furnish a passageway for travelers in vehicles, or on foot, through the country. Bouvier, Inst. § 442.

They were originally designed for the use of travelers alone. But in the course of time and in the interest of the general prosperity and comfort of the public, they have been put, especially in large cities, to numerous other uses; but such uses have always been held to be subordinate to the original design and use. Thus they have been appropriated in recent times for the reception of sewer, water pipes, gas pipes, pipes for heating and manufacturing purposes, underground railroads, trenches for wires for telegraph, telephone, and other purposes, which all require in their construction the disruption of the pavements, and the temporary interruption, at least, of the rights of travelers in the public highways. The due and orderly arrangement of the various and conflicting claims to privileges in the streets of large cities is pre-eminently a police power, and it is within the legitimate authority of a legislature to delegate its exercise to municipal corporations. People, New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, supra.

Under such statutes, the municipal authorities may say what streets shall be used, at what points in the streets the poles shall be erected, and how they shall be planted and secured. American U. Teleg. Co. v. Harrison, 31 N. J. Eq. 627; Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32.

And also allow a change in the line if it becomes necessary in reconstructing the street. Monongahela v. Monongahela Electric Light Co. 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 529.

The improvement of the streets, and what is necessary to complete a given improvement thereof, are matters solely within the control of the municipal corporation, and even the court can interfere only where there is fraud, corruption, or oppression. Ibid.

81 L. R. A.

Where a street is graded, and a vitrified pavement is being laid, whether the poles of an electric-light company should be allowed to stand in the line of the curb, and make a break therein and project out into the angle of the brick and curbstone which forms the water table, or should stand back of the curb line, leaving the curb continuous, and the water table free and unobstructed, is a question solely within the jurisdiction of the city councils, and from their decision there is no appeal by such a private corporation whose occupancy and use of the street are adverse to and not for the benefit of the traveling public. Ibid.

The plenary power of the state on this subject includes the power to deny to any form of electric use the right to occupy the highways. If, in the opinion of the state officials, such occupation is not for the public interest, except so far as this denial may be in conflict with the Federal Constitution, which is the case, as will be seen later, in regard to telegraphs, and possibly telephone lines. American U. Teleg. Co. v. Harrison, and Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, supra.

This power of denial of the right to occupy is, with the exception just stated, generally delegated to municipal authorities with a view to the proper care of local interests, and is implied without express words in the general powers of regulating and caring for the streets and highways. In the case of electric-light and electric-railway companies, it would seem that, in the absence of inconsistent statutory provisions, the municipal authorities might, in their discretion, wholly refuse an application for leave to occupy the streets. This point was considered in a case in which an electric-light company sought for a writ of mandamus to compel the board of aldermen of a city to grant a location for its poles. The company based its application upon a statute granting to telegraph companies the right to set their poles in the highway, subject to the designation of place by the aldermen, and upon a later statute providing that the acts relating to telegraph companies should, so far as applicable, extend to lines for the transmission of electricity for the purpose of lighting. The court decided that the mandamus should not issue, placing the refusal upon either of two grounds. In the first place, that the matter of granting locations was left to the discretion of the aldermen of the city or the selectmen of the town, and that they might refuse wholly to grant such location, in cases where it would interfere with public travel on account of the narrowness of the street, or for other reasons; and second, that even if it were considered imperative upon the municipal authorities to grant such location to telegraph companies, yet the reason for an imperative construction of this statute would not apply to electric-light companies; that telegraph companies must in almost all cases run from town to town, and through different towns, and therefore it might be considered imperative that their and Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens Gaslight Co. supra.

Mr. W. C. Marshall, for respondent:

The legislature could not grant to the Laclede Gaslight Company the right to authorize any one else to use streets and highways, for such an act would be clearly a delegation of the power vested in the legislature to a private and quasi-public corporation, and in conflict with the rights of the city of St. Louis, under the act of 1865.

St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 20 L. R. A. 721.

A similar question arose in New York, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 145 U. S.

175, 36 L. ed. 666, 14 Daly, 154, 107 N. Y. 593, where the court said the state law of 1885 simply transferred the reserved police power of the state from one set of functionaries to another, and required the company to submit its plans and specifications to the latter, who would determine whether they were in accordance with the terms of the ordinance giving it the right to enter and dig up the streets of the city, and being so construed it violates no contract rights of the company which might grow out of the permission granted by the municipality.

The said act of 1886 comes within the principles settled in Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, and is not locations should be granted by the selectmen of every town through which they should pass: but the same reason would not apply to electric-lighting companies, whose operations are usually confined to a single town or part of a single town, and are of local interest merely; and that so far as electric-lighting companies are concerned, it must be taken to be the intent of the statute that the authorities of the town to which, ordinarily, the whole business of the electric-lighting company is confined should have the right to say whether or not any location of poles should be granted. Suburban Light & P. Co. v. Boston, 153 Mass. 200, 10 L. R. A. 497.

This power of denial, however, is not vested in the municipal authorities if it is inconsistent with express statutory provisions (Suburban Light & P. Co. v. Boston, supra), as, for instance, in the case of telegraph lines, which in most states are directly granted a right of way by statute, and only the regulation of the use of this right of way is left to the city or town. The state statutes granting this right of way to telegraph companies (cited in Croswell on Electricity, p. 53) are generally copies of, and are all intended to conform to, and give local sanction to, the act of Congress which will be discussed hereafter, which gives telegraph companies the right of way over all post roads of the United States. The conflict between the police power of the state and the Federal Constitution in this regard will be considered later.

The statutes which delegated this police power of regulating the occupation of the highways by electric companies to the various municipalities, were generally enacted before the advisability of putting electric wires underground had been developed by the great increase in the number of such wires, but there are at the present time many states in which statutes expressly giving municipal authorities the right to regulate underground wires have been enacted. Such is the case in Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Vermont. See Croswell on Electricity, §§ 163-165. These statutes are either permissive in their form, giving the electric companies the right to put their wires underground if they desire, as in Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, and New York, or mandatory, as in Maryland, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Vermont, or both, as in some of the states above cited.

The necessity of these acts sprung out of a great evil, which, in recent times, has grown up and afflicted large cities by the multiplication of rival and competing companies, organized for the purpose of distributing light, heat, water, the transportation of freight and passengers, and facilitating communication between distant points, and which require in their enterprises the occupation, not only of the surface and air above the streets, but indefinite space under ground. This evil had become so great that every large city was covered with a net work of cables and wires attached to poles, houses, buildings, and elevated structures, bringing danger, inconvenience, and annoyance to the public. Extensive spaces under ground were also required to lay pipes and build trenches and arches, to transact the business of the various corporations requiring them. These works not only called for great skill to harmonize the various and conflicting claims of competing companies to rights above as well as beneath the ground, but a comprehensive plan and supervision, to prevent the constant disruption of the streets and the interruption of travel. The necessity of a remedy for these public annoyances had long been felt, and it finally culminated in the enactment of the several statutes referred to. People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593.

These statutes were obviously intended to restrain and control, as far as practicable, the evils alluded to by requiring all such wires to be placed under ground in such cities, and be subject to the control and supervision of local officers, who could reconcile and harmonize the claims of conflicting companies, and obviate in some degree the evils which had grown to be almost, if not quite, intolerable to the public. The scheme of these statutes was not to annul or destroy the contract rights of such companies, but to regulate and control their exercise. They did not purport to deny them any privileges theretofore granted, but they did require that they should be exercised with due regard to the claims of others, and in such a way that they should cease to constitute a public nuisance, and should be enjoined in such a manner as to inconvenience and endanger the general public as little as possible. Ibid.

These acts in their general scope have always been held to be a valid exercise of the police power of the state. American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 13 L. R. A. 454; United States Illum. Co. v. Hess, 19 N. Y. S. R. 883; H. Clausen & Sons Brew. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. (N. Y. Sup. Ct.) 2 Am. Elec. Cas. 210; People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593; United Lines Teleg. Co. v. Grant, 137 N. Y. 7.

As to questions under the Federal Constitution, see infra, V. b.

For license tax for use of streets by electric companies, see also infra, V. b. 4.

Another form in which the police power of the state has been exercised upon electric companies is found in the various statutory enactments which provide that when the lines are laid under navigable streams they shall be so laid and maintained as not to obstruct navigation. See statutes; Croswell, Electricity, § 61; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Inman & I. S. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 365, 20 U. S. App. 247; The City of Richmond, 43 Fed. Rep. 85; Stephens & C. Transp. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 8 Ben. 502; Blanchard v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 N. Y. 510.

Similarly, if a line is put across a draw bridge, in conflict with the provision of the 14th Amendment that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Macfarlane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the petition of relator an alternative writ of mandamus was issued by this court, directed to respondent, Murphy, as street commissioner of the city of St. Louis, commanding him to show cause why he should not be required to issue a permit to relator to make an excavation along the east side of Broadway, as near the curbas practicable, and extending from Mound street to Olive street in the city of St. Louis, in so far as such excavation should be necessary for the purpose of laying relator's electric wires under ground. By its petition, relator represents that it is a corporation created under an act of the legislature of the state approved March 2, 1857, and a supplementary and amendatory act approved March 3, 1857, and an amendatory act approved March 26, 1864. These acts are set out in full in the petition. The first, approved March 2, 1857, is entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Laclede Gaslight Company." Laws 1856-57, p. 598. The first section of the act creates James M. Hughes and seven others a body politic and corporate by the style of "The Laclede Gaslight Company, the wires must be so arranged as not to interfere with the working of the draw or the passage of vessels. Pacific Mut. Teleg. Co. v. Chicago & A. Bridge Co. 36 Kan. 118.

The propriety of this particular instance of the exercise of the police power of the state over highways has never been questioned, and is obviously valid for the reasons given as to underground wires.

Other forms in which the police power of the state has been exercised in regard to the occupation of the streets by electric wires are the statutes found in a few states as to cutting wires when necessary for moving buildings, giving this power when necessary from the circumstances of the case. Croswell, Electricity, §§ 256-265, and statutes inflicting penalties for injuries to electric lines, posts, or apparatus. Id. § 265, note.

The relative rights of trolley railway companies, and the owners of telephone or other electric lines in the use of streets is a kindred subject, but distinct from that of this note, and will be separately treated hereafter; but much can now be found on that question in Cumberland Teleg. & Teleg. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. (Tenn.) 27 L. R. A. 236, and cases there cited.

III. As to guard wires.

Considering the dangerous nature of electric wires it would seem to be clearly within the reasonable exercise of police power to require guard wires to be placed between different electric wires where several lines cross each other or hang at different heights along the street. In one case a municipal ordinance requiring such guard wires has been brought in question and sustained. State, Wisconsin Teleg. Co., v. Janesville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 72, 22 L. R. A. 759. The court says: "The ordinance is reasonable because it requires that to be done which in law and good conscience the defendant (a trolley railroad company) ought to do for the protection of the relator (a telephone company) whose established business it has endangered and disturbed. Second, it is clearly sustained under the police power of the city. . . . There can be no question at this late day but that our municipal corporations may make all reasonable regulations for the location and use of electric wires in the street and require all reasonable safeguards for the same."

That a lawfully authorized order or direction of the mayor requiring companies using trolley wires to guard and protect them by what is known as guard wires had been made, is alleged by plea of a telephone company in McKay v. Southern Bell Teleg. Co. (Ala.) ante, 589, in which the telephone company sought to escape liability for negligence in respect to its own dangerous wires by asserting that the damage was caused by the trolley company's failure to obey such order as to the guard wires, but this plea was held bad on demurrer.

For cases as to the duty of electric companies to maintain guard wires as a reasonable exercise of care, even when no ordinance or other public regulation has ordered, see note to Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) ante, 566.

IV. As to the operation of electric lines.

The most important form in which the police power of the state has been exercised upon the operation of electric lines is found in the statutes which regulate the operation of telegraph companies and require them to receive and transmit messages in good faith, with impartiality, and with due care and reasonable dispatch. Such statutes are in existence in most states, and in many cases a penalty is affixed to the nonperformance of the statutory duty. See statutes collected in Croswell, Electricity, chap. 15.

These statutes are valid exercises of the police power, for they are merely statutes which require persons, whether natural or artificial, doing business within the state, to transact that business with fairness, diligence, and impartiality. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 95 Ind. 12, 48 Am. Rep. 692. Rev'd as to interstate business in 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Meredith, 95 Ind. 93. These statutes, however, have been drawn in question in several cases in regard to their extraterritorial force as being in conflict with the exclusive powers of Congress over interstate commerce. This question will be discussed later.

The application of the Sunday law to a telegraph company, although it is a foreign corporation, is sustained in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248, 3 L. R. A. 224.

In various other cases which did not expressly decide that Sunday laws were applicable to telegraph business the application of such statutes has been impliedly recognized, as by making the necessity of the message the test of the duty of the telegraph company to receive and transmit it. As illustrations of these cases are Rogers v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 78 Ind. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 558; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McLaurin, 70 Miss. 36; Thompson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 32 Mo. App. 191; Burnett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 39 Mo. App. 599; Rassett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 48 Mo. App. 568; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wilson, 93 Ala. 32; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hutcheson, 91 Ga. 252; Millingham v. Western U. Teleg. Co. Id. 449.

Another form of the police regulation of the operation of electric lines is found in the statutes which have been enacted in several states, and which require telegraph companies to make free delivery of messages within a certain limited distance from the central office. Telegraph companies often do this voluntarily, but in some states acts are passed compelling them so to do. Such statutes are found in California, Connecticut, Georgia, Minnesota, Ohio, and Oregon (see Croswell on Electricity, § 417; and under the general rule and by that name they and their successors and assigns are given perpetual succession," etc. The second section fixed the capital stock at $50,000, and authorized it to be increased to $2,000,000. The third section directs that the affairs of the company shall be managed by a board of not less than five directors, etc. The fourth section authorizes books of subscription for the capital stock to be opened in St. Louis, and, upon the sum of $50,000 being subscribed, provides that the company may organize under this charter. Section 5 provides that said company, its successors and assigns, should, within the corporate limits of said city, not embraced within the limits as established by act of 1839, "have and enjoy, during the continuance of this act, the sole and exclusive privilege and right of lighting the same, and of making and vending gas, gas lights, gas fixtures, and of any substance or material that may be now or hereafter be used as a substitute therefor, and to that end may establish and lay down, in said portion of said corporate limits, all pipes, fixtures, or other things properly required, in order to do the same (the same to be done with as much dispatch and as little inconvenience to the public as possible), and shall also have all other powers necessary to execute and carry out the privileges and powers hereby granted to said company." Section 6 authorizes the city of St. Louis and the company to make any contracts that they may deem to their mutual ad-laid down in Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, are undoubtedly a valid exercise of the police power, so far as they do not conflict with the Federal Constitution, which will be considered later.

Another form of police regulation of the operation of electric lines is statutes regulating the prices which the company shall charge for services. In the case of telegraph and telephone lines there have been enacted in several states statutes which fix maximum prices for telegraph and telephone service. This is the case in Florida, Indiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Vermont, and statutes with a similar intent as to electric light service exist in many states. St. Louis v. Bell Teleph. Co., 96 Mo. 623, 2 L. R. A. 278; Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 250, 55 Am. Rep. 201; Central U. Teleph. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1; Johnson v. State, 118 Ind. 143; Central U. Teleph. Co. v. State, Falley, 118 Ind. 194, 123 Ind. 113; State, Webster, v. Nebraska Teleph. Co., 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404. The statutes are cited in Crowell on Electricity, § 319, note.

The validity of this exercise of the police power has been little questioned. It was maintained to its fullest extent in a case in Indiana (Hockett v. State, supra.) in which the right of a state to enact maximum charges for telephone service was the point in issue. The court describes the police power of the state in the terms given in the beginning of this note, and adds: "When the owner of property devotes it to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in such use, and must, to the extent of that interest, submit to be controlled by the public, for the common good, as long as he maintains the use to which he has so devoted his property, and he can only escape such public control by withdrawing his grant and discontinuing the use. In support of that conclusion, the court said it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, and the like, and, in so doing, to fix a maximum of charges to be made for services rendered, accommodations extended, and articles sold. . . . The obvious deduction from what has been said, as well as from the authorities cited, is that the power of a state legislature to prescribe the maximum charges which a telephone company may make for services rendered, facilities afforded, or articles of property furnished for use in its business, is plenary and complete."

The delegation of this power to municipal authorities, however, is not to be easily inferred, but must be by express statute or by necessary inference for the proper exercise of other powers conferred by express statutes, and a mere power given to municipal authorities to "regulate" telephone companies will not confer this right, nor will a general power to pass such ordinances as are for the general welfare of the city, if other specific grants of powers in the charter show that the general welfare clause was intended to include such power. St. Louis v. Bell Teleph. Co., 96 Mo. 623, 2 L. R. A. 278.

A kindred form of the exercise of the police power over the business of electric companies arises in cases where the state or city exacts a license fee from such companies for the use of streets. The nature of this fee has been disputed in several cases. Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Philadelphia, 22 W. N. C. 39; Chester v. Western U. Telegr. Co., 154 Pa. 464, 3 Lanc. L. Rev. 174; Philipsburg v. Central Pennsylvania Teleph. & S. Co., 22 W. N. C. 572; Lancaster v. Edison Electric Illum. Co., 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 178.

It is generally conceded not to be a tax, strictly speaking. Chester v. Western U. Telegr. Co., Lancaster v. Edison Electric Illum. Co., Philipsburg v. Central Pennsylvania Teleph. & S. Co., and Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Philadelphia, supra; Philadelphia v. Postal Telegr. Cable Co., 67 Hun. 21.

But to be a true exercise of the police power. Lancaster v. Edison Electric Illum. Co., Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Philadelphia, Philadelphia v. Postal Telegr. Cable Co., Philipsburg v. Central Pennsylvania Teleph. & S. Co., and Chester v. Western U. Telegr. Co., supra.

But not to be such an ordinary police power as is incidental to the power of regulating the use and occupation of the highways, but to be so far a special power as to require express delegation by statute from the state to the municipal authorities. Philipsburg v. Central Pennsylvania Teleph. & S. Co., supra.

This seems to be the correct view of the case. The fee cannot be considered as a tax, for there is no assessment. It is not based on any valuation of property, and it is not laid merely for revenue, but as a consideration for certain privileges, either of setting poles in the streets, of municipal inspection and care of the same, or for the mere privilege of carrying on business. Philipsburg v. Central Pennsylvania Teleph. & S. Co., Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Philadelphia, Lancaster v. Edison Electric Illum. Co., and Chester v. Western U. Telegr. Co., supra.

Considered in this light, it is generally held to be a valid exercise of the police power by a municipality, if such power has been delegated to it by the state. Harrisburg v. Pennsylvania Teleph. Co., 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 518; Lancaster v. Edison Electric Illum. Co., and Philipsburg v. Central Pennsylvania Teleph. & S. Co., supra; Postal Telegr. Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 79 Md. 502, 24 L. R. A. 161; Chester v. Western U. Telegr. Co., and Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Philadelphia, supra.

But the exercise of such power must not conflict with the Federal Constitution granting exclusive rights of regulation of interstate commerce to Congress, as will be seen later. As to power of state to control or impose burdens by license taxes, or vantage in regard to the lighting of any parts of said portion of said corporate limits, or any other thing relating to the business and affairs of said company. It provides that "the said city shall have the right, at the expiration of twenty years from the time of the organization of said company, under this charter, to purchase all the property and effects of the same, paying therefor to the same the value of such property and effects, with 20 per cent added thereto," and the manner of ascertaining the value by appraisers is provided. Said section has this further provision: "If said city fail so to purchase said property and effects, then this charter shall be and the same is hereby renewed and extended for the further period of thirty years after the expiration thereof." Section 7 punishes any person or body corporate who interferes with the privileges granted to said company or exercises like acts or privileges, by a forfeit and fine to said company of $1,000 for every such offense, and makes each day's continuance of such offense a new offense. Section 8 exempts the company from the operation of §§ 6, 7, 13, 14, 15, 18, and 20 of art. 1 of "An Act Concerning Corporations," approved November 23, 1855. The sections of the act of November 23, 1855, here referred to, are contained in chap. 34, Rev. Stat. 1855, pp. 371-374. Section 9 is as follows: "This otherwise on such companies when doing an interstate business, see note to Postal Telegr. Cable Co. v. Baltimore (Md.) 24 L. R. A. 161.

Another exercise of the police power in regulating the operation of electric lines is found in the statutes requiring telegraph and telephone companies to supply equal facilities to all who desire to use them, including other telegraph and telephone companies. Croswell, Electricity, chap. 14. These statutes are a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Atlantic & P. Telegr. Co. v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 4 Daly, 527; United States Telegr. Co. v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 56 Barb. 46; Smith v. Gold & S. Telegr. Co. 42 Hun. 454; Bradley v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 17 Fed. Rep. 534, note; Metropolitan Grain & S. Exchange v. Chicago Board of Trade, 15 Fed. Rep. 850; Shepard v. Gold & S. Telegr. Co. 38 Hun. 338; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 44 Neb. 336, 27 L. R. A. 622; Sterrett v. Philadelphia Local Telegr. Co. 18 W. N. C. 77; Davis v. Electric Reporting Co. 19 W. N. C. 567; Cain v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 18 Cin. W. L. Bull. 287; New York & C. Grain & S. Exchange v. Chicago Board of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L. R. A. 411; Marine Grain & S. Exchange v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 23; Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Telegr. Co. 66 Md. 309, 59 Am. Rep. 167; State, American U. Telegr. Co., v. Bell Teleph. Co. 36 Ohio St. 236; Commercial U. Telegr. Co. v. New England Teleph. & Telegr. Co. 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161; State, Baltimore & O. Telegr. Co., Bell Teleph. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 539; State, Postal Telegr. Cable Co. v. Delaware & Atlantic Teleph. & Telegr. Co. 47 Fed. Rep. 433, Affirmed sub nom. Delaware & A. Telegr. & Teleph. Co. v. State, Postal Telegr. Cable Co., 50 Fed. Rep. 677, 3 U. S. App. 30; Bell Teleph. Co. v. Pennsylvania, Baltimore & O. Telegr. Co., 7 East. 672; People, Postal Telegr. Cable Co., v. Hudson River Teleph. Co. 19 Abb. N. C. 486.

These statutes requiring telegraph and telephone companies to supply equal facilities have been questioned only in respect to telephone companies where a contract had been made to give the exclusive use of the telephone service for telegraphic use to a single company. In one case only such a contract was sustained, but in other cases it was held invalid as against the statute. As to these, see note to Com. v. Petty (Ky.) 29 L. R. A. 791.

Other forms of police regulation of the operation of electric lines are found in the statutes requiring telegrams to be kept in inviolate secrecy by the operators (Croswell, Electricity, § 436), and preventing outsiders from tapping the wires, or otherwise gaining information as to the contents of telegrams or hearing telephone messages (Id. § 439), and statutes exempting telegraph operators from jury duty. Id. §§ 440-442.

An instance of the application of police regulation to electric railways is found in the statute requiring screens or enclosures on the front of the car to protect the motorman in cold weather. 31 L. R. A.

Ohio Laws, 1898, p. 220, §§ 1, 2; Minn. Gen. Laws 1893, chap. 63, §§ 1-3.

These statutes have been held to be valid exercise of the police power. State v. Hoskins, 58 Minn. 35, 25 L. R. A. 759; State v. Smith (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. 759; State v. Nelson, 52 Ohio St. 83, 26 L. R. A. 317; State v. Nelson, 31 Ohio L. J. 220.

V. Limitations of the police power.

The police power has been previously shown to be an inherent power of the state to impose such regulations upon the use of property and the conduct of individuals as will promote the peace and safety of the community. As the people are the source of universal power in government, it results that there are no limitations to the exercise of the police power except such as have been voluntarily imposed by the people in the constitutions adopted by them in the several states, or in the Federal Constitution.

a. Limitations in state Constitutions.

Several provisions of the Constitutions have been alleged in various instances to conflict with the exercise of police regulation of electric lines in different forms of the exercise of this power.

1. Impairment of obligation of contracts.

It has been alleged in some cases that the provisions of a state Constitution which prohibit the passage by the legislature of any statute impairing the obligation of a contract, render unconstitutional laws which require electric lines to be placed underground, because the franchise which the electric company has from the municipal authorities to erect its poles and string its wires in the streets is a contract. This contention has not been sustained. The police power of the state exercised for the safety and welfare of the inhabitants, overrides any contracts between individuals, or even contracts between corporations and the state, in the charter granted by the state to the electric companies, or the franchises granted to such companies, either directly by the state, or mediately through the municipal authorities. Moreover, statutes which require electric wires to be put underground do not impair any contract in the grant to the companies of the right to construct their lines in the streets, for the grant of the right to carry their lines through the streets was made originally subordinate to the convenience of public travel, and still remains in full force to this extent, and the exercise of it is merely regulated in such way as to insure the safety and comfort of the inhabitants. People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 598; Monongahela v. Monongahela Electric Light Co. 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 529; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 552, 3 L. R. A. 449, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 533; American Rapid Telegr. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 13 L. R. A. 454; United States Illum. Co. v. Hess, 19 N. Y. S. R. 883; United Lines Telegr. Co. v. Grant, 137 N. Y. 7.

act shall take effect from its passage, and shall continue in force for thirty years." The act of March 8, 1857 (Laws 1857, p. 599), is as follows:

"An Act Supplementary and Amendatory of an Act Entitled 'An Act to Incorporate the Laclede Gaslight Company.' Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Missouri as follows:

"Sec. 1. The act to which this act is amendatory is hereby amended as that the words 'sole and exclusive,' in the 5th section of the act are stricken out.

"Sec. 2. The city of St. Louis shall not be compelled, in any purchase which it may make under the 6th section of the before-recited act, to pay more than the appraised value of the property and effects of the corporation created by said act, without any addition of percentage.

"This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

The act of March 26, 1868 (Laws 1868, p. 187), was entitled "An Act to Amend an Act to Incorporate the Laclede Gaslight Company, approved March 2, 1857," and is as follows:

"Sec. 1. The said Laclede Gaslight Company shall and may, within the corporate limits of the city of St. Louis, as the same are now or may hereafter be established, exercise, have, hold, and enjoy forever, all the rights, privileges, and franchises granted to it by the 5th

2. Deprivation of property without due process of law.

In several cases it has been urged that the acts which require electric wires to be placed under ground deprive electric companies of a species of property, namely, the right under their franchises to construct their lines in the streets, and that this deprivation is without due process of law. This contention cannot be sustained even if the franchise rights are considered as a species of property, for such rights are subordinate to the convenience of travel, and the statutes are simply a regulation of the mode of enjoying this species of property in the manner most consistent with the safety and comfort of the public. Monongahela v. Monongahela Electric Light Co. 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 529; American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 13 L. R. A. 454; People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593; United States Illum. Co. v. Hess, 19 N. Y. S. R. 883; United Lines Teleg. Co. v. Grant, 137 N. Y. 7; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 552, 3 L. R. A. 449, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 533.

3. Class legislation.

In several instances statutes which require electric railways to put screens or boxes on the front of their motor cars to protect the motormen from the weather have been objected to as unconstitutional as being class legislation in states whose constitutions forbid such legislation. The claim has been that as such statutes apply to electric cars only, and not to horse cars or cars propelled by other animals, they are in effect class legislation, but the courts in all these cases sustained the statute, holding that it was not class legislation because it applied to all the railways of the kind to which it was intended to apply. State v. Hoskins, 58 Minn. 35, 25 L. R. A. 759; State v. Smith (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. 759; State v. Nelson, 52 Ohio St. 88, 26 L. R. A. 317; State v. Nelson, 31 Ohio L. J. 220.

b. Limitations in Federal Constitution.

A strong effort has been made in various cases involving the exercise of police powers of state governments in the regulation of electric companies, to invoke the aid of the Federal Constitution as prohibiting such regulation. The provisions of the Federal Constitution which have been relied upon to effect this prohibition have been: (1) Those which prohibit any state from depriving any person of property without due process of law (14th Amend. § 1); (2) which prohibit enactment by states of any law impairing the obligation of contracts (art. 1, § 10); (3) which restrict to the action of the Federal government any regulation of commerce among the several states (art. 1, § 8); and (4) which give jurisdiction of patents to the Federal courts. Ibid.

The police power of the states in its relation to the Federal Constitution, is often called one of the reserve powers of the states, under article 10 of the 31 L. R. A.

Federal Constitution, which provides that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308.

The question then arises, if this reserve police power which is in reality one of the attributes of sovereignty residing in the people of the state, and not delegated by it to the Federal government, comes in conflict in its practical application with any provision of the Federal Constitution, whether the state or the Federal power shall be held superior.

The Federal courts have with unanimity recognized the existence of the police power as one of the reserve powers of the states, and say that the police power extends at least to the protection of the lives, the health, and the property of the community against the injurious exercise by any citizen of his own rights, and state legislation strictly and legitimately for police purposes does not, in the sense of the Constitution, necessarily intrench upon any authority which has been confided expressly or by implication to the national government. An instance of this is Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 504, 24 L. ed. 1115, 1116, sustaining state regulation and test of patented oil.

But nevertheless, state statutes enforcing police regulations may sometimes trench upon the Federal jurisdiction, and when their provisions extend beyond a just regulation of rights for the public good, and unreasonably abridge or burden the privileges which the national authority conserves, they cease to be operative. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 552, 3 L. R. A. 449, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 533.

The state, when providing by legislation for the protection of the public health, public morals, or the public safety, is subject to the paramount authority of the Constitution of the United States, and may not violate rights secured or guaranteed by that instrument, or interfere with the execution of the powers confided to the general government. In any case where a state statute enforcing police regulations is alleged to come in conflict with the Federal Constitution, the Federal courts will take jurisdiction of the case and inquire into the real purpose and objects of the statute in question, and if it is in its scope an interference with any of the powers delegated to the Federal government, the Federal courts will declare it so far forth unconstitutional and void. Ibid.

Taking up now the several instances in which conflicts between the Federal Constitution and the police power of the state have occurred, they may be grouped as follows:—

1. Statutes requiring electric wires to be put underground.

2. Statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies for not transmitting and delivering messages properly.

section of the act to which this act is amendatory, and may at any time lease, sell, or dispose of any portion of said rights, privileges, and franchises to individuals, associations, or corporations, intending or desiring to exercise the same within any portion of the limits aforesaid.

"Sec. 2. The capital stock of said company may be increased from time to time to such amount as may be necessary to carry on its business.

"Sec. 3. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as affecting the vested rights of the St. Louis Gaslight Company; and the 6th section of said act to which this act is amendatory, is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 4. An act entitled an act supplementary to and amendatory of an act entitled an act to incorporate the Laclede Gaslight Company, approved March 3, 1857, is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 5. This act shall take effect from its passage."

Relator represents further that under the charter rights granted by these general acts it is, and for a long time has been, engaged in the lighting business, both by gas and electricity; that under a contract with the city of St. Louis it is lighting a part of its public streets by electricity; that it is furnishing light by means of gas or electricity to many thousand private consumers in said city, being a large

3. Statutes regulating telephone prices and requiring service on equal terms to all.

4. Statutes imposing license fees on telegraph companies.

1. Statutes requiring electric wires to be put underground.

The chief point in which it is alleged that these statutes are in conflict with the Federal Constitution is in their application to telegraph lines. The telegraph occupies a peculiarly favored position under the Federal Constitution, as construed by the United States Supreme Court. That court has decided that the telegraph is a means or instrument of interstate commerce. Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708.

And Congress, having by its statutes given the telegraph a right of way over all post roads of the United States (U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5263 et seq.), no state can exclude it from its occupation of such roads with its line. See note to Kindel v. Beck & P. Lithographing Co. (Colo.) 24 L. R. A. 311.

Therefore when, under the provisions of the New York subway act, the state authorities ordered the telegraph lines underground, the telegraph companies immediately raised the objection that this act deprived them of their right of way over the post roads under the Federal Constitution. The court of appeals of New York state, however, held that the ordering the wires underground was merely a proper police regulation of the enjoyment by telegraph companies of their Federal rights, saying: "The precise scope and range of operation of these sections within a state are not quite apparent, and cannot be easily defined. But this much, at least, must be true, that under them no telegraph company could interfere with the use of the streets and highways of the state, except under regulations prescribed for the control of all telegraph companies within the state, nor could such companies interfere with streets and highways in the state so as materially to impair their usefulness as ordinary highways. Nor could these congressional acts deprive the state of its control over its highways, and its right to regulate their use under the police power for the public welfare. The laws of Congress are perfectly satisfied by the permission granted to the plaintiff, of which it is perfectly feasible for it to avail itself, to place its electrical conductors in the subways constructed beneath the surface of the streets." American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 13 L. R. A. 454.

And the Federal courts take the same view. "Nevertheless persons and corporations enjoying grants and privileges from the United States, exercising Federal agencies, and engaged in interstate commerce, are not beyond the operation of the laws of the state in which they reside or carry on their business; and it is only when these laws incapacitate or unreasonably impede them in the exercise of their Federal privileges or duties, and 31 L. R. A.

transcend the powers which each state possesses over its purely domestic affairs, whether of police or internal commerce, that they invade the national jurisdiction. . . . The statutes which the defendants are proceeding to enforce unquestionably belong to the category of police regulations, the power to establish which has been left to the individual states. But statutes of this class may sometimes trench upon the Federal jurisdiction; and when their provisions extend beyond a just regulation of rights for the public good, and unreasonably abridge or burden the privileges which the national authority conserves, they cease to be operative. The state, when providing by legislation for the protection of the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, is subject to the paramount authority of the Constitution of the United States, and may not violate rights secured or guaranteed by that instrument, or interfere with the execution of the powers confided to the general government. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health, 118 U. S. 462, 464, 30 L. ed. 241, 242. . . . It is not apparent how the regulation proposed impairs in any just sense the privilege granted to the complainant [telegraph company] by the law of Congress. The privilege to maintain telegraph wires over and along post roads is not to be construed so literally as to exclude regulations by the state respecting location and mode of construction and maintenance, which the public interests demand; but it is to be construed so as to give effect to the meaning of Congress, which was to grant an easement that would afford telegraph companies all necessary facilities, and which to that extent should be beyond the reach of hostile legislation by the states. Thus interpreted, the grant is no more invaded when the regulation requires the wires to be placed in conduits underground than it would be if they were required to be placed in conduits along the surface of the streets; and when this becomes necessary for the comfort and safety of the community, such a regulation is as legitimate as one would be prescribing that the poles should be of a uniform or designated height, or should be located at different distances apart, or at designated places along the street." Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 562, 3 L. R. A. 449, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 533. To the same effect, H. Clausen & Sons Brew. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. 2 Am. Elec. Cas. 216.

But the right of a telegraph company to maintain its wires along the structure of an elevated railroad which constitutes an independent post road is sustained, although with some doubt, by Judge Wallace in the above case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York. He says: "Inasmuch as the maintenance of the wires of the complainant upon the structures of the railway company is not part of the inhabitants thereof; that in order to fulfil its obligations to the city and the public under its charter, it has erected and maintains expensive and costly plants for the manufacture and distribution of gas, as well as for generating and distributing electric currents; that for distributing gas it has from time to time constructed and maintained, and now maintains, a system of pipes laid underground along the streets of the city of St. Louis, as it was at all times authorized to do by its said charter, nor has the city of St. Louis ever objected to its so doing, or disputed relator's right to do so; that for the distribution of electricity relator has hitherto used overhead wires, strung upon poles along the streets and alleys of said city, which poles and electric wires have been and are maintained and used by relator without objection by said city or the authorities thereof for the distribution of electricity, as well to furnish light to private consumers as for the fulfillment by relator of its said contract with said city of St. Louis for the lighting by electricity of certain public streets and alleys thereof; that to effect such distribution it is necessary to transmit through and by means of said wires electric currents of great power, which if and when accidentally diverted are dangerous to human life and property; that in order to avoid the increasing inconvenience and danger to the public necessarily incident to that method of disturbing electric currents, at present attended with any public inconvenience, and the question is one of sufficient novelty and importance to be considered by the court of last resort, any doubt should be resolved in favor of the complainant for the purpose of its temporary protection."

The underground statute has also been alleged to be in opposition to the Federal Constitution for two other reasons which were brought before the Federal courts on a petition of mandamus by a corporation in New York which previous to the subway act had obtained franchises to lay underground conduits for electric lines. The subway act required all underground lines to be approved by the commissioners of electrical subways. The conduit company, the relator in the petition for mandamus, alleged that the imposition of this precedent requiring the approval of the subway commissioners upon its franchise already granted, injured the company in two ways (1) that it was thereby deprived of its property without due process of law, in opposition to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and (2) that the act impaired the obligation of a contract in opposition to §10 of art. I of the Federal Constitution. The United States Supreme Court, however, did not sustain these claims, but held that the only effect of the statute was to regulate the manner of enjoying their rights. New York, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 36 L. ed. 666.

2. Statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies for not transmitting and delivering messages properly.

The statutes which have been enacted in many states imposing certain duties upon telegraph companies, such as transmitting messages with due care and dispatch, and delivering them promptly, and with due care, and in some instances without charge for delivery in limited districts, and imposing penalties upon the company for noncompliance, have been brought before the Federal and state courts in a number of cases, by telegraph companies, as being an interference by state legislation with interstate commerce, so far as they are applied to omissions or delinquencies occurring outside of the state enacting the statutes. The most important case upon this point is Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Pendleton, 95 Ind. 12, 48 Am. Rep. 602. The supreme court of Indiana held that the state statute was valid because it did no more than require the telegraph company to perform under a penalty the duties imposed upon it by the common law, and this case was followed in the same state by others decided on the same ground. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, however, that court held that such a statute could have no effect, so far as regulating the actions of the telegraph company outside of the state of Indiana was concerned, for if it did it would become a regulation of interstate commerce. Western U. Telegr.

Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306.

But several state courts distinguishing the Pendleton Case have held that a statutory penalty for delay in delivering a message within the state, although it may have been sent from another state, is not an interference with interstate commerce. Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Tyler, 90 Va. 297, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 481; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Bright, 90 Va. 778; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Bates, 93 Ga. 352.

On the other hand, an Indiana statute providing penalties for default or mistake in transmission of messages was construed to be inapplicable to messages sent into the state from other states, on the ground that the contracts were made outside of the state. Rogers v. Western U. Telegr. Co., 122 Ind. 305; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Reed, 96 Ind. 195; Carnahan v. Western U. Telegr. Co., 99 Ind. 526, 46 Am. Rep. 175.

That telegraph messages between points in the same state do not constitute interstate commerce because of the fact that they traverse another state on the route is decided in State, Railroad Commission, v. Western U. Telegr. Co., 113 N. C. 213, 22 L. R. A. 570, sustaining the power of railroad commissioners to make rates for telegraph lines.

An Indiana statute allowing special damages for negligence of a telegraph company was sustained in Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1, although the message was sent from another state. A question is suggested whether such special damages are a part of the remedy merely within the proper sphere of state regulation, although the transaction constitutes interstate business.

A state statute requiring a telegraph company to furnish sufficient facilities to do business both for individuals and other telegraph lines, and to do it promptly and impartially, is held valid in Connell v. Western U. Telegr. Co., 108 Mo. 450, deciding that this does not interfere with interstate commerce, but the case also holds that such a statute does not apply to a delivery of a message in another state.

The fact that a telephone line extends into another state and belongs to a foreign corporation is held not to exempt it from state control in respect to service and rates for persons within the state. Central U. Teleph. Co. v. State, Falley, 118 Ind. 194. To the same effect were Central U. Teleph. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1, and Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 250, 55 Am. Rep. 201, but those cases did not discuss the interstate character of the business.

3. Statutes regulating telephone prices and requiring service on equal terms to all.

Attempts have been made by telephone companies to sustain the position that state statutes fixing maximum telephone rates and requiring the company to give equal service to all on equal terms are opposed to the right granted the Federal government by the Constitution to protect the rights and in order to provide more effective and proper service, relator has made arrangements to lay its wires underground along and under the streets of said city, according to approved and practicable plans, and is now ready to do so with as much dispatch and as little inconvenience to the public as possible. Relator states further that respondent was street commissioner of said city, and under its charter and ordinances had supervision and control of its streets, and the enforcement of ordinances relating thereto; that, after notice to said commissioner of its intention to do so, on the 30th day of October, 1894, the relator commenced excavating on said streets for the purpose of laying its electric wires underground, but was prevented from so doing by respondent, acting in his capacity as street commissioner; that thereupon relator applied to respondent for a permit to make such excavation for such purposes, which was denied it. Respondent made return to said writ, and by affirmative averments put in issue the rights claimed by relator, and set up the provisions of certain city ordinances regulating the use of electric wires on the streets of the city, and averred a non-compliance with the requirements of such ordinances. By demurrer to parts of the return, and motion to strike out other parts, the following issues of law were fairly framed: First. Is the act of March 26, 1868, unconstitutional, as being in conflict with § 2, art. 8, of the Constitution of Missouri of 1865? Second. Is said act void as being in conflict with § 25, of art. 4 of said Constitution? Third. Did the charter of relator expire by limitation at the end of thirty years from the date of the act of March 2, 1857? Fourth. Do the powers granted relator include the right to manufacture, sell, or distribute electricity for lighting purposes? Fifth. Has relator the right, under its charter, to place its wires underground, without the assent of the municipal authorities, and without compliance with the requirements of the valid ordinances of the city?

1. The object to be accomplished by the writ is to require Murphy, as street commissioner of the city of St. Louis, to issue to relator a permit to make such excavations on one of the public streets of the city, as may be necessary for the purpose of laying its electric wires underground. The constitutionality of the acts under which relator claims corporate existence is put in issue by the answer of respondent, and demurrer thereto. Respondent also charges that, though the acts of incorporation were valid, in the first instance, the life of the corporation itself has expired by limitation of its existence as fixed by the charter and general laws of the state. The city is not made a party to this proceeding, and we do not deem it necessary in this case to pass upon any questions that do not directly concern the duties of the street commissioner. We will not, therefore, consider, or express an opinion upon, any question involving the right of relator to exercise the rights or enjoy the franchises which appear to have been granted under the acts of the general assembly mentioned in the statement.

For the purpose of discussing the other questions involved, we will then assume, without deciding or intimating an opinion, that relator is an existing corporation possessing all the powers, rights, and privileges its charter purports to confer upon it. It is insisted by relator that under its charter it acquired from the state a vested right to the use of the streets of the city of St. Louis under which to lay its pipes for the transmission of gas or any other "substance or material" that might thereafter be adopted for illuminating purposes, and that such right was beyond the control of the municipal authorities; that electricity is a substance and material within the meaning of the charter, and therefore it has a vested right to lay its wires beneath the surface of the streets for the purpose of conducting electricity through the city for illuminating purposes, and that this right cannot be interfered with unreasonably by the city. With the views we take of this question, we do not think it necessary to inquire whether the right to use electricity for making light was included under the terms "substance or material" as used in the charter. It appears that relator has for a number of years, under contracts with the city, been lighting its streets by electricity, con-of inventors by the issue of patents. Const. art. 1, § 8. But this claim has been negatived by the state and Federal courts alike, for the reason that such statutes are merely proper police regulations of the manner in which the company owning the property protected by the monopoly granted by the United States shall enjoy such property in the locality in which it engages in business. On this point see full review of the cases in note to Com. v. Petty (Ky.) 29 L. R. A. 791.

4. Statutes imposing license fees on telegraph companies.

In many cases the state legislatures have imposed license fees either directly or by delegation through municipal authorities, upon telegraph and other companies for the privilege of occupying the streets with their poles and wires. The power to impose this fee is upheld when the fee is a reasonable payment either for the space occupied by the poles or for the inspection and care which the city gives them. St. Louis v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380, 146 F. S. 465, 37 L. ed. 810, 39 Fed. Rep. 59; Postal Telegr. Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 156 U. S. 210, 39 L. ed. 399, Aff'g 24 L. R. A. 161; 31 L. R. A.

Allentown v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 148 Pa. 117; Chester v. Philadelphia, R. & P. Teleg. Co. Id. 120; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Philadelphia (Pa.) 12 Atl. 144; Philadelphia v. Postal Telegr. Cable Co. 67 Hun, 21; Philadelphia v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 615, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 728; Philadelphia v. American U. Teleg. Co. 167 Pa. 408; New Orleans v. Great Southern Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40 La. Ann. 41; Croswell, Electricity, §§ 890-893; Harrisburg v. Pennsylvania Teleph. Co. 3 Pa. Dist. R. 815, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 518; Berthlehm v. Pennsylvania Teleph. Co. 12 Lanc. L. Rev. 204; St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 63 Fed. Rep. 68.

The case last cited holds that $5 per pole per annum is unreasonable when greatly disproportionate to the cost of the poles and wires and to the value of the adjoining property. For further particulars of these cases, see note to Postal Telegr. Cable Co. v. Baltimore (Md.) 24 L. R. A. 161, which includes also cases as to licenses for doing business, and other forms of taxation as burdens on interstate telegraph and telephone companies. As to exclusion of foreign telegraph and telephone companies from state, see note to Kindel v. Beck & P. Lithographing Co. (Colo.) 24 L. R. A. 311. S. G. C.

ducted by wires strung above the surface of the streets, and other questions besides the abstract right to do so would be involved in such inquiry. We will therefore confine our inquiry to the question whether relator has a vested right to place its electric wires under the surface of the streets, without the assent of the municipal authorities thereof, and without compliance with valid ordinances of the city. Generally speaking, it is true, the legislature has supreme control of the streets of cities. It is also true that it may, and generally does, delegate to municipal corporations such measure thereof as it deems best. The control thus delegated may be exercised by the municipal authorities. Subsequent to the act of 1868, under authority of the Constitution of 1875, the city of St. Louis adopted a charter whereby the state delegated to it the power to regulate the use of its streets, and the power to pass all ordinances not inconsistent with the provisions of the charter or the laws of the state as may be expedient in maintaining the peace, good government, health, and welfare of the city, its trade, commerce, and manufactures. In pursuance of these powers the city enacted certain ordinances regulating and restricting the use of electric wires in the city, and requiring the assent of the board of public improvement in respect to the manner in which electric wires, tubes, and cables should be secured or supported and insulated. It is charged in the return and admitted by the demurrer that the relator had never complied with the requirements of this ordinance. Relator insists that the provisions of the ordinance cannot apply to rights secured to it by the state long prior to the date of the charter. It is the well-settled present policy of the law of this state to delegate to municipal corporations not only general police powers, but the control of their streets in respect to the use thereof for public purposes other than that of ordinary travel by pedestrians and private vehicles. Thus the Constitution prohibits the legislature from granting the right to construct and operate street railways within any town or village without first acquiring the consent of the local authorities having control of the streets. Mo. Const. § 20, art. 12. Again, the statute requires telegraph and telephone companies to obtain the consent of the city, through its municipal authorities, before they can exercise the right to lay their wires and other fixtures underground in any of its streets. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2721. Electric wires, when charged, are recognized as being dangerous to life and property, and their use is therefore subject to police regulations. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Philadelphia (Pa.) 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 40, and note; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 698. The state cannot limit its exercise of the police power by contract or in any other way. It was said by Chief Justice Waite: "All agree that the legislature cannot bargain away the police power of a state. 'Irrevocable grants of property and franchises may be made if they do not impair the supreme authority to make laws for the right government of the state, but no legislature can curtail the power of its successors to make such laws as they may deem proper in matters of police.'" Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 817, 25 L. ed. 1079. See 31 L. R. A.

Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645, 24 L. ed. 302; Metropolitan Bd. of Excise v. Barrie, 84 N. Y. 657; Lake Roland Elec. R. Co. v. Baltimore, 77 Md. 881, 20 L. R. A. 126. Dillon says: "The citizen owns his property absolutely, it is true. It cannot be taken from him for any private use whatever, without his consent; nor can it be taken for any public use without compensation. Still he owns it subject to this restriction, namely: that it must be so used as not unreasonably to injure others, and that the sovereign authority may, by police regulations, so direct the use of it that it shall not prove pernicious to his neighbors, or the citizens generally." Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. p. 12, § 141. The grant by the state to relator, though construed to include the right to use electricity for illuminating purposes in respect to such right, was taken subject to reasonable regulations as to its use, and the power to regulate has been delegated to the city of St. Louis. Under its general police power, the city has the right to require compliance with reasonable regulations as a condition to using its streets by electric wires.

2. But this is not the only reason why the city should, under its special power to regulate the use of its streets, and under its general police power, have the right to supervise and regulate the manner in which the electric wires of relator and all others should be placed and used in the public streets. The art of producing light by electricity was wholly unknown to science at the time the franchise was granted to relator. The legislature, having no knowledge of the use that would be made of streets in applying new discoveries in producing light, could not have intended to grant rights and powers inconsistent with their ordinary use. It would be most unwarrantable to imply, not only that relator had the right, under the general words used in the act of incorporation, to use electricity for lighting purposes, but that it also had the right to adopt its own methods for exercising that power, regardless of the paramount rights of the public to the use of the streets. The power delegated to the city to regulate the use of its streets existed before the art of lighting by electricity was known, or at least before relator adopted it; and the art should be exercised, if at all, under the powers thus in force when it was brought into use. The following declaration of law was quoted approvingly in Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 559: "It is a well-settled rule of construction of grants by the legislature to corporations, whether public or private, that only such powers and rights can be exercised under them as are clearly comprehended within the words of the act, or derived therefrom by necessary implication, regard being had to the object of the grant. Any ambiguity or doubt arising out of the terms used by the legislature must be resolved in favor of the public." Fanning v. Gregoire, 57 U. S. 16 How. 534, 14 L. ed. 1047. There seem to me much stronger reasons for applying this rule to the manner in which a right conferred shall be exercised when more than one method is open, and when the rights and safety of the public are more or less affected by either. In such case where the public streets of a city, which are under municipal control, are to be used, it seems too plain for argument that the city should have the right to direct the manner in which the use should be exercised. Again, it is a matter of common knowledge that electricity is used for the purposes of transmitting sound by telephone, for transmitting messages by telegraph, for generating light, and for producing power. These uses are regarded as public, and have become necessary to the business and convenience of the country, and particularly that transacted in large cities. Overhead electric wires in some streets are numerous. These contribute very materially to public convenience and private business, but, when not properly supervised and regulated, endanger the lives and property of the public. If used, as they generally are, in the public streets, public safety requires that they should be under police regulation and municipal control. It is a matter also of public notoriety that the question is now being considered whether it would not be necessary, in the interest of public safety, as well as convenience, that these wires should be placed underground, so as thereby to leave the streets safe and unobstructed. As a police regulation we have no doubt the municipal authorities would have a right to require this to be done in case no vested rights were infringed. Many corporations and companies doubtless now use electric wires for the various purposes above mentioned. It cannot be said, not having the various charters before us, that one of these possesses rights superior to those of any others. To accommodate them all, to prevent monopolies, and to regulate the use of the streets, it seems absolutely necessary that the municipal authorities should have the right to direct the manner in which wires shall be placed underground. Without such regulation, relator, or any other corporation using electric wires, could place them underground in such a manner as to practically exclude all others. Moreover, relator, as one of its important franchises, asserts the power to sell, lease, or dispose of any portion of said rights, privileges, and franchises to individuals, associations, or corporations intending or desiring to exercise the same within any portion of the limits named. Thus, under its charter, allowing the rights herein claimed, it could practically control the use of the streets in respect to laying electric wires underground, and exclude the city from one of the most important of its municipal powers. The legislature could never have contemplated such a result. By giving the city the right to regulate the laying of electric wires underground, relator is deprived of no vested right. If its charter gives it the right to use electricity for lighting purposes, it can do so, as we understand from the petition it has been doing, in the method now in use in said city. If the city should determine that public safety requires these wires to be placed underground, and provides the manner in which it shall be done, and relator believes its rights are thereby infringed, it will then be time enough to complain. As the case is now presented, we must hold that the city, under its power to regulate the use of streets, and under its general police power, has the right to require a compliance with regulations which either wholly prohibit relator from laying its wires under the streets, or which regulate the manner in which it may be done. Respondent, under his official duties as street commissioner, properly refused to grant the permit demanded, unless relator first complied with the requirements of the valid ordinances then in force.

Peremptory writ denied.

All the Judges concur; Barclay, J., in the result.

Hermann NOWACK, Resp't.,
v.

William BERGER, Exr., etc., of Eberhard H. Schweer, Deceased, et al., Appts.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Children cannot be deprived of their rights in property given them by will by the fact that a contract by the testator to give property to their father, which was not carried out, is enforced against the estate.
2. A party to a contract with a deceased person as well as to a cause of action against his estate, is incompetent to testify in the case.
3. An oral contract for the adoption of a child as an heir may be recognized and enforced after performance of the consideration.
4. The surrender of a child by his mother to the custody and control of a man whom she marries in pursuance of an oral contract by which, in consideration of the marriage and of the services of the child, the husband agrees to give the child a share of his estate equal to that which an heir would inherit, constitutes an independent, additional and valuable consideration which will amount to part performance of the contract and take the case out of the operation of Rev. Stat. 1890, § 5186, prohibiting an action on a contract in consideration of marriage unless it is in writing.
5. Marriage constitutes such part performance by a woman of a contract in consideration of marriage as to prevent the operation of the statute of frauds in respect to the contract.
6. The share which a person is entitled to from an estate of a person who had agreed to give the former a specified share thereof cannot be diminished because of a gift by will of a portion of the estate to the children of the distributee.

(March 3, 1896.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Gasconade County in favor of complainant in a proceeding to enforce an agreement by Eberhard H. Schweer, deceased, to leave property to plaintiff. Modified.

Statement by Sherwood, J.:

In this proceeding for specific performance, it is conceded by plaintiff: That the abstract of pleading prepared by defendants is correct, which sets forth: "(1) That he, the said Eberhard H. Schweer, should take, adopt, support, and treat her son, this petitioner, at all times as his own natural child, and that plaintiff should at all times perform the duties towards said Schweer due from children towards parents. (2) That in case there should be no children born under his marriage with the said Augusta, that then the plaintiff should be sole heir to all the estate said Eberhard H. Schweer should have at his death, subject to the statutory legal rights of plaintiff's mother as widow; and that in case there should be children born of said marriage, that then plaintiff, upon the death of said Schweer, should receive and be given a share in the estate equal to what one of said Eberhard H. Schweer's own natural children would receive in case he were to die intestate; and that said Schweer should, during his lifetime, by last will or other means of conveyance, make disposition of his property accordingly." That, pursuant to said terms, said Augusta and said Schweer were married, on the 10th day of August, 1864. That said Schweer thereupon assumed control of plaintiff. That said Schweer required of plaintiff such services, and that plaintiff rendered to Schweer such services, as are due from a child to a parent. That plaintiff continued to live with Schweer until he approached his majority, when he was by Schweer induced to marry, and to move onto a tract of land described in the petition, being the same tract on which plaintiff now lives. That the marriage between the said Schweer and plaintiff's mother was dissolved by the death of Schweer, on the — day of February, 1892. That there were born of said marriage three children, defendants Henry E., Fred W., and Ferdinand Schweer. That the said Schweer did not in his lifetime make any provision for plaintiff in accordance with the alleged contract. That, on the contrary, he left a last will and testament, whereby he devised and bequeathed to each of his three sons certain real estate and personal property, and to his widow, defendant Augusta Schweer, such of his estate as she would have been entitled to in case he had died intestate, and to plaintiff's children, defendants Annie A., Henry E., Matilda, and Tina Nowack, the said real estate on which plaintiff now lives, and gave nothing to plaintiff. That said will was probated and letters testamentary issued to the defendant William Berger, now in charge of the estate as executor. That the personal property left by said deceased was worth $18,635.11, and the real estate at least $27,000. Specific performance of this contract was asked by plaintiff. The second count states substantially the same facts as the first count, except that the alleged contract between E. H. Schweer and Augusta Nowack is stated in somewhat different terms, as follows: That the plaintiff should be legally adopted by the said Schweer, and should perform all the duties and services towards said Schweer due from children towards parents; and that, upon the death of said Eberhard Schweer, if no children should be born of the marriage between the said Schweer and the said Augusta, plaintiff should inherit all the property which said Schweer might leave; and that, if there should be children born of the marriage, then plaintiff should have equal share with each of said children. And, except that, the second count 31 L. R. A.

NOTE.—The validity of contracts to give money or property after the death of the promisor is the subject of annotation to Krell v. Codman (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 860.

states that, when plaintiff approached the age of majority, said E. H. Schweer, induced him to marry one Caroline Bartlett, upon a promise to give to plaintiff the farm on which plaintiff now lives, and renewed his promise that at his death he would give plaintiff sufficient to make him equal with his own sons; that, in reliance upon these promises, plaintiff married, on the 15th day of September, 1882 (before he had fully arrived of age), and went into possession of said real estate, and made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, by clearing land, erecting buildings, and planting an orchard, and continued to cultivate the same to the commencement of this suit; that, instead of giving plaintiff the said farm, said Schweer, by said last will, gave it to plaintiff's minor children, the defendants Annie, Henry, Matilda, and Tina Nowack, etc. With the exception of the minor defendants, who answered by their guardian, in usual way, the adult defendants answered as follows: "(1) A general denial of all the allegations of the petition. (2) That the contract alleged in both counts of the petition, and all matters alleged touching and concerning the same, was and is, and this action is brought to charge defendants upon, an agreement in consideration of marriage; and no such agreement, nor any note or memorandum thereof, was or is in writing, signed by the said E. H. Schweer, or by any other person by him thereto lawfully authorized."

Messrs. Kiskaddon & Meyer and John W. Booth, for appellants:

The alleged contracts of Eberhard Schweer, on which respondent's suit is founded, are mere oral agreements, made in consideration of marriage. They are therefore void under the statute of frauds.

Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, §§ 5186, 6853, 6954.

Neither of the subsequent marriages was such a part performance as would take the case out of the statute. Each contract as proved is an entirety, and, marriage being the sole consideration moving Schweer to make such, then no acts of the said Schweer, or any other person, subsequent to the marriage, can be considered a part performance.

Finch v. Finch, 10 Ohio St. 501; Henry v. Henry, 27 Ohio St. 121; Caton v. Caton, L. R. 1 Ch. 137; Montacute v. Marvell, 1 P. Wms. 618; McAnnulty v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26, 60 Am. Rep. 552; Flenner v. Flenner, 29 Ind. 564; Wood v. Savage, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 316; Brown v. Conger, 8 Hun, 625.

The acts claimed to be a part performance must be of such a character that they show, (1) (without proof of the terms of the contract) that there must be a contract of some kind between the parties; and (2) (when the terms of the alleged contract are proved) that the acts are solely referable to that contract and no other, and would not have been done had it not been for that contract.

Paris v. Haley, 61 Mo. 453; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. 131; Rogers v. Wolfe, 104 Mo. 1; Charriot v. Sigerson, 25 Mo. 63; Sitton v. Shipp, 65 Mo. 297; Browne, Stat. Fr. 4th ed. §§ 454 et seq.; Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444, 24 L. ed. 360; Agnew, Stat. Fr. 471; Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 494; Emmel v. Hayes, 102 Mo. 186, 11 L. R. A. 323.

Where a stepfather assumes the status of a parent toward a stepchild, the presumption is that they hold toward each other the relation of parent and child. Services rendered for each other cannot be referred to a contractual relation between them. No such relation will be presumed to exist, but the contrary.

Schouler, Dom. Rel. 4th ed. § 273; Gillett v. Camp, 27 Mo. 541.

The terms of the alleged contract and the alleged acts of part performance must be clearly and definitely proved. Nothing can be left to mere inference. If an inference is allowable at all, it must be a necessary and inevitable inference, drawn from facts clearly and definitely proved.

Veth v. Gierth, 92 Mo. 97; Taylor v. Williams, 45 Mo. 80; Paris v. Haley, 61 Mo. 453; Tedford v. Trimble, 87 Mo. 226; Wendover v. Baker, 121 Mo. 273.

And the contract must be established in all its terms beyond a reasonable doubt.

Johnson v. Quarles, 46 Mo. 423; Berry v. Hartzell, 91 Mo. 132.

There is no mutuality in the contract proved. Glass v. Roire, 103 Mo. 513; Waterman, Spec. Perf. § 199.

The alleged acceptance by plaintiff of the farm given to him by his stepfather in alleged consideration of his marriage with Bartlett's daughter and without anything indicating that this farm was to be a part of the property to which plaintiff would be entitled, is inconsistent with the plaintiff's contention that he was to have an equal share with Schweer's children in all of Schweer's property, and is a waiver of the alleged earlier contract.

Tolson v. Tolson, 10 Mo. 736; Fry, Spec. Perf. 3d Am. ed. §§ 1003, 1008, 1015, 1017.

The minor defendants ought not to be deprived of their land.

Emmel v. Hayes, 102 Mo. 186, 11 L. R. A. 323; Taylor v. Von Schraeder, 107 Mo. 206; Johnson v. Hurley, 115 Mo. 513; Browne, Stat. Fr. pp. 480, 488, 490.

The contract must not only be proved in a general way but its terms must be so precise and exact that neither party could reasonably misunderstand them.

Wendover v. Baker, 121 Mo. 273; 2 Beach, Eq. Jur. § 584.

Mr. Robert Walker, for respondent:

A stepfather is not entitled to the services and earnings of a stepchild, nor under any obligations to support it. From the duty of a parent to provide for and support a child results the corresponding right of the parent to the earnings and services of the child.

Schouler, Dom. Rel. 3d ed. §§ 243, 273; 2 Kent, Com. pp. 193, 218; Worcester v. Marchant, 14 Pick. 510.

An agreement to make a will in a particular way is valid if supported by sufficient consideration, and although oral, if partly performed is enforceable.

Wright v. Tinsley, 30 Mo. 389; Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37; Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101; Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647, 60 Am. Rep. 270; Fuchs v. Fuchs, 48 Mo. App. 18.

A contract for the adoption of a child and leaving all of one's property upon such person's death to such child is a valid contract, 31 L. R. A.

and upon performance of the duties as an adopted child by such a child, such contract or agreement, although oral, is taken out of the statute of frauds and will be specifically enforced.

Sharkey v. McDermott, supra; Healey v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340; Teats v. Flanders, 118 Mo. 689.

The agreement sued upon and proved in this cause was one not only in consideration of marriage, but also that Schweer should adopt the plaintiff and take the latter as his own child, and should upon his death leave his property to the plaintiff. Such contract, if in writing, would be a valid contract; and such contract after being completely performed on the part of the plaintiff's mother and plaintiff, and after Schweer had all the advantages from such performance, is not within the statute and will be specifically enforced.

Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370, 12 N. J. Eq. 142; Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246.

The agreement in this cause was based upon most meritorious and valuable consideration.

1 Throop, Validity of Verbal Agreements, § 719; Miller v. Goodwin, 8 Gray, 542; Crane v. Gough, 4 Md. 316; 1 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. p. 431.

The statute of marriage contracts pleaded by appellants has only application to existing estates, and does not apply to transactions like the case at bar.

Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 6853.

When a marriage has been contracted upon faith of a verbal promise equity should not then suffer the statute to be interposed as a shield in defeating the performance of such promise relied upon.

1 Throop, Validity of Verbal Agreements, § 720; Durham v. Taylor, 29 Ga. 166; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 181.

If outside of marriage there is an additional consideration, performance of which would of itself entitle a party to relief, the statute cannot then be interposed as a shield and defense.

1 Throop, Validity of Verbal Agreements, §§ 708, 718; Agnew, Stat. Fr. p. 124; Dygert v. Remerschnider, 32 N. Y. 629; Crane v. Gough, supra; Satterthwaite v. Emley, 4 N. J. Eq. 489, 43 Am. Dec. 618; Riley v. Riley, 35 Conn. 154; Warden v. Jones, 23 Beav. 494; Bradley v. Saddler, 54 Ga. 681; De Biel v. Thomson, 3 Beav. 469; Marcell v. Lady Montacute, Prec. in Ch. 526.

The contract sought to be enforced herein is definite and certain, and the terms are satisfactorily proved.

Vanduyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J. Eq. 142; Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101.

A contract should be supported rather than defeated.

2 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. p. 503.

Plaintiff (outside of the farm on which he resided) had no right to ask any property from Schweer until after the latter's death. Prior to that time he could not by mere application waive any rights which did not accrue until after then.

Huffman v. Hummer, 18 N. J. Eq. 83; Trabue v. North, 2 A. K. Marsh. 361; Melton v. Smith, 65 Mo. 315.

Plaintiff would also be entitled to the farm on which he lives by virtue of the gift and advancement thereof made to him upon his marriage by Schweer, and by virtue of taking possession thereupon of said farm and making lasting improvements.

Browne, Stat. Fr. 3d ed. § 216; Dugan v. Gittings, 3 Gill. 138, 43 Am. Dec. 806; Wright v. Tinsley, 80 Mo. 398; West v. Bundy, 78 Mo. 407; Anderson v. Shockley, 82 Mo. 250.

Sherwood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The testimony of Frederick and Henrietta Kotwitz (at whose house Augusta Nowack was then living, with the illegitimate son, the plaintiff, then some two years old) abundantly sustains the allegations of the petition as to the nature, terms, and scope of the agreement entered into between Eberhard H. Schweer, deceased, and said Augusta. There was no evidence to the contrary, and the lower court, after findings suitable to the occasion, decreed that "a child's share, or the one fourth part of all the estate and property of the said Eberhard H. Schweer, be decreed to plaintiff, subject to the right of dower of the widow, the defendant Augusta Schweer, in all the real and personal estate; that all the estate and property left by the said Schweer at his death is hereby declared in trust to be distributed as follows: That plaintiff receive the one-fourth part thereof, subject to the right of dower of the widow aforesaid; and that this one-fourth part comprise the said land on which he now resides, and which by the last will of said Schweer was given to plaintiff's children, and the balance of all property and estate be divided as directed in the last will of said Schweer; and that, for the purpose of dividing said property, contribution is hereby ordered of the defendants Henry P. Schweer, Fred W. Schweer, and Ferdinand Schweer, in proportion to the value and amount of property respectively given to each of them in said will; and that the executor of said Eberhard H. Schweer be adjudged to pay the costs incurred in this suit out of the estate of said Eberhard H. Schweer."

Inasmuch as the circuit court did not find plaintiff entitled to specific performance of the additional contract made with plaintiff as alleged in the second count in this petition, and did not decree performance thereof, and inasmuch as he is content with, and does not appeal from, the decree, it is unnecessary to consider the correctness of the ruling which omitted to specifically perform such additional contract. But while this is true, and while plaintiff is in no position to complain, yet it is otherwise as to the minor defendants, his children. To them the will of Schweer gave the farm on which plaintiff resided, and on which he had thus lived for some ten years at the time of Schweer's death. The contract made between plaintiff's mother and Schweer only entitled plaintiff to one fourth of whatever property, real or personal, Schweer had at the time of his death. Under such a contract, however, he was not entitled to have his share assigned in any particular portion of the property thus left. But his minor heirs were entitled to just what was devised to them by Schweer, estimated to be worth not over $1,200. Of this right, derived from the will of Schweer, they could not lawfully be deprived, even if the deposition of Frederick Kotwitz, taken before they were made parties to the proceeding, and which tended to prove the original contract, could have been received against them. That portion of the decree which sought to deprive these minors of their rights under the will, or, rather, which ignored those rights altogether, is therefore erroneous, and cannot be permitted to stand. As we understand the decree, although it is not entirely unambiguous, it provides substantially for the specific performance of the contract mentioned in the first count in plaintiff's petition; and in so far as it does this it is correct, and incorrect only to the extent already stated. If the points to be presently passed upon are ruled in plaintiff's favor, a decree, however, can be entered in this court which will put matters in proper shape in reference to the rights of all concerned.

2. The ruling was proper which denied the admissibility of Augusta Nowack as a witness. She was a party to the contract, as well as to the cause of action, and, by reason of this, was incompetent. Wendover v. Baker, 121 Mo. 273, and cases cited; Lins v. Lenhardt, 127 Mo. 271; Chapman v. Dougherty, 87 Mo. 617, 56 Am. Rep. 469; Meier v. Thieman, 90 Mo. 433; Berry v. Hurtzell, 91 Mo. 132; Leach v. McFadden, 110 Mo. 584; Messimer v. McCray, 113 Mo. 382.

3. Such contracts as the one here in litigation, in so far as they relate to the adoption of a child and making him an heir, etc., have often been recognized and enforced in this state and elsewhere. Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101; Wright v. Tinsley, 30 Mo. 389; Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37; Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647, 60 Am. Rep. 270; West v. Bundy, 78 Mo. 407; Anderson v. Shockley, 82 Mo. 250; Leach v. McFadden, 110 Mo. 584; Healey v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340; Teats v. Flanders, 118 Mo. 660.

4. It thus comes to be considered whether the contract now under consideration, owing to the peculiar circumstances attendant on its making, will prevent that feature of it mentioned in the next preceding paragraph from being specifically performed. It is urged here, as in the court below, that the contract between Augusta Nowack and Eberhard H. Schweer, being made "in consideration of marriage," and not being in writing, is void by reason of the provisions of § 5186, Rev. Stat. 1889; but this is an erroneous view of that section, because it does not make a contract in consideration of marriage void, but merely prohibits any action from being brought thereon, unless such contract "shall be in writing," etc. 1 Bishop. Married Women, § 807. There have been in England and in this country many decisions on the statute in question, involving the point now in litigation; but it seems to be settled by the weight of authority that, though a parol antenuptial contract is invalid when made solely in consideration of marriage, yet that such contract can stand if, in addition to the marital portion thereof, it has another feature, the performance of which may be reckoned part performance, and thus prevent defeat of the antenuptial agreement, because of not being in writing, provided there was reliance on the promise which is made the basis for specific relief. Taylor v. Beech, 1 Ves. Sr. 297; Ungley v. Ungley, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 78; Browne, Stat. Fr. 5th ed. §§ 217, 459a, and cases cited; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 595; 2 Parsons, Contr. 7th ed. 77, and cases cited; Agnew, Stat. Fr. 124; Dy-gert v. Remerschnider, 32 N. Y. 629; Riley v. Riley, 25 Conn. 154; 1 Bishop, Married Women, § 807; Throop, Validity of Verbal Agreements, § 708. Here Schweer, upon marriage to Augusta Nowack, would not have been entitled to the custody, service, and earnings of plaintiff, but for the latter being surrendered to Schweer by his mother, in furtherance of the parol agreement to that effect. Schouler, Dom. Rel. 5th ed. § 273. "This agreement being proved as aforesaid, and it having been also complied with, as shown by the testimony on the part of plaintiff, supplies such independent, additional, and valuable consideration as will, under the authorities cited, amount to part performance, and take this case out of the purview and operation of the statute of frauds. Although there is testimony that plaintiff, while about seventeen years old, on one occasion struck his stepfather with a stove-lid flter on the head, yet great provocation is shown for this, in that Schweer had called plaintiff's mother a "prostitute." Evidently, Schweer did not regard plaintiff a very undutiful or bad boy, or else his conduct some three years thereafter, in promoting the marriage of plaintiff with Bartlett's daughter, was very reprehensible conduct.

5. But the agreement between the parties may be looked at from an entirely different point of view. On all hands it stands confessed that marriage is a valuable consideration. Lord Coke says: "If a man had given land to a man with his daughter in frank marriage generally, a fee simple had passed without this word 'heirs,' for there is no consideration so much respected in law as the consideration of marriage, in respect of alliance and posterity." Co. Litt. 9b. Elsewhere it is said: "Marriage is the highest consideration known in law." Johnston v. Dilliard, 1 Bay. 292. See also 4 Kent, Com. 464; 1 Bishop, Married Women, §§ 27, 775; Ford v. Stuart, 15 Beav. 499; Greene v. Cramer, 2 Con. & L. 60; Fraser v. Thompson, 1 Giff. 62. Marriage is regarded as one of the strongest considerations in the law, either to raise a use, found a contract, gift, or grant. Holder v. Dickeson, Freem. C. L. Rep. 96; Smith v. Stafford, Hob. 216a; Waters v. Howard, 8 Gill, 262. In a case which arose in Maryland, it was held that an agreement made by a father with his daughter in consideration of her marriage, and by way of advancement and marriage endowment, consummated by marriage, as then contemplated, could not be revoked by the father, Martin, J., saying that the daughter was regarded as a purchaser, as much so as if she had paid for the property an adequate pecuniary consideration, and that the consummation of the marriage was to be considered as the payment of the purchase money. Dugan v. Gittings, 3 Gill, 138. A similar ruling was made where a father promised a man about to marry his daughter that, on the marriage he would give him a sum of money, and the marriage having occurred, the father was 31 L. R. A.

compelled specifically to perform his promise. Chichester v. Vass, 1 Munf. 98, 4 Am. Dec. 531. Yet, notwithstanding this, it is ruled that, as between the parties to the wedlock, the celebration of the marriage is not such part performance as to take it out of the statute. 2 Parsons, Contr. 7th ed. 77; Fry, Spec. Perf. 3d ed. § 598. Commenting on this anomaly in equity jurisprudence, Judge Story says: "The subsequent marriage is not deemed a part performance, taking the case out of the statute, contrary to the rule which prevails in other cases of contract. In this respect it is always treated as a peculiar case, standing on its own grounds." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 18th ed. § 768. See also note to section 720, Throop, Validity of Verbal Agreements, and cases cited; among them, Durham v. Taylor, 29 Ga. 166. "But though marriage be not, cohabitation may be, a sufficient act of part performance. In a separation deed, the husband covenanted with a trustee for the payment of an annuity to his wife. Shortly before the death of the husband, his wife returned to him, upon the faith of a promise made by the husband to the wife and her trustee that, if she would do so, he would continue to pay the annuity, and would charge it upon his real estate. He died without having done so, and it was held that the contract could be enforced against the devisees of the husband, on the ground of part performance." Webster v. Webster, 1 Smale & G. 489, Affirmed 4 De G. M. & G. 437; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 597. This divergence between marriage and other valuable considerations in respect to the doctrine of part performance caused Vice Chancellor Malins to express his regret that such an exception was ever made. Ungley v. Ungley, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 78; Coles v. Pilkington, L. R. 19 Eq. 174. In a case which came to the House of Lords, where the old rule that marriage was not part performance was in terms (though unnecessarily) reasserted, Lord Cottenham very forcibly presented the equitable ground for the contrary opinion, remarking: "The principle . . . of equity is this.—that if a party holds out inducements to another to celebrate a marriage, and holds them out deliberately, plainly, and the other party consents, and celebrates the marriage in consequence of them, if he had good reason to expect that it was intended that he should have the benefit of the proposal which was so held out, a court of equity will take care that he is not disappointed, and will give effect to the proposal." Hammersley v. Baron De Biel, 12 Clark & F. 45. The true basis of specific performance being enforced is that, unless enforced, it would operate a fraud on the party who seeks its enforcement, it being impossible to restore such party to his status quo. Browne, Stat. Fr. §§ 448, 487, and cases cited; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 761, and cases cited. "The fraud," says Judge Wells in Glass v. Hulbert, "most commonly treated as taking an agreement out of the statute of frauds is that which consists in setting up the statute against its performance, after the other party has been induced to make expenditures, or a change of situation in regard to the subject-matter of the agreement, or upon the supposition that it was to be carried into execution, and the assumption of rights thereby to be acquired; so that the refusal to complete the execution of the agreement is not merely a denial of rights which it was intended to confer, but the infliction of an unjust and unconscionable injury and loss." Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 85, 8 Am. Rep. 418. Now, it would seem that, marriage being such a valuable consideration, its celebration in conformity to a previous parol promise made, placing especially as it does the female contracting party in a situation where she cannot be restored to her former condition, ought to be regarded as such a benignant fraud upon her if such parol promise be not performed as a court of conscience should not tolerate, but acting on principle, rather than precedent, should decree the complete enforcement of such agreement, notwithstanding the statute. This is what courts of equity are doing in other cases every day, despite the statute, and no sound reason can be urged why a court of equity should grant relief in the latter class of cases, and refuse it in the former. Indeed, more cogent reasons appear to exist in favor of disregarding the statute in instances like the present than in ordinary cases. This view of the matter is also entertained by the learned author heretofore cited. Browne, Stat. Fr. § 459. Instances are by no means infrequent where contracts between husband and wife entered into before marriage will be enforced in equity, although they should be avoided at law; "for equity will not suffer the intention of the parties to be defeated by the very act which is designed to give effect to such a contract." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1370, and cases cited.

6. For these reasons, inasmuch as we are not hampered by former rulings in this court on this point, we hold that marriage in the circumstances disclosed by the record does amount to a valuable consideration and part performance; and that plaintiff having done on his part all that it was contracted by his mother he should do, the contract made by his mother for herself and him having been fully executed on their parts, this constitutes of itself a distinct and independent reason why the statute should not be allowed to obstruct the pathway to the relief plaintiff seeks.

7. The premises considered, a decree will be entered in this court in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the facts found by the lower court, giving him one fourth of all the real and personal estate left by Eberhard H. Schweer, and requiring contribution on the part of the three sons of Schweer; but this will be done subject, of course, to the rights of the widow as directed by the will. And, further, the decree must accord to the minor heirs of plaintiff what the will has directed should be theirs; but, of course, the devise to them cannot be permitted to diminish what plaintiff became entitled to under the agreement made by his mother with Schweer. Plaintiff will take in value, in real and personal property, precisely what he would have taken had his children not been mentioned in the will, to wit, the one-fourth part in value of all real and personal property of which Schweer died seised. Inasmuch, however, as those heirs have been compelled to come to this court in order to secure their rights, the cost of this appeal as between them and their father, will be taxed against him.

All concur.

Rehearing denied.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

Joseph R. EDWARDS, Respt.,

v.

A. A. LESUEUR, Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. The establishment of the seat of government of a state is a proper subject of constitutional control and therefore of constitutional amendment.
2. Conditions imposed and powers delegated by a proposed constitutional amendment to change the location of the seat of state government whereby, in addition to the vote of the people which the existing Constitution requires for an amendment, donations of property and the erection of state buildings to be approved and accepted by a commission are made a condition of the change of location, will not make the proposed amendment inoperative, since, upon the vote of the people adopting the amendment, the conditions will be imposed and the powers delegated by the Constitution itself.

3. The power to select and afterwards to change its own seat of government if deemed expedient is necessarily implied in a state Constitution providing for a Republican form of government not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and making no limitation upon its political or governmental power or the power to manage its own internal affairs.

4. An implied contract against the removal of the seat of state government from its original location is not made with property owners at that place by its location there.

5. There can be no irrevocable law to prevent the removal of the seat of state government, as this involves a governmental subject.

6. A vote in favor of a proposed constitutional amendment taken by yeas and nays and entered in full on the legislative journals in full compliance with the constitutional provisions on this subject is sufficient without having the resolution read on different days or in other respects taking the course required for ordinary legislation.

NOTE.—As to the power of the court to determine the question of the adoption of a state Constitution, see Miller v. Johnson (Ky.) 15 L. R. A. 524, and note.

For other cases as to adoption of constitutional 31 L. R. A.

amendments, see State, Torreyson, v. Grey (Nev.) 19 L. R. A. 134; Seneca Min. Co. v. Secretary of State (Mich.) 9 L. R. A. 770; Worman v. Hagan (Md.) 21 L. R. A. 716; Livermore v. Waite (Cal.) 25 L. R. A. 812.

(February 5, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cole County enjoining him from proceeding to submit to the vote of the electors of the state a proposed amendment to the state Constitution which was intended to change the place of the seat of government. Reversed.

Statement by Macfarlane, J.:

This is a suit by plaintiff, as a property owner of Jefferson city, to restrain the secretary of state from discharging the duties enjoined upon him in respect to submitting to a vote of the electors of the state a proposal, passed by the last general assembly, for amending the Constitution so as to provide therein for the removal of the seat of government from the city of Jefferson to the city of Sedalia. The amendment was proposed under a concurrent resolution, and is as follows:

"Concurrent resolution submitting to the qualified voters of Missouri an amendment to the Constitution thereof, providing for the removal of the seat of government from the city of Jefferson to the city of Sedalia.

"Be it resolved by the house of representatives, the Senate concurring therein, as follows: At the general election to be held on Tuesday next following the first Monday in November, A. D. 1896, an amendment to the Constitution of Missouri shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the state in the following words: 'The seat of government shall be removed from the city of Jefferson and located at the city of Sedalia. Any person or persons may grant or donate to the state any land, sum of money, or other thing of value to be used for the purpose of erecting the necessary public buildings at the city of Sedalia, or may deposit with the governor sufficient securities or obligations to guarantee the erection of such buildings. Whenever a suitable capitol building, having the same or greater floor area and appointments as the present capitol and supreme court buildings, and equal thereto in stability and architectural merit, together with grounds of the same or greater area, and an armory building likewise similar or superior to the present armory, and an executive mansion likewise similar or superior to the present building used as the governor's residence, together with the grounds and appurtenances, shall be erected at the city of Sedalia, the same shall be accepted by a commission, consisting of the governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and attorney general, and such officers shall at once remove the public records and personal property to such new buildings, and the city of Sedalia shall thereupon become the permanent seat of government. The plans and location of the capitol, armory, and executive mansion and grounds shall first be approved by such commission. The county of Pettis and Sedalia township, in said county, may each vote an issue of twenty-five nontaxable 3 per cent bonds, not to exceed in amount, respectively for each, $100,000, and such bonds may be ordered issued by a majority vote of those voting at a special election called for that purpose by the county court, and conducted generally in the manner provided by law for the issuing of bonds for the erection of courthouses. Said county and township bonds shall be given to the state for the purpose of assisting in paying for the erection of the buildings provided for herein; and such bonds, if voted and issued, shall be delivered to the governor of the state, and held by him in trust for the benefit of any person or persons who may erect such suitable public buildings, to be given to such person or persons on their completion and acceptance. The commission hereby constituted shall have full power, by a majority vote, to carry out the provisions and intent of this amendment, and such new public buildings shall be completed, as near as may be possible, on or before the 1st day of November, A. D. 1899, unless such commission, for good cause, grant further time. The state shall in no manner become liable for, nor shall it pay any part whatever of the cost of the new public buildings herein provided for, and the county before mentioned shall pay the entire cost of moving the records and personal property of the state to the new public buildings, so that the state shall be at no expense whatever in the change of the seat of government."

It is charged in the petition that said resolution is, and if adopted, will be, invalid, for the reason that it does not provide that the same shall go into effect "as an operative amendment to said Constitution, upon its adoption by a majority of the qualified voters of the state voting in favor thereof, but, on the contrary, by its terms and provisions, its taking effect, and becoming an operative and binding part of said Constitution, is made to depend on the further facts or condition that some person or persons shall donate or grant to the state land or money or other valuable thing, for the purpose, or erect the necessary public buildings at the city of Sedalia for the use of the state, or shall deposit with the governor of the state sufficient securities or obligations to guarantee the erection of such building, and also on the further fact or condition that a suitable capitol building for the state of Missouri, having the same or greater floor area and appointments than the present capitol and supreme court buildings, and equal thereto in stability and architectural merit, together with grounds of the same or greater area than those now possessed by the state at the city of Jefferson, and also that a state armory and executive mansion similar or superior to the present ones owned by the state, together with grounds and appurtenances thereto, shall be erected or furnished at the city of Sedalia, and shall be accepted by a commission consisting of the governor, secretary of state, state auditor, treasurer, and attorney general of Missouri, and also on the further fact or condition that the plans and location of said new capitol building, armory, executive mansion and grounds therefor, shall be approved by said commission." It is further charged that the resolution is invalid, and, if adopted by the necessary vote of the people, would not become an amendment to the Constitution, for the reason that it was not read on three different days in each house of the general assembly, and did not take the course of a bill in said assembly. A further charge is that, by the act of Congress admitting the state of Missouri into the Union, the action of the convention of the territory called in pursuance of said act, and the subsequent legislation of the state in accepting and acting upon the conditions of said act, the sea of government was established at Jefferson City, and cannot be changed without the consent of the United States. It was also charged, in substance, that under said enabling act, and the acceptance thereof by the people of the territory, certain lands were donated by the United States to the state of Missouri, upon which to locate its seat of government, and such lands were sold by the state with the assurance to purchasers that the seat of government would permanently remain at the city of Jefferson, and such purchasers, and their assigns, relying on the good faith of the state, made valuable and lasting improvements thereon, by reason of all which they acquired certain vested rights, which should be protected and preserved. A general demurrer to the petition was overruled, and, defendant refusing to plead further, judgment was rendered for plaintiff on the demurrer, and a perpetual injunction was granted. From this judgment defendant appealed.

Messrs. R. F. Walker, Attorney General, Lee & McKeighan, and John H. Bothwell, for appellant:

Missouri is a free and independent state, and all political power is vested in the people, from whom government originates, and who have the inherent, sole, and exclusive right to alter or revise their Constitution to any extent they may choose, subject only to the limitations of the Constitution of the United States.

Mo. Const. art. 2, §§ 1-3; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. chap. 3, pp. 41, 45; Black, Const. Prohibitions, pp. 44-49; Potter's Dwarrr. Stat. ed. 1871, 346-348; Blair v. Ridgely, 41 Mo. 63, 97 Am. Dec. 248; Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 39, 15 Am. Rep. 568; Re Gibson, 21 N. Y. 9.

The Constitution of this state is specific, careful, and complete in its provision for originating and holding a convention for revising and amending the Constitution; and where general revision or amendment is not considered necessary, the general assembly has full power to propose such specific amendments as a majority of the members elected to each house shall deem expedient.

Mo. Const. art. 15, §§ 1-3.

A proposed constitutional amendment need not be read in each House of the general assembly on three separate days, nor need it take the course of a bill.

Mo. Const. art. 5, § 14, art. 15, §§ 1, 2; Jameson, Const. Conv. 4th ed. §§ 541-543; 3 Cyc. of Political Science, pp. 802, 803; 1 Stimson, Am. Stat. Law, p. 133, §§ 990-996.

In proposing an amendment to the Constitution, the general assembly exercises delegated political power, not ordinary legislative authority. Its members may propose any specific amendment which they may deem expedient, and they are not limited by directions or restrictions made applicable by the Constitution to ordinary legislative acts alone.

Mo. Const. art. 15, §§ 1, 2; Borgeaud, Adoption and Amendment of Constitutions, pp. 183, 323; Jameson, Const. Conv. 4th ed. §§ 547-555, and cases cited; 1 Stimson, Am. Stat. Law, 31 L. R. A.

p. 133, §§ 990-996; 3 Cyc. of Political Science, pp. 802, 803; 1 Bryce, Am. Commonwealth, 2d ed. pp. 419-423; State, Morris, v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590; Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441; State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436.

Wide latitude is indulged in favor of propositions to amend state Constitutions:

Jameson, Const. Conv. 4th ed. chap. 8, Amend. Const. p. 9; University of North Carolina v. McLeer, 72 N. C. 76; State, Torreyson, v. Grey, 21 Nev. 378, 19 L. R. A. 134; Re Gibson, 21 N. Y. 9; Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 100; Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700; State, Hudd, v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318; State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 636; Worman v. Hagan, 78 Md. 152, 21 L. R. A. 716; State, Morris, v. Mason, supra; Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441; State, Woods, v. Tooker, 15 Mont. 8, 25 L. R. A. 560; State v. Cox, supra.

State Constitutions now are often used to enact fundamental laws by ratification of the voters, which would otherwise be left to ordinary legislation or be in conflict with other provisions of the organic law.

Mo. Const. arts. 9-14; 1 Stimson, Am. Stat. Law, § 1, pt. 1, note; Borgeaud, Adoption and Amendment of Constitutions, Introductory note, pp. 9, 10, 40, 146-151; 1 Bryce, Am. Commonwealth, 2d ed. pp. 419, 429, 436, 438, 441, 442, and 447; Poore, Federal and State Constitutions, vols. 1, 2; State, Morris, v. Mason, supra.

No provision of the present or any former state Constitution has ever expressly established the seat of government at Jefferson City.

Mo. Const. 1820, art. 11, §§ 1-4; Mo. Laws 1821.

After the capital was established at Jefferson City, the people by express constitutional limitation subsequently withdrew from the legislative department the power to remove the seat of government by simple legislative act. But for that express limitation the seat of government might be removed by ordinary statute law, because the exceptions to a power granted mark its extent.

Mo. Const. 1865, art. 11, § 10; Id. 1875, art. 4, § 56; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 191, 6 L. ed. 69; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 438, 6 L. ed. 635; Morris v. Powell, 125 Ind. 281, 9 L. R. A. 326; State, Lamb, v. Cunningham, 33 Wis. 90, 17 L. R. A. 145.

Neither in the "enabling act," passed by Congress in 1820, nor in the "ordinance of acceptance" of the constitutional convention of the state, will be found anything which deprives or limits the state in its sovereign right to re establish its seat of government.

Act of Congress 1820, 1 Mo. Rev. Stat. pp. 47-50; Ordinance of Acceptance 1820, 1 Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, pp. 51-63; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 473, 474; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 403; 2 Beach, Inj. § 1390; Armstrong v. Dearborn County Comrs. 4 Blackf. 208; Elwell v. Tucker, 1 Blackf. 285; Newton v. Mahoning County Comrs. 26 Ohio St. 618, 100 U. S. 548, 25 L. ed. 710; Alley v. Denson, 8 Tex. 297; Gilmore v. Hayworth, 26 Tex. 89; Harrell v. Lynch, 65 Tex. 149; Adams v. Logan County, 11 Ill. 336; Harris v. Shaw, 13 Ill. 456; Atty. Gen. v. Lake County Supers. 33 Mich. 289.

If the expression of the will and desire of the enacting power be complete and final, then the law is valid and binding when enacted, even where its terms provide for certain acts by others, and for certain facts or conditions to be ascertained or found before certain prescribed results shall follow.

Sedgwick Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. pp. 135-138, and cases cited; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 98-101, 137-146, and cases cited; Mo. First Const. (1820) art. 11, §§ 1-4; Walton v. Greenwood, 60 Me. 356; State v. Parker, 26 Vt. 357; Pratt v. Allen, 13 Conn. 119; Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 583; Newton v. Mahoning County Comrs. 26 Ohio St. 618; Starin v. Genoa, 23 N. Y. 439; Bank of Rome v. Rome, 18 N. Y. 38; The Aurora v. United States, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 382, 3 L. ed. 378; State, Park, v. Portage County Supers. 24 Wis. 49; Callam v. Saginaw, 50 Mich. 7; State, Maggard, v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606; Ex parte Suann, 96 Mo. 44; Lammert v. Lidwell, 62 Mo. 188, 21 Am. Rep. 411; St. Louis City & County v. Alexander, 23 Mo. 483; Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 188; Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491; People, Vermule, v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 23.

The general assembly has necessarily the right to construe the Constitution in exercising its delegated powers, and the courts will presume that legislative acts based on legislative construction of the organic law are constitutional, unless it is shown that the legislative act was and is void because necessarily repugnant to some specific clause of the Constitution pointed out.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 45, 54, 192-222 et seq.; State, Maggard, v. Pond, supra; Kelly v. Meeks, 87 Mo. 396; Phillips v. Missouri P. R. Co. 86 Mo. 540; State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110; State, Harris, v. Laughlin, 75 Mo. 147; State v. Able, 65 Mo. 357; State, Circuit Atty. v. Cape Girardeau & S. L. R. Co. 48 Mo. 468; Stephens v. St. Louis Nat. Bank, 43 Mo. 390; Hamilton v. St. Louis County Ct. 15 Mo. 13; Edwards v. Williamson, 70 Ala. 145; Ex parte Selma & G. R. Co. 45 Ala. 696, 6 Am. Rep. 722.

Messrs. A. M. Hough, Jacob C. Fisher, J. W. Zevely, Karnes, Holmes & Krauthoff, Silver & Brown, W. S. Pope, J. R. Edwards, and H. Clay Ewing, for respondent:

Plaintiff, as a citizen and taxpayer of the city of Jefferson, and of the state of Missouri, is entitled to maintain this injunction proceeding to contest the validity of the proposed constitutional amendment, and, if the same be invalid, to restrain the secretary of state from taking the steps provided for its submission to the voters of the state.

Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 25 L. R. A. 312; State, Hughlett, v. Hughes, 104 Mo. 459; Francis v. Blair, 89 Mo. 291; Valle v. Ziegler, 84 Mo. 214; Ewing v. Jefferson City Bd. of Edu. 72 Mo. 436; Wagner v. Meety, 69 Mo. 150; Ranney v. Bader, 67 Mo. 476; Mathis v. Cameron, 62 Mo. 504; Rubey v. Shain, 54 Mo. 207; Neumeyer v. Missouri & M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 81, 14 Am. Rep. 394; State, Circuit Atty. v. Saline County Ct. 51 Mo. 350.

The proposed amendment, in the form submitted, is not authorized by the Constitution, art. 15, §§ 1, 2.

The Constitution being amendable only in 81 L. R. A.

pursuance of the provisions contained in the Constitution itself, the mode prescribed is the measure and the limit of the power to amend.

Russie v. Brazzell, 128 Mo. 93; State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 308, 29 Am. Dec. 636; Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 100; Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700; Opinion of the Justices, 6 Cush. 573; State v. Seft, 69 Ind. 505; Re Constitutional Convention, 14 R. I. 649; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa. 543; State, Stevenson, v. Tuffy, 19 Nev. 391; Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 40, 15 Am. Rep. 563; Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479; State, Morris, v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590; Miller v. Johnson, 92 Ky. 589; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 42, 43; Jameson, Const. Conv. § 25.

The general assembly, in proposing amendments to the Constitution, does not act in the exercise of its legislative authority, but as a special agent empowered by an express grant.

Hatch v. Stoneman, 66 Cal. 632; Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 25 L. R. A. 312; Re Senate File 31, 25 Neb. 864; Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 42, 44; Jameson, Const. Conv. § 25.

The state legislatures exercising their ordinary legislative functions have all such powers as have not been surrendered or prohibited to them.

Hall v. Wisconsin, 103 U. S. 5, 26 L. ed. 302; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 206.

The rule that all the presumptions are in favor of the constitutionality of an ordinary legislative enactment, and that it will not be held unconstitutional unless clearly so, obviously does not apply to constitutional amendments coming through the legislative department as a special agency, or having their origin in an express warrant.

Livermore v. Waite, supra; Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 489; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 39, 93, 94; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 563.

The Constitution does not authorize or permit the legislature to propose an amendment thereto which will not, upon its adoption by the people, become an effective part of the Constitution, nor one which, if ratified, will take effect only at the will of other persons or upon the approval of such other persons of some specified act or condition.

Livermore v. Waite, supra.

The legislature is only permitted to submit an amendment, not something that is not an amendment, under the designation of an amendment.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 57, note.

The future event, the happening of the contingency, or the fulfillment of the condition on which a law, even in the case of an ordinary legislative enactment, takes effect, can afford no additional efficacy to the law; it must be "complete and effective when passed."

State, Dome, v. Wilcox, 45 Mo. 458; Lammert v. Lidwell, 62 Mo. 188, 21 Am. Rep. 411.

An unconstitutional enactment is not a law; it binds no one and protects no one.

Little Rock & Ft. S. Railway v. Worthen, 120 U. S. 97, 30 L. ed. 588.

Every department of the government, and every official of every department, may, at any time when a duty is to be performed, be required to pass upon a question of constitutional construction.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 54.

The proposed amendment is objectional because it involves the delegation of legislative power to the commissioners and other persons referred to therein.

Ruggles v. Collier, 43 Mo. 353; St. Louis, Murphy, v. Clemens, 43 Mo. 395; Saline County v. Wilson, 61 Mo. 237; Matthews v. Alexandria, 68 Mo. 115, 30 Am. Rep. 776; St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 20 L. R. A. 721; St. Louis v. Howard, 119 Mo. 41.

The general assembly cannot by statute define the term "constitutional amendment" so as to bind the courts.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 57, note 1; State, Baltimore, v. Kirkley, 29 Md. 85; Ruggles v. Collier, supra; State, Benton, v. Boice County Comrs. 140 Ind. 506; Folsom v. Township of Ninety-Six, 59 Fed. Rep. 67; Quaker City Nat. Bank v. Nolan County, 59 Fed. Rep. 660, Aff'd in 66 Fed. Rep. 833.

A law may be within the inhibitions of the Constitution as well by implication as by expression.

Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 207.

And when it is, it is the duty of the courts to so declare.

Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.

The state cannot under the act admitting it into the Union, and its ordinance accepting the same, change its permanent seat of government without the consent of the United States.

Congressional Act of Admission, Mo. Rev. Stat. 1825, pp. 35-39; Ordinance of Acceptance, Mo. Rev. Stat. 1825, pp. 40-42; Lessieur v. Price, 58 U. S. 12 How. 59, 13 L. ed. 893; Lessieur v. Price, 12 Mo. 14.

When a state descends from the plane of its sovereignty, and enters into a contract, it is bound like an individual.

Davis v. Gray, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 232, 21 L. ed. 457; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 328, 330, note 4.

Macfarlane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It has been said that "the right of the judiciary to declare a statute void, and to arrest its execution, is one which, in the opinion of all courts, is coupled with responsibilities so grave that it is never to be exercised, except in very clear cases; one department of the government is bound to presume that another has acted rightly." Slate v. Addington, 77 Mo. 117. The power and jurisdiction of the judiciary to declare a proposal for an amendment to the Constitution ineffectual, and to arrest its submission to the people, which we are now called upon to exercise, is coupled with far more serious responsibilities. To so declare would wrest from the people the expressly reserved power to amend their organic law as they may deem fit and expedient. In respect to the subject of amendments to the Constitution, that instrument declares: "The people of this state have the inherent . . . right . . . to alter and abolish their Constitution and form of government whenever they may deem it necessary to their safety and happiness, provided, such change be not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States." Const. 1875 art. 2, § 2. That all just government is founded upon the consent of the people is a maxim which has been held sacred by the American people since the Declaration of Independence, in 1776. Under our system, the people are the source of all governmental power. In recognition of this principle, the people of this state, first in delegated convention, and afterwards by their own voice, through the polls, proclaimed, in their bill of rights (§ 1), "that all political power is vested in and derived from the people; that all government of right originates from the people, is founded upon their will only, and is instituted solely for the good of the whole." Upon the adoption of the Constitution of 1875 by a popular vote, the direct power of the people was withdrawn from governmental affairs; and the administration of the functions of government was delegated to the executive, legislative, and judiciary departments of state, to be exercised by officers selected by the people, with such limitations upon the powers of each as they saw fit to impose. But the right to govern was not thereby surrendered or abandoned. The power was reserved to resume control, either of any special subject-matter, by amendment of their organic law, or of the entire subject of government, by means of a constitutional convention. This reserved power is declared in §§ 1, 2, and 3 of article 15. Sections 1 and 2, relating to amendments, read:

"Sec. 1. This Constitution may be amended and revised only in pursuance of the provisions of this article.

"Sec. 2. The general assembly may, at any time, propose such amendments to this Constitution as a majority of the members elected to each House shall deem expedient; and the vote thereon shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered in full on the journals. The proposed amendments shall be published with the laws of that session, and also shall be published weekly in some newspaper, if such there be, within each county in the state, for four consecutive weeks next preceding the general election then next ensuing. The proposed amendments shall be submitted to a vote of the people, each amendment separately, at the next general election thereafter, in such manner as the general assembly may provide. If a majority of the qualified voters of the state, voting for and against any one of said amendments, shall vote for such amendment, the same shall be deemed and taken to have been ratified by the people, and shall be valid and binding, to all intents and purposes, as a part of this Constitution."

It will be seen that no measure of power over any governmental subject has been wholly surrendered. Power is retained, and through the action of the general assembly, which is composed of the nearest representatives of the people, control may be resumed, over any subject-matter, and changes made in the organic law in respect thereto. It is true, the general assembly can only propose amendments under the power delegated to it by the people. This power must be construed according to the general principles which govern courts in the construction of delegated powers. In the exercise of such power, every substantial requirement must be observed and followed, or there can be no valid amendment. In respect to the mode of proposal and submission, the provisions of the Constitution must be regarded as absolute. The courts should not hesitate to see that the Constitution is obeyed in these particulars. State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 306, 29 Am. Dec. 636. But whether the courts have jurisdiction to come between the people and their authorized and accredited agents and representatives, and arrest their will in respect to what the organic law should be, is an entirely different and more serious question. The Constitution is intended for observance by the judiciary as well as other departments of government. The judges are sworn to support the Constitution, and the provision for its amendment is as obligatory upon the courts as any other part of it. "The general assembly may, at any time, propose such amendments to this Constitution as a majority of the members elected to each House shall deem expedient," is the unequivocal letter of attorney given by the people. No stronger language could have been used to express authority as unlimited as the subject upon which the agent is authorized to act. The character—that is, the substance and extent—of the amendments is left entirely and exclusively to the discretion of the general assembly. The right to propose is as unlimited as is the right to adopt by vote of the people themselves. It is as unlimited as would be the power of a regularly called and constituted convention to propose specific provisions. The courts have nothing to do with the wisdom or policy of such proposal. The people have reserved the power of review to themselves. Amendments derive their force from the action of the people, and not from the action of the assembly which proposes them. The power—or, rather, the want of power—in the courts to review the policy or wisdom of constitutional amendments is thus expressed by Mr. Justice Brewer (then of the supreme court of Kansas) in Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 709. "But the questions of policy are not questions for the courts. They are wrought out and fought out in the legislature and before the people. Here the single question is one of power. We make no laws; we change no Constitutions; we inaugurate no policy. When the legislature enacts a law, the only question which we can decide is, whether the limitations of the Constitution have been infringed upon. When a constitutional amendment has been submitted, the single inquiry for us is, whether it has received the sanction of popular approval in the manner prescribed by the fundamental law. So that whatever may be the individual opinions of the justices of this court as to the wisdom or folly of any law or constitutional amendment, and notwithstanding the right which as individual citizens we may exercise with all other citizens in expressing through the ballot box our personal approval or disapproval of proposed constitutional changes, as a court, our single inquiry is, have constitutional requirements been observed, and limits of power been regarded? We have no veto."

91 L. R. A.

There can be no doubt that the question of the establishment of the seat of government is one which is a proper subject of constitutional control, and is therefore a proper subject for amendment. If the people had seen fit, they could have given power to the general assembly to change the seat of government upon any terms it might require. Indeed, the power might have been delegated to the governor, or this court, or to commissioners as was done by the convention of 1820. But no such power was granted, nor did the people remain silent on the subject, and thus leave the matter to the discretion of the assembly, but negatived such power by declaring, "The general assembly shall have no power to remove the seat of government from the city of Jefferson." Const. 1875, art. 4, § 56. It is plain that, in order to secure a removal of the capital, an amendment to the Constitution is necessary. The general assembly deemed it proper that the expediency of a removal to Sedalia should be submitted to the people. It is not seriously insisted that an unconditional proposal for removal would not have been valid. But it is insisted that the amendment, as proposed, is—and, though adopted by the people, would be—invalid on account of the conditions annexed thereto, and the powers delegated to certain officials. What has been said in reference to the unlimited discretion of the general assembly should be a sufficient answer to this objection. The objection is directed against the wisdom of the measure and its expediency. As has been said, these are questions upon which the people are to pass, and over which the courts have no power. The amendment derives its force from the people, and not from the legislature. If ratified, "it shall be valid and binding to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution" is the language of that instrument. Every condition and every delegation of power contained in the amendment will come direct from the people, as a part of the organic law. The people have placed no limitation on their own power in this respect. It will be observed, also, that the amendment does not propose to effect a change in the location of the seat of government, but to provide the means by which a change can be effected. It might have delegated the power to the general assembly to make the change. Instead of doing so, it has provided a means much more complicated, but which the courts are bound to uphold and respect. The people are to judge of the practicability of the methods proposed. If the amendment is adopted it ceases to be a mere resolution of the assembly and becomes, "to all intents and purposes," a part of the Constitution. The conditions will be imposed and the power will be delegated by the Constitution itself.

Much reliance is placed by the plaintiff upon the authority of the case of Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 114, 25 L. R. A. 812, in support of his position. While we have great respect for the supreme court of California, and the distinguished jurists who compose it, yet if the opinion is to be taken as holding that, under such powers as our Constitution confers upon the general assembly in respect to proposing amendments, a proposed amendment, which, by the terms of the Constitution, is to become valid and binding to all intents and purposes, upon its adoption by the people, will be ineffective because conditions are therein imposed and powers are thereby delegated, we are unwilling to give our assent to it. We do not deem it necessary to analyze that opinion, in order to show that no such principle was announced, though expressions used by the judge who wrote the opinion may be open to such construction.

2. The petition charges that, by the act of Congress admitting the state of Missouri into the Union, the action of the convention called in pursuance of said act, and subsequent legislation of the state in conformity to the conditions of said act, the seat of government was established at Jefferson City, and cannot be removed therefrom without the consent of the United States, or to the loss and injury of those who have purchased and improved property in reliance upon the obligation of the state to permanently maintain it there. The control of the United States is supposed to result from the terms of admission proposed by Congress and accepted by the convention. Section 6 of the enabling act (Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 49) provides "that the following propositions be and the same are hereby offered to the convention of the territory of Missouri, when formed, for their free acceptance or rejection, which, if accepted by the convention, shall be obligatory upon the United States." These propositions (five in number) provided for grants of land by the United States to the state of Missouri. The fourth proposition is as follows: "Fourth. That four entire sections of land be and the same are hereby granted to the said state, for the purpose of fixing their seat of government thereon; which said sections shall, under the direction of the legislature of said state, be located as near as may be, in one body, at any time, in such townships and ranges as the legislature aforesaid may select, on any of the public lands of the United States." These propositions were upon the condition that the convention should provide, "by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States, from and after the 1st day of January next shall remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under the authority of the state." The convention of the territory in accepting the terms of admission, declared: "And this convention for and in behalf of the people inhabiting this state, and by authority of said people, do further ordain, decree and declare that this ordinance shall be irrevocable without the consent of the United States." The convention also framed a Constitution, article 9 of which was devoted to the subject of the seat of government of the state, and provided that the legislature should appoint five commissioners for the purpose of selecting the land to be donated, and also a permanent seat of government. If the four sections of land selected were not deemed suitable for a site, they were authorized to select another, and to purchase the necessary land. If the land selected was approved, the commissioners were authorized to lay out a town under the directions of the general assembly. The commissioners were duly appointed by the general assembly; they selected land upon which the city of Jefferson is located; their selection was approved; a town was laid out; lots were sold by the state; and, by an act of the legislature, the permanent seat of government was located at the city of Jefferson, where it has since remained. The contention is that under those various proceedings the state became irrevocably bound to maintain its seat of government at Jefferson City, unless by the consent of the United States, and also that the property owners have secured vested rights in the location of the capital, which the state has no power to take from them, even by a constitutional amendment.

In answer to the first proposition, it may be said, in the first place, that no such condition was coupled with the proposal submitted by the act of Congress. The acceptance should not be construed to be broader than the offer. The irrevocable character of the ordinance must be construed to refer to the conditions which were required to be irrevocable. In the second place, the convention which accepted the terms proposed by Congress, and which formed the state Constitution, did not interpret the act as requiring that the seat of government should be located on the four sections of land which might be selected, for it provided that the commissioners might purchase other land upon which to locate its seat of government. The convention would hardly have made an irrevocable agreement, and immediately proceeded to violate it. Third, the act of admission required a copy of the Constitution, when framed, to be transmitted to Congress. We must presume that the convention did its duty in this regard, and that Congress knew the interpretation that had been given to the grant, and, as the state government has ever been recognized by the United States, that it was satisfied with such interpretation, and ratified it. In the fourth place, the plain terms of the compact negative any intention of the United States to control the state in the future changes of its seat of government. The fourth section of the act authorized the convention to form its own Constitution and state government, provided it should be republican in form, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. No limitation whatever is placed upon its political or governmental power, or the power to manage its own internal affairs. The power, then, to select, and afterwards, if deemed expedient, to change, its own seat of government, is necessarily implied.

3. Nor have the property owners of the city of Jefferson secured such vested rights in the location of the city government, by reason of any implied contract with the state, as will prevent its removal. The Constitution of 1820 declared the exclusive right of the people to regulate the internal government of the state, and to alter their Constitution whenever deemed necessary to their safety and happiness. The reserved power is thus declared by the same convention that accepted the terms of admission of the state into the Union. By this declaration the convention clearly negatives the idea of an intention to bind all future generations to forever maintain the seat of government at such places as might thereafter be selected by commissioners to be appointed by a future legislature. But neither the convention nor the legislature had power, in this respect, to irrevocably bind the people of the state. The right of the people to establish and remove their seat of government at pleasure involves a governmental subject, about which there can be no irrepealable law. An injunction was sought to prevent the removal of a county seat, on the ground that the citizens had secured a vested right therein, which a removal would violate. The case came before the Supreme Court of the United States. That court, speaking through Mr. Justice Swayne, after announcing the principle that one legislature could not bind another as to subjects of a governmental character, illustrated the proposition in this language: "If a state capital were sought to be removed, under the circumstances of this case with respect to the county seat, whatever the public exigencies, or the force of the public sentiment which demanded it, those interested, as are the plaintiffs in error, might, according to their argument, effectually forbid and prevent it; and this result could be brought about by means of a bill in equity, and a perpetual injunction. . . . A proposition leading to such consequences must be unsound. The parent and the offspring are alike." Newton v. Mahoning County Comrs. 100 U. S. 560, 25 L. ed. 711. The claim that property owners will be entitled to compensation in case of a removal is not involved in this proceeding. The power to remove the seat of government does not depend upon the right to compensation. On that question it would be improper for us to express an opinion in advance.

4. Another ground upon which the resolution is claimed to be invalid is that it was not read on three different days in each House of the general assembly, and did not, in other respects, take the course required by the Constitution in ordinary legislation. The provision for adopting resolutions proposing amendments is distinct from and independent of all provisions which are provided for the government of legislative proceedings. The provisions are in themselves complete, and are not in pari materia with those required in the passage of a bill. The general assembly, in proposing amendments, does not, strictly speaking, exercise ordinary legislative power. It acts in behalf of the people of the state, under an express and independent power. The mode of its exercise is prescribed, and must be observed, but the assembly is not required to look outside its power of attorney to ascertain its duty. It is only required, and it is therefore only necessary, that the vote be taken by yeas and nays, and entered in full on the journals. That this was done is not disputed.

We are of the opinion that the proposed amendment, if adopted by the people in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, would be effectual as a part of the organic law of the state. We have not discussed the question whether the remedy by injunction is, in any event, available for the purposes contemplated in this case, because defendant has expressly waived that question, and requested a decision on the broader grounds, which we have accordingly considered.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed.

Brace, Ch. J., and Sherwood and Robinson, JJ., concur. Barclay, J., concurs in the judgment for the reasons stated in paragraphs 1 and 4. Gantt and Burgess, JJ., do not sit.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Ex parte Richard M. LACY.

(.....Va.....)

1. Pool selling is the only form of betting or wager that is punishable by statute which prohibits bets and wagers of all kinds but the title of which is "An Act to Prevent Pool Selling and so forth."
2. More than one object is not embraced in a statute which makes it unlawful to make any bet or wager, or receive, record, register, or forward anything of value to be bet or wagered upon a trial of speed or endurance of any beast, to take place beyond the limits of the state, or to assist in so doing, although the title is "An Act to Prevent Pool Selling and so forth."
3. The words "and so forth" in the title of a statute cannot supply an omission when the title is less comprehensive than the body of the statute.
4. A statute making it unlawful to

NOTE.—For note on the subject of the locality of crime committed through the agency of the mails or of carriers, see State v. Hudson (Mont.) 19 L. R. A. 775.

31 L. R. A.

make or record a bet upon any race between animals in another state is a proper exercise of the police power of the state, and not an unlawful interference with interstate commerce.

5. Forwarding money by telegraph to another state to be wagered on a horse race to take place in a third state may be made a criminal offense in the state from which the money is sent, although it is lawful to make such wagers in the state in which the wager is made.
6. A prisoner committed by a justice of the peace for trial by the county court on the charge of a misdemeanor which is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the justice is entitled to release by habeas corpus.

(April 20, 1896.)

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to procure petitioner's discharge from the custody of the sheriff of Alexandria County to which he had been committed for alleged violation of the statute against pool selling. Petitioner discharged.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. Walton Moore and Samuel G. Brent, for petitioner.

The act of the general assembly of Virginia is in violation of Va. Const. art. 5, § 15, which declares that "no law shall embrace more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title."

If the statute embraces more than one subject it is void, whether or not the subject is expressed in its title. Thomp. Corp. §§ 607, 608.

Although a statute may embrace but one subject, it is still void if that subject be not expressed in its title.

Anderson v. Com. 18 Gratt. 295; Crawford v. Halsted, 20 Gratt. 211; Henrico County Supers. v. McGruder, 84 Va. 828; Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co. v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. 86 Va. 1; Powell v. Brunswick County Supers. 88 Va. 707; Lescallett v. Com. 89 Va. 878; Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209; Com. v. Brown, 91 Va. 762, 28 L. R. A. 110; Cahoon v. Iron Gate Land & I. Co. (Va.) 23 S. E. 767.

The act makes it unlawful to bet or wager or to forward the money, thing, or consideration to be bet or wagered, upon the result of trials of speed taking place without the limits of the commonwealth. The title expresses the purpose or the object to be to prevent pool selling upon the result of trials of speed. Pool selling, which is the object expressed in the title, is not mentioned in the body of the act. At most pool selling is one particular kind of betting, and there are numberless modes of betting that do not resemble it in any way and must be pointed out by other language.

Com. v. Ferry, 146 Mass. 208.

The words "and so forth" must be confined to pool selling, and could not embrace any other mode of betting or wagering.

Cooley, Const. Lim. *55; Fishkill v. Fishkill & B. Pl. Road Co. 22 Barb. 634; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 270; Meisner v. Price, 11 Ind. 199; St. Louis v. Tiesel, 42 Mo. 578; State Hackett, 5 La. Ann. 91; Dano v. M. O. & R. R. Co. 27 Ark. 565; Myers v. Dunn, 49 Conn. 76; Smith v. Walker, 98 Pa. 140.

Petitioner's detention is unlawful unless the process, i. e., the warrant, is a justification of the officer.

4 Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus.

If it appear by the return of the writ that the party be wrongfully committed, or by one that hath not jurisdiction, or for a cause for which a man ought not to be imprisoned, he shall be discharged.

Ex parte Rollin, 80 Va. 314.

Messrs. Francis L. Smith and Edmund Burke, also for petitioner:

In such an act the title would not disclose the object of the law, but would be a cloak under which there would be concealed and hidden the real object of the enactment.

Com. v. Brown, 91 Va. 762, 28 L. R. A. 110.

If the title omits all reference to the main subject of the bill, it cannot give validity to the subject-matter thus ignored.

Rogers v. Manufacturers' Imp. Co. 109 Pa. 109.

The title and the body of the act above quoted have no relation either to the other.

State v. Shaw, 39 Minn. 153; State v. Lovell, 39 N. J. L. 458.
31 L. R. A.

Inconsistent laws passed the same day nullify each other.

King v. Justices of Middlesex, 2 Barn. & Ad. 818.

The acts are inconsistent because chapter 539 purports to prohibit the forwarding of money, etc., to be bet or wagered from any place in the commonwealth to any and every other place, whereas chapter 545 restricts the forwarding, etc., of money, etc., to be bet or wagered to definite and specified localities, to wit, to or for any race course.

State, Atty. Gen. v. Heidorn, 74 Mo. 410.

Chapter 545 must be assumed to have last received the approval of the executive because of its position in the public acts of assembly, it appearing, in the order of priority, six chapters subsequent to the other act and is therefore the final expression of the legislative will. It repeals chapter 539 by implication.

United States v. Tynen, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 154; Fox v. Com. 16 Gratt. 1.

Chapter 539 is obnoxious to that provision of the Federal Constitution which declares that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes.

Art. 1, § 8, subsec. 3.

The act of betting or making wagers on trials of speed of horses is not prohibited by the laws of West Virginia, and the laws of this state can have no extraterritorial operation in the absence of express compact between it and other states.

Hendricks v. Com. 75 Va. 934.

A statute of this state punishing betting on horse races did not apply to a case where the wager was made by telegraphic communication between a person in this state offering to make the wager and its acceptance by a person in another state.

Lescallett v. Com. 89 Va. 878.

The act of transmitting or forwarding money from one state to another state, to be there employed or used in a manner lawful by the laws of the latter state, is interstate commerce and cannot be regulated, restricted, or inhibited by the laws of any state.

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. 88 Va. 95, 13 L. R. A. 107.

Sunday laws which attempt to interfere with a company transacting interstate business on that day are void.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Board of Police, 65 How. Pr. 72; Corey v. Long, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 439.

A statute of the state of Iowa making it a criminal offense to import malt or spirituous liquors into that state was unconstitutional and void.

Almy v. California, 65 U. S. 24 How. 169, 16 L. ed. 644; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 559, 35 L. ed. 575.

A statute passed in the exercise of the police power of a state prohibiting transportation of game killed in the state to another state was unconstitutional because an unwarranted interference with commerce.

State v. Saunders, 19 Kan. 127, 27 Am. Rep. 98.

The state was even powerless to tax the telegraphic message which petitioner was about to send.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 466, 26 L. ed. 1069.

The act under discussion is in conflict with U. S. Const. 14th Amend. § 1.

Re Converse, 137 U. S. 631, 34 L. ed. 799; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 40 L. ed. 801; Eaker v. Portland, 5 Sawy. 566; Re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349; Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552; State v. Williams, 32 S. C. 123; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.

Mr. R. Taylor Scott, Attorney General, contra.

Keith, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, addressed to this court by Richard M. Lacy, who alleges that he is detained without lawful authority, and deprived of his liberty by one William H. Palmer, sheriff, and ex officio jailer of the county of Alexandria.

It seems that he was committed to the custody of a sheriff by virtue of a warrant, dated the 31st day of March, 1896, charged with violating an act of the legislature, approved February 29, 1896, which declares it to be "unlawful for any person or persons, or association of persons, corporation, or corporations, by any ways, means, or devices, to make any bet or wager, or receive or record or register, or forward or purport or pretend to forward, any money, thing, or consideration of value to be bet or wagered upon the result of any trial of speed or power of endurance or skill of animals or beasts which is to take place beyond the limits of this commonwealth, or by any ways, means, or devices to aid, assist, or abet in the making of any bet or wager, or the receiving, recording, or registering, or forwarding, or purporting, or pretending to forward any money, thing, or consideration of value to be bet or wagered upon the result of any trial of speed or power of endurance or skill of animals or beasts which is to take place beyond the limits of this commonwealth, or to aid or assist or abet in any way or in any manner in any of the acts forbidden by this act.

"That any person or persons or association of persons or corporation or corporations violating the provisions of this act shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $500, and be imprisoned not less than thirty, nor more than ninety, days."

The warrant of arrest does not charge the defendant with having done any of the specific acts which the statute just quoted makes unlawful, but avers in general terms that the defendant with others named in the said warrant, was guilty of each and all of the acts forbidden therein, and the commitment commands the sheriff to deliver Richard M. Lacy to the custody of the jailer of the county of Alexandria, to answer an indictment for the offense thus described at the September term of the county court of Alexandria.

The petitioner claims that this statute is repugnant to art. 5, § 15 of the Constitution of Virginia; that it is repugnant to art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, of the Constitution of the United States; that it is inoperative because two laws received the signature of the governor upon the same 31 L. R. A.

day, which are inconsistent the one with the other, and as there is no means of determining which of the two is the last expression of the legislative will, that neither can be operative. the one repealing the other by necessary implication; that the warrant in this case is void, because it is vague and indefinite, and does not with sufficient certainty recite the offense with which the petitioner is charged, as required by § 3956 of the Code; and, finally, that the commitment is a nullity, because by § 4106 of the Code, as amended by acts of the general assembly of Virginia, approved March 5, 1896, it was the duty of the justice to try the prisoner for the offense with which he was charged, instead of committing him for trial by the county court.

The office of the writ of habeas corpus is not to determine the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. The only issue which it presents is whether or not the prisoner is restrained of his liberty by due process of law.

A person held under proper process to answer for an offense created by a statute enacted within the constitutional power of the legislature cannot be discharged upon a writ of habeas corpus, however clear his innocence may be, but must abide his trial in the mode prescribed by law.

Is the statute under consideration repugnant to the Constitution of the state? Article 5, § 15, of the Constitution declares "that no law shall embrace more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title." This section has been recently construed by this court, which ruled that it was intended to forbid the use of deceptive titles as a cover for vicious legislation; to prevent bringing together in one bill subjects diverse and dissimilar in their nature and having no necessary connection with each other, and to avoid surprise in matters of which the title gave no intimation. See Com. v. Brown, 91 Va. 762, 28 L. R. A. 110; Ingle v. Straus, 91 Va. 209.

The title of the act in question is as follows: "An Act to Prevent Pool Selling, and so forth, upon the Results of Any Trials of Speed of Any Animals or Beasts Taking Place without the Limits of the Commonwealth."

A pool is defined by the Century Dictionary to be any horse racing, ball games, etc., "the combination of a number of persons, each staking a sum of money on the success of a horse in a race, the contestant in a game, etc., the money to be divided among the successful betters, according to the amount put in by each." It is therefore one of the forms of making bets or wagers upon horse races, while the statute makes "unlawful a bet or wager by any ways, means or devices, or the receiving, or recording or registering, or forwarding, or purporting, or pretending to forward, any money, thing, or consideration of value to be bet or wagered upon the result of any trial of speed or power of endurance or skill of animals or beasts which is to take place beyond the limits of the commonwealth." Without quoting further from the act, which is set out in full in the warrant, it sufficiently appears that it is far broader and more comprehensive than its title. It may be said to embrace the genus, while the title only sets out a particular species. The act makes unlawful almost every conceivable form of making bets or wagers upon the results of trials of speed of horses, while the title only mentions the particular form of wager or bet known as a "pool" or "pool selling."

Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, speaking of the effect of such a constitutional provision as that under consideration, where the act is broader than the title, says: "In such a case it may happen that one part of it can stand, because indicated by the title; while as to the objects not indicated by the title, it must fail."

We do not consider the act as obnoxious to that part of the clause of the Constitution just quoted, which says that "no law shall embrace more than one object." The object of this law is the suppression of gambling, or that form of gambling where the bet or wager is made upon the speed or endurance or skill of animals or beasts, for as was said in Ingles v. Straus, supra, "if the subjects embraced by the act, but not specified in the title, have congruity or natural connection with the subject stated in the title, or are cognate or germane thereto, the requirement of the Constitution is satisfied." Were the title sufficiently broad to cover the objects declared in the bill, there would be, in our judgment, no repugnancy to the constitutional provision in question, because all the provisions of the act may fairly be regarded as in furtherance of a single object, "the suppression of gambling." The Constitution, moreover, is to be construed so as to uphold the law if practicable. All that is required by the constitutional provision is that the subjects embraced in the statute, but not specified in the title, shall be congruous, and have natural connection with, or be germane to, the subject expressed in the title. Com. v. Brown, supra.

There is no such incongruity of objects and purposes in the statute as to render it obnoxious to the clause under consideration. The act, however, is far broader than the title, and can therefore only be operative as to that part of it which is indicated by its title. In other words, the only offense which can be punished by virtue of this statute is the particular form of making a bet or wager known as "pool selling."

It is claimed upon behalf of the commonwealth that the defect is cured by the use of the words, "and so forth," but in this view we cannot concur. The provision of the Constitution is mandatory. We think it is a wise and salutary provision, but whether it be or not, it is the law of the land, and must be obeyed. To hold that the legislature could, by the use of such a phrase as "and so forth," supply an omission and cure an otherwise defective title, would be to fritter away the constitutional provision, and render it illusive and nugatory. See Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. p. 174. These words express nothing and amount to nothing as a compliance with this constitutional requirement. Nothing which the act would not embrace without them can be brought in with their aid. Fishkill v. Fishkill & B. Pl. Road Co. 22 Barb. 634; Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185.

We are of opinion, therefore, that while the body of the act is broader than its title, and 31 L. R. A.

the title is not aided by the introduction of the phrase just discussed, the statute is not wholly inoperative for repugnancy to the Constitution of the state, but is a valid law so far as it makes pool selling an offense, and prescribes the punishment for it.

I will now proceed to consider the alleged repugnancy of the act in question to art. 1, cl. 3, § 8, of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes. In discussing this branch of the case, I shall treat the subject as though the prisoner were charged specifically with the offense of selling in Virginia a pool upon a trial of speed of horses to take place in St. Louis, as he can under the statute be found guilty of none other.

It is conceded that the power thus conferred is, when exercised by Congress, exclusive in its operation. It is conceded that the abstention on the part of Congress from passing laws in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce is equivalent to an expression of its will that in those respects in which it can be reached and controlled by regulations of a general character it shall remain free. On the other hand, there is a reserve of power and duty in the states, the due exercise of which is essential to the maintenance of order, the preservation of health, and the promotion of good morals; in fact, almost the whole of the great body of municipal law which establishes and enforces the duties of citizens to each other is embraced within and known as the police power. In it is to be found, says Blackstone (4 Com. 162), the "due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom whereby the inhabitants of a state, like members of a well governed family, are bound to conform their general behavior to the rules of propriety, good neighborhood, and good morals, and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective stations." The professed object of all government is to promote the general welfare, and it cannot be denied that the subjects enumerated in the above extracts are of prime importance, not only to the welfare and happiness of men, but are essential to their very existence in a state of civilized society.

The object of the law is the suppression of gambling in its most attractive, seductive, and therefore the most dangerous of its many forms. That gaming is a vice which it is the right and duty of a state to forbid under severe penalties is recognized, I think, by the Codes of every state in the Union, if not, indeed, by those of all civilized communities.

"The right to legislate upon the subject of intoxicating liquors is acknowledged by every one, and is founded upon the fact that their use in excessive quantities leads, in large masses of cases, to crime, poverty and enormous suffering, and bears most harmfully upon the sum of the happiness of the human race. So in regard to lotteries in general. A widespread custom of indulgence in the purchase of tickets leads, among the poorer classes certainly, and also among others, to habits of recklessness, waste, and idleness; it cultivates a gambling spirit, and tends to a hatred of honest labor, and to a desire to obtain riches or money without the necessary expenditure of industrious energy." People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 404.

The act in question would seem, then, to be in the performance of the obligation which rests upon the general assembly of Virginia to pass laws to suppress a recognized vice. There is no question that the police power must be exercised in subordination to the Constitution of the state, and a fortiori that it must not be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States. Now, as the proper discharge of the functions and duties entrusted to the national and state governments is necessary to the highest efficiency of both, it follows that in the development and growth of the two systems thus blended and interwoven and operating directly, each by its own force, upon the same individuals, wisdom and prudence must prevail in order that the happiest and best results may be achieved.

In the case before us there would seem to be no reason why any antagonism or conflict should result from the exercise within their appointed limits of the power on the part of Congress to regulate commerce among the states and the duty of the state to suppress a recognized offense against good morals. There can be none unless the transmission of money or other thing of value to be bet on a race to take place beyond the limits of the state be a subject of commerce which is entitled to shelter itself under the ægis of the Constitution of the United States, and to invoke for its protection the power to regulate commerce with which Congress was clothed to the end that legitimate intercourse between the states might forever remain free and unfettered.

In Cohens v. Virginia (a case, by the way, in which a lottery established by the Congress of the United States sought to set at naught a law of the state of Virginia, which forbade the sale of lottery tickets within her borders), it was said by Chief Justice Marshall: "To interfere with the penal laws of a state, where they are not levelled against the legitimate powers of the Union, but have for their sole object the internal government of the country, is a very serious measure, which Congress cannot be supposed to adopt lightly or inconsiderately. The motives for it must be serious and weighty. It would be taken deliberately and the intention would be clearly and unequivocally expressed." 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 443, 5 L. ed. 300.

The same spirit happily still animates the Supreme Court of the United States. It fully recognizes the difficulty often-times presented of securing harmonious operation to the just and necessary powers of the Federal and state government, and with none of the provisions of the Federal Constitution is there more frequent opportunity for interference and conflict than under the commerce clause of the one and the police power of the other. The great truth must be recognized that the government of our people in its entirety consists of an "indissoluble union of indestructible states," and that as a consequence it is as much the duty of every department of the government of the United States to preserve in their full and unimpaired vigor those powers which, in the distribution of governmental functions, were reserved to the states as to cherish and foster the growth and expansion to their conditions of highest usefulness those functions and duties which were confided to the Federal government. Though the power of Congress is held to be exclusive in its nature, and to embrace not only the subjects of commerce, but all the agencies and instrumentalities by which that commerce is to be carried on, we find the supreme court readily conceding in a number of instances, the free exercise of the police power of the state, though incidentally it might have the effect of interfering with, or to some extent regulating interstate commerce. For instances of this sort see cases cited in Richmond & A. R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co. (Va.) 24 S. E. 261, decided at this term, and Com. v. Myers (Va.) ante, 379, at the January term of this court. In the latter case it is said that "the right of the state to impose a license tax upon peddlers, where it operates uniformly upon all citizens, and does not discriminate in favor of citizens of Virginia as against citizens of other states, or where the tax imposed is in the exercise of the police power, and is not a regulation of commerce under cover of that power, although incidentally it may have that effect, has been uniformly maintained; but where any injurious discrimination is discovered in favor of the resident as against the nonresident, or with respect to the sales of articles manufactured in this state over similar articles manufactured abroad, the state laws are declared to be void, as repugnant to the Constitution of the United States."

Since that case was decided I have further investigated the authorities on the subject, and I am strengthened in the conviction that no decision of the Supreme Court of the United States can be found holding a state law invalid as being repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution which was enacted in the bona fide exercise of the police power of the state for the suppression of a recognized vice, or to prevent the sale of adulterated food, or the manufacture of food from impure materials, or to prevent the spread of disease among men or beasts. Under cover of the police power, efforts are constantly being made to promote some unlawful purpose, as in People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 403, where a law was held unconstitutional which, under the police power, undertook to forbid what was held to be an innocent act, and one which the legislature could not make criminal. The supreme court has held state laws to be void which impose tonnage duties—Inman S. S. Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. ed. 118—and taxes on imports as in Amy v. California, 65 U. S. 24 How. 169, 16 L. ed. 644, and inspection laws discriminating in favor of the citizens of the state as against citizens of other states, Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 63, 35 L. ed. 638, or which in some of a great variety of modes endeavored to give to its own citizens, or to its own products, an advantage over the citizens or products of other states; and in some instances to favor one industry engaged in by its own citizens over an innocent but less favored occupation. An example of the latter is to be found in the case of People v. Marr, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34. Not unfrequently it happens that the police power is resorted to merely for purposes of revenue. In these and like cases, which might be greatly multiplied, the courts have held that they did not come properly within its domain.

While a state law which operates as a regulation of interstate commerce, or which affects it except incidentally, could not be upheld under the police power of the state, while laws pretending or purporting to be in the exercise of the police power, but which are but devices and schemes under cover of that power to accomplish some purpose forbidden to the state are void, yet state laws passed with the honest purpose of promoting the health, the morals, or the well-being of its citizens, are valid.

Contracts are peculiarly under the protection of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall pass a law impairing their obligation; and yet it is not pretended that a state may not prohibit the enforcement of contracts resting upon a vicious or immoral consideration, the enforcement of which would have a vicious and immoral influence. So, too, we think that to call into activity the inhibition upon the states to interfere with interstate commerce implied from the grant to Congress of the exclusive power to regulate it, the first thing to be shown is some subject of commerce which commends itself as at least not injurious to health or morals. In no case can the just and proper exercise of the police power of the state, acting with the honest purpose to protect the health and morals of a community, conflict with the proper exercise of the power in Congress to regulate commerce, unless the means of disseminating disease and encouraging vice are proper subjects of commerce.

It is insisted here, however, that inasmuch as the offense consists in forwarding a sum of money by telegraph to Wheeling, W. Va., to be wagered on a trial of speed of horses to take place in St. Louis, Mo., it not being unlawful, as it is claimed, to make such a wager in West Virginia, the act making it criminal is void, not only as being repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution, but as an attempt to punish the doing in West Virginia of an act lawful in that state.

We have said enough to show that there is, in our opinion, no repugnancy in the statute to the commerce clause of the Constitution. Upon the other point, we might content ourselves with observing, that, as we are not trying the issue of guilty or not guilty, but only whether there is lawful cause for the detention of petitioner disclosed by the warrant and commitment, the effect of the proof of the law of West Virginia, as of all other facts, must be postponed till the trial, but as an expression of opinion has been sought, and there can be no impropriety in giving it, we are willing to go somewhat into this branch of the subject also.

We do not perceive that the fact that the race upon which the wager is to be made is to be run in Missouri, and that the money is to be placed in West Virginia at all affects the question. It remains that by the statute the act is made unlawful here, and may be punished unless it be under the protection of the Constitution of the United States. With the laws of our sister states we have no concern, 31 L. R. A.

except in so far as they appear in this record, and they are not the proper subject of animadversion or criticism. If West Virginia has not legislated against this form of gambling, it is no concern of ours. Virginia has a right to repress and punish that which by the common consent of mankind is a vice, without regard to the laws of other states. To make a bet or wager upon a race to take place in Missouri is as injurious to good morals as though it were to take place within our own borders; nor is the quality or character of the act at all affected by the fact that a stage in the transaction takes place upon the neutral ground of West Virginia. The root of the evil is here, and here its baneful influence and example are felt. The act at which the punishment is aimed takes place in Virginia, and over it and the actors in it Virginia has complete jurisdiction, unless, as has been so often said, shelter and protection are found under the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States.

Another objection taken to the warrant is that it is too vague and indefinite; that it is the right of a person accused of crime to be informed of the "cause and nature of the accusation against him."

Warrants of arrest are required to recite the offense charged, but the same particularity is not expected or required as in indictments or more formal papers. See 3 Rob. Pr., old ed. p. 10; Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 714.

While we think it would be better practice to state the offense more specifically than has been done here, we are not prepared to say that we would on that account alone be content to quash the proceedings and to discharge the prisoner.

The remaining ground of objection, however, is fatal to the warrant of commitment under which the prisoner is held. By § 4106 of the Code, as amended by an act approved March 6, 1896, justices of the peace are given "exclusive original jurisdiction of all misdemeanors occurring within their jurisdiction," and are authorized to inflict the same punishments theretofore imposed by county and corporation courts. By § 4107 an unrestricted right of appeal to the county or corporation court is secured where the accused can demand a jury, but the trial and judgment must in the first instance be before the justice. The effect of this statute is to take away from county and corporation courts the power to try misdemeanors as courts of original jurisdiction. It takes away their power to try misdemeanors, even in those cases where indictments or informations were pending. See Dulin v. Lillard, 91 Va. 718, where the effect of a similar statute is fully discussed and considered, and the authorities bearing upon it are collated.

For the foregoing reasons, we are of opinion, first, that on account of the insufficiency of the title of the act under consideration pool selling is the only form of bet or wager that is made punishable; secondly, that there is no repeal by implication, but the two acts of March 5, 1896, are in full force and effect, except as hereinbefore stated; thirdly, that the act under which the warrant in this case was issued is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States; fourth, that it would be better practice to state the offense with more precision than has been here observed,—especially in view of the fact that justices are now clothed with exclusive original jurisdiction to try misdemeanors, and the warrant gives to the accused the only information as to the nature of the offense with which he is charged; and, lastly, that the warrant of commitment under which the petitioner is held in custody is void, because it was the duty of the justice to try the case, instead of committing the prisoner for trial by the county court, which is without authority as a court of original jurisdiction as to misdemeanors.

The prisoner must be discharged.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

Torrence WHITE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
FARMERS' HIGHLINE CANAL & RES-ERVOIR COMPANY.

(.....Colo.....)

1. A canal used for the carriage of water for hire is affected by a public interest and subject to legislative regulation in respect to the distribution of the water.
2. A contract giving a consumer of water the right to draw and take from a canal all he may be entitled to on tender or payment of the amount due therefor, if the owner of the canal fail or refuse to comply with the contract, is not protected against legislative interference made by a subsequent statute prohibiting such acts and regulating the distribution of water from such canals, but giving a remedy for the enforcement of the right to receive all the water to which the contract entitles him.

(January 15, 1896.)

ERROR to the Court of Appeals to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the District Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enjoin defendant from drawing water from an irrigating ditch. Affirmed.

Statement by HAYT, Ch. J.:

This action was originally commenced by the Farmers' Highline Canal & Reservoir Company, as plaintiff, against Torrence White. It appears from the undenied allegations of the complaint that the plaintiff is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Colorado for the purpose of owning, operating, and maintaining an irrigating ditch, together with reservoirs, etc.; that said company was organized on the 3d day of December, 1885, and from and after its organization it has diverted a large amount of water from one of the public streams of the state known as "Clear Creek." This water has been principally used by farmers for agricultural purposes, it being the custom of the ditch company to carry water for hire for the defendant and a large number of agriculturists along the line of the ditch. It is alleged that the defendant is entitled to 45 inches of water, and no more. Notwithstanding such fact, it is averred that the defendant demanded 120 inches of water.

The company, averring its inability to comply with this demand, refused to supply the defendant with the same, or any part thereof in excess of 45 inches. Thereupon the defendant enlarged the opening in the box through which the water in his ditch flowed to his land, and wrongfully took from the canal 75 inches of water for his individual use in excess of the 45 inches which he was entitled to. It is further alleged that the taking of this additional amount of water was at the expense and damage of many consumers of water from plaintiff's ditch. It is also averred that the plaintiff company had in its employ an efficient and capable superintendent, whose duty it was to fix and adjust the various boxes through which water is supplied to the various lands receiving water from the said ditch; that this superintendent, in the discharge of his duties, apportioned the water strictly and properly according to the amounts to which each consumer was entitled. It is further alleged that, notwithstanding this fact, the defendant, after enlarging the capacity of the box or headgate used to supply his lateral ditch with water, continued to divert 120 inches of water. It is further averred that numerous other persons, tempted and led thereto by the evil example of the defendant, desiring to procure water for the irrigation of their lands in excess of the amount possible for the plaintiff to furnish threatened to follow the example of the defendant and at their will and pleasure take from said ditch various amounts of water, without consultation with the said superintendent, and against his opposition and remonstrance. Plaintiff seeks for injunctive relief restraining the defendant from taking from plaintiff's ditch water in excess of 45 cubic inches. Upon the filing of this complaint a temporary writ of injunction was issued in accordance with the prayer thereof. Afterwards the defendant filed his answer. It is unnecessary to set forth this answer in detail. It suffices to say that by it the defendant claims the right to take the additional 75 inches of water from plaintiff's ditch by virtue of a contract made with plaintiff's grantors on the 22d day of March, 1878, and duly recorded. This contract is fully set out in the opinion of the court of appeals. See Farmer's Highline Canal & R. Co. v. White, 5 Colo. App. 1. The answer also avers that the full amount of 120 inches of water was necessary to properly further discussed very elaborately in Beverly v. Barnitz (Kan.) ante, 74, the decision in which is reversed in 163 U. S. 118, 41 L. ed. —, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

NOTE.—On the question of the remedy as part of the obligation of a contract, see numerous authorities collected in note to Best v. Baumgardner (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 356, and others in note to Phinney v. Phinney (Me.) 4 L. R. A. 348. The question is 31 L. R. A.

irrigate the defendant's lands described in the schedule annexed to this contract, and that previous to taking the same he had tendered to the plaintiff $120 in cash for this water, this being in full payment for 120 inches of water at the rate fixed in the contract. Upon the filing of this answer the defendant filed a motion to dissolve the injunction, and about the same time also plaintiff filed a general demurrer to the answer. Whether or not the demurrer was filed before or after the dissolution of the injunction, as hereinafter set forth, does not definitely appear from the record. The record shows that after the coming in of the answer the case was heard upon the pleadings and evidence introduced by both parties. This hearing was had before the district judge at chambers, in vacation. Some months thereafter, the cause coming on to be heard before the district court in term time, the demurrer to the answer was overruled, and, the plaintiff electing to stand by the demurrer, the answer was taken as confessed, and judgment entered for the defendant. From this judgment an appeal was taken to the court of appeals. A hearing in that court resulted in a reversal of the judgment of the district court, whereupon White sued out a writ of error, upon which the record was brought into this court.

Messrs. A. H. De France and A. J. Rising for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Osborn & Taylor for defendant in error.

Hayt, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The order dissolving the temporary injunction, being merely interlocutory, is not before this court for review, except as the result was repeated in the final judgment. So, likewise, the evidence taken upon the hearing at chambers in vacation is not open to review upon appeal or writ of error. When the case was regularly reached in the district court for final hearing and determination, that court was at liberty to, and did, as the record discloses, proceed to final judgment unembarrassed by its previous order. At this hearing a general demurrer was overruled to the answer, the court thereby deciding that the pleading constituted a good and valid defense to plaintiff's complaint. In this state of the record the cause must be reviewed solely upon the pleadings. The defendant, having tendered the schedule price of $1 per acre for water for 120 acres of the lands embraced within the contract and described in the schedule annexed thereto, insists, as the water is necessary for the cultivation of his lands, that he is not only entitled to have that amount of water flow into his lateral ditch, but that he has the right to take the same, without let or hindrance from the ditch company, its superintendent, or any other water consumer. This right to actually divert water from the main canal in opposition to the will and against the protest of the plaintiff company and its superintendent is based upon the following provision of the written contract, set up in the defendant's answer: "That if the said ditch company, or the party of the second part, their assigns or successors, or whomsoever may be in control or management of the said ditch, as the case may be, shall at any time wilfully or malignantly fail or refuse to comply with the terms of the indenture as to the furnishing of said water to said parties of the third part, or any or either of them, the party having right to demand and receive any part of said water for the uses aforesaid, upon payment or tender of payment at the proper time, and demand made in writing for such water, said tender or payment to be made to and said demand of the officer or agent, if any, appointed by the parties owning or managing said ditch, or, if there be no officer or agent appointed for the purpose of receiving such demand and payment, then such payment to be tendered to and demand made upon the president, secretary, treasurer, or superintendent of said ditch company, or person exercising control and management of the said ditch, it shall be lawful for the party so entitled to such water to draw from and take all such water as he may be entitled to at the time of such tender or payment, subject to payment therefor on demand made by the officer or persons authorized to receive the same." That part of this contract which attempts to give each consumer the right to determine the amount of water to which he is entitled, with permission to take the same regardless of the rights of other consumers or of the ditch company, was declared void by the court of appeals. The court bases its conclusion upon the following reasons: First. "It is a right incompatible with the right of control incident to the ownership of the property." Second. "It is against public policy, as tending to confusion and a breach of the peace in allowing parties to take whatever water they required, regardless of the rights of others having the same legal right." The court, being of the opinion that this provision of the contract was void, held that the lower court erred in refusing an injunction. Without reviewing the reasons given by the court of appeals, we think its judgment must be affirmed for a safer and better reason, viz., the right claimed by the consumer is a right the exercise of which is positively prohibited by the statute of this state. In 1887 the legislature passed an act entitled "An Act Regulating the Distribution of Water, the Superintendence of Canals or Ditches Used for the Purposes of Irrigation, and Providing a Penalty for the Violation thereof." Sess. Laws 1887, p. 304. The first section of this act provides at what time water shall be kept flowing in ditches. The second provides that the owners shall keep their ditches in good order and repair, and that a multiplicity of outlets shall at all times be avoided, so far as the same shall be reasonably practicable. The location of such outlets is placed under the control of the superintendent. The third section provides that it shall be the duty of those owning or controlling such canals or ditches to appoint a superintendent, whose duty it shall be to measure the water from such canal or ditch through the outlet to those entitled thereto, according to his or her pro rata share. Section 4 fixes a penalty in case the superintendent or other person having charge of the ditch shall wilfully neglect or refuse to deliver water, etc., as by the act provided. Section 5 provides that the water commissioner, his deputy, or assistant shall promptly measure the water from the stream or other sources of supply into the irrigating canals, etc. The right to the use of water in the arid region is among the most valuable property rights known to the law. Where there are a large number of consumers taking water from the same ditch, the excessive use by some may absolutely deprive others of water at times when its application to the thirsty soil is absolutely necessary to prevent the total failure of growing crops. So, also, as between different ditches, if one, in case of scarcity takes from a public stream water to which it is not entitled, it must be at the expense of others. From the very nature of the business, controversies with reference to the use of water naturally led to unseeming breaches of the peace, and to avoid these it was found expedient and necessary to provide complete rules of procedure governing the taking of water from the public streams of the state, and regulating its distribution to those entitled thereto. Authority for such regulations may properly be based upon the principle that when private property is "affected by a public interest it ceases to be juris privati only." That a canal used for the carriage of water for hire in this state is affected by a public interest has been recognized by the repeated decisions of this court. Says Mr. Justice Helm in the case of Wheeler v. Northern Colorado Irrig. Co. 10 Colo. 582: "Under the Constitution, as I understand it, the carrier is at least a quasi public servant or agent. It is not the attitude of a private individual contracting for the sale or use of his private property. It exists largely for the benefit of others being engaged in the business of transporting for hire water owned by the public to the people owning the right to its use. It is permitted to acquire certain rights as against those subsequently diverting water from the same natural stream. It may exercise the power of eminent domain. Its business is affirmatively sanctioned, and its profits or emoluments are fairly guaranteed. But in consideration of this express recognition, together with the privileges and protection thus given, it is, for the public good, charged with certain duties and subjected to a reasonable control." Although it is difficult to define the boundaries of the police power of the state, such regulations as those prescribed by the statute under consideration are by the decisions of the highest courts declared to be within such power. In the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496, Mr. Justice Bradley referring to the Granger Cases [Munn v. Illinois], reported in 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77, stated the principle as follows: "The inquiry there was as to the extent of the police power, in cases where the public interest is affected, and we held that when an employment or business becomes a matter of such public interest and importance as to create a common charge or burden upon the citizen; in other words, when it becomes a practical monopoly, to which the citizen is compelled to resort, and by means of which a tribute can be exacted from the community, it is subject to regulation by the legislative power." In the case of Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989, it is said: "Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the extent and boundaries of the police power, and however difficult it may be to render a satisfactory definition of it, there seems to be no doubt that it does extend to the protection of the lives, health, and property of the citizens, and to the preservation of good order and the public morals."

It is said, however, that as the contract under which the defendant claims in this case was executed prior to the passage of the act of 1887, the parties to this action are not bound by that statute; the argument of the plaintiff in error in this particular being that he has a contract right to take this water as he pleases, and that this is a property right with which the legislature cannot interfere. This argument has been advanced in many cases, but, we believe, never successfully, where, as here, it is in opposition to the police power of the state. The extent to which the police power of the state may go is well illustrated by the case of Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036. In that case, by the act approved March 8, 1867, the legislature incorporated the Northwestern Fertilizing Company, to have continued succession and existence for the term of fifty years. By the act of incorporation the company was authorized and empowered to establish and maintain "in Cook county, Illinois, at any point south of the dividing line between townships 37 and 38, chemical and other works, for the purpose of manufacturing and converting dead animals and other animal matter into an agricultural fertilizer, and into other chemical products, by means of chemical, mechanical, and other processes." The company was also authorized to establish and maintain depots in the city of Chicago for the purpose of receiving and carrying off, from and out of the said city any and all offal, dead animals, and other animal matter which it might buy or own, or which might be delivered to it by the city authorities and other persons. The works of the company were located within a designated territory, at a place then swampy, and nearly uninhabited, but at the time of the suit forming a part of the village of Hyde Park. In March, 1869, the legislature passed an act revising the charter of the village of Hyde Park, and granting to it the largest powers of police and local government. In 1872 the village authorities passed the following ordinance: "No person shall transfer, carry, haul, or convey any offal, dead animals, or other offensive or unwholesome matter or material, into or through the village of Hyde Park;" fixing a penalty for the violation of this ordinance. After this time the village authorities caused the arrest of the engineer and other employees of a railway company who were engaged in carrying offal through the village to the chemical works. These men were tried and convicted for violating the ordinance, and fined $50 each, whereupon the company filed its bill in the United States court to restrain further prosecutions and for general relief. When this case reached the Supreme Court of the United States, that court, in affirming the judgment of the state courts, held, among other things, that the charter was a sufficient license until revoked; but not a contract guaranteeing that the company should for fifty years be exempt from the police power of the state, notwithstanding its business might become a nuisance by reason of the growth of population around the place selected for its works; third, that the charter afforded the company no protection from the enforcement of the ordinance. The case of Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co., 111 N. Y. 132, 2 L. R. A. 384, is directly in point upon this branch of the discussion. The contest in that case grew out of a contract between two street-railway corporations operating in the city of Buffalo. The contract provided, among other things, for the making of connections by each with the roads of the other "so long as it receives for the transportation of passengers the fare allowed on the 3d of May, 1872, and no longer;" each agreeing that it would charge the same rate that it was "permitted to charge by the statute in force, regulating the same on that day," and would make no changes in rates without the consent of the other party. After this contract was made, a statute was enacted making it unlawful for any street-railway company in Buffalo to charge more than 5 cents for each passenger, this being a sum less than that authorized by the statutes in force May 3, 1872. In obedience to this statute the defendant reduced its rates of fare to 5 cents, plaintiff claiming that such reduction was in violation of the contract. Upon these facts the court held that "the authority of the legislature in the exercise of its police powers cannot be limited or controlled by the action of a previous legislature, or by the provisions of contracts between individuals or corporations." As the charter under consideration in the case of Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, supra, did not exempt the corporation from the police power of the state, although the exercise of that power in the manner attempted necessarily compelled the removal of its works to another location, and as neither the charter nor the contract between the rival street-car companies in the case of Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co., supra, prevented the reduction of fares by the legislature, so our act of 1887, governing the distribution of water by ditch companies carrying water for hire, is binding upon the parties to this action, notwithstanding the agreement of March 22, 1873. The authority of the legislature in the premises is now so well settled that we may well rest content with the citations of a few of the many cases in which it has been upheld. Granger Cases, Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, Sinking-Fund Cases, Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, and Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co., supra; Berthoff v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559; Richardson v. Boston, 65 U. S. 24 How. 188, 16 L. ed. 625; Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 527, 22 L. ed. 805; West Wisconsin R. Co. v. Trempealeau County Supers. 93 U. S. 595, 23 L. ed. 814. The statute does not affect the right of plaintiff in error to receive whatever water he may justly be entitled to under his contract, but where, as here, there is a controversy as to the amount of such water available for his use, he must bring his action upon the statute to determine such right, and in no event can he be allowed to ignore the company's superintendent and its reasonable regulations, and, in violation of the statute, enlarge the outlet to his lateral ditch, and take water from the company's ditch at will.

For the reasons given, the district court erred in overruling the demurrer to the defendant's answer and in refusing to reinstate the injunction upon the final hearing, and the judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Respts.,
v.

Simon BENDIT, Appt.

(.....Cal.)

Signing another's name as his agent, and adding one's own initials to show

agency, in the presence of the person who pays over money on the faith of such signature, is not forgery, although the claim of authority is false and may constitute some other crime.

(February 20, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and NOTE.—Forgery by false assumption of authority in signing another's name as agent for him.

The doctrine of the above case, denying that a signature of the name of another person made by one falsely assuming to be his agent and indicating the agency so that the person taking the instrument relies, not upon the signature of the person whose name the agent signs, but upon the agent's assumption of authority, is forgery, is fully sustained by the prior authorities.

One of these is that of State v. Taylor, 46 La. Ann. 1382, 25 L. R. A. 591, in which the headnote by the court says: "An apparent agent is not guilty of forgery though he had no authority in fact;" and in the opinion it says: "In fine we are persuaded, after an examination of a number of authorities, that an instrument which shows on its face that the person signed as agent of the drawer of a note cannot be the subject of forgery. The act has not one of the essentials of the crime of forgery,—a false making of an instrument apparently genuine. The falsehood, if there is falsehood, is in the agency, in assuming to act as agent, and not in forging an instrument."
31 L. R. A.

In State v. Young, 46 N. H. 206, 88 Am. Dec. 212, the court says: "A man may make a statement in writing of a certain transaction, and may represent and assert ever so strongly that his statement is true, but if it should prove that by mistake he is in an error, and that his statement is entirely wrong, that could not be forgery; and suppose we go further, and admit that the statement was designedly false when made, and so made for the purpose of defrauding some one, it does not alter the case, it is no forgery." Again it says: "The writing or instrument must in itself be false, not

County of San Francisco convicting him of forgery. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter S. Hinkle for appellant.

Mr. W. F. Fitzgerald, Attorney General, for the People.

McFarland, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was convicted of forgery, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. The information charges that appellant on July 30, 1894, did unlawfully, feloniously, falsely, etc., and with intent to defraud, "make and forge a certain instrument in writing, in words and figures following, to wit:

"San Francisco, July 30, 1894. G. W. Hume & Co.—William Cluff Company, wholesale grocers and provision dealers, 18 to 22 Front St., corner Pine. Telephone 1819.

To balance.....
July 23. To bill rendered..... $15 50
Discount 30

$15 20

Wm. Cluff & Co., A. B."

It further charges, in brief, that on said July 30, he wilfully, fraudulently, etc., passed the said instrument, "as true and genuine," to one J. Deming, with intent to defraud G. W. Hume and J. Deming, doing business under the firm name of G. W. Hume & Co. The instrument is admitted by appellant to be a receipt for money, although there is nothing on its face which acknowledges such receipt.

genuine, a counterfeit, and not the true instrument which it purports to be." The point actually decided in this case, however, was that it was not forgery for one to make a false charge in his own book of accounts.

In respect to checks drawn by an agent and signed "per pro. The Preston Bank Co., G. T. Tully, submanager," the court says: "Even if Tully had had no authority to draw these checks, they would not, according to the English law, have constituted forgery as was held by the fifteen judges in Reg. v. White, 2 Car. & K. 404, 1 Den. C. C. 208, 2 Cox, Crim. Cas. 210, because the signature by him in his own name 'per pro curation,' etc., showed on its face all that it purported to be, and was not a false making." Re Tully, 20 Fed. Rep. 812.

In Conner's Case, 3 City Hall Rec. 59, on an indictment for forging corporation notes signed in the name of an individual who did not appear to be authorized to do that act, the mayor advised an acquittal on the ground that the case did not fall within the statutes as to forgery because the instrument was not such that any action could be sustained thereon, even if it had been genuine.

An indorsement on a bill of the words, "Received for Chas. MacIntosh & Co., Alex. Heilbonn, No. 9 Vine street, Regent street, No. 73, Aldermanbury," on which the bill is paid to Heilbonn, is not forgery even if he had no authority to indorse for MacIntosh & Co., and even if the words "Chas. MacIntosh & Co." were an imitation of the handwriting of a member of the firm, when the rest of the indorsement was in the undisguised handwriting of Heilbonn. Re Heilbonn, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 429.

A signature to a deed in the following form, "James D. Holt by H. H. Wilson, his attorney in fact," made by Wilson under claim of authority

We do not deem it necessary to consider the points made by appellant that the information is insufficient, and that material errors were committed by the court in rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, for in our opinion there was no evidence sufficient to establish the crime of forgery. There was a conflict of evidence as to whether appellant was the person who did the acts testified to by the witnesses for the prosecution; but, assuming that appellant was identified as the person who did those acts, the acts themselves do not constitute the crime charged. The facts testified to were, in brief, these: The writing alleged to have been forged was sent by William Cluff & Co. to Hume & Co. the day before July 30, 1894, so that the latter might examine it, and be ready to pay when the collector of the former should call for payment. It was then simply an unreceipted account, with no name signed to it. On July 30, according to the People's testimony, appellant went to the business place of Hume & Co., and asked J. Deming, one of the partners, for the payment of this account. Deming asked him the amount, and, as he did not give the correct amount, Deming refused to pay. Appellant said there must be some mistake, and that he would see about it, and went out. Deming testified, "I naturally thought he was a collector for them." Deming afterwards went out himself, leaving Fannie A. Berry as acting cashier. Afterwards appellant returned, and Miss Berry paid him the amount of the account, and appellant receipted it, by writing, in the presence of Miss Berry, "Wm. Cluff & Co., A. B." She testified: "I saw him sign, 'William Cluff & Company, per by power of attorney to sign the deed, is not forgery, although he had no such authority, and the deed is not a "false" "forged" deed within the meaning of Minn. Gen. Stat. chap. 96, § 2. State v. Willson, 25 Minn. 52.

One having general authority to fill out checks for his own purposes is not guilty of forgery by making such a check in excess of his authority. People v. Reinitz, 6 N. Y. Supp. 672.

Signing the name "Schouler, Baldwin, & Co." with a statement in answer to an inquiry that the members of the firm included Baldwin the signer, and a certain person named Schouler, although there is no such partnership, and though it is done with intent to defraud, does not make Baldwin liable for forgery when the party taking the instrument knows that the signature was not the personal act of Schouler, but sees Baldwin execute it and relies on his statement of authority to bind Schouler as a partner. Com. v. Baldwin, 11 Gray. 197, 71 Am. Dec. 708.

An instrument purporting to bind a county board of supervisors for the payment of a sum of money, and signed "Henry A. Mann, Treasurer," does not make Mann guilty of forgery, although he had no authority to make the instrument. Mann v. People, 15 Hun, 155.

The decision in Mann v. People, 15 Hun, 155, was affirmed by the court of appeals in 75 N. Y. 494, 31 Am. Rep. 482, in which the court declares: "One who makes an instrument signed with his own name, but purporting to bind another, does not make an instrument purporting to be the act of another. The instrument shows upon its face that it is made by himself and is in point of fact his own act. . . . The wrong done, where such an instrument is made without authority, consists in the false assumption of authority to bind another.

A. B.' I understood him to be the collector in the employ of the William Cluff Company, who came there to collect, and was authorized to collect, the bill." It is quite clear that the facts above stated do not constitute forgery. When the crime is charged to be the false making of a writing, there must be the making of a writing which falsely purports to be the writing of another. The falsity must be in the writing itself,—in the manuscript. A false statement of fact in the body of the instrument, or a false assertion of authority to write another's name, or to sign his name as agent, by which a person is deceived and defrauded, is not forgery. There must be a design to pass as the genuine writing of another person that which is not the writing of such other person. The instrument must fraudulently purport to be what it is not. And there was nothing of the kind in the case at bar. There was no pretense that "Wm. Cluff & Co." was the genuine signature of that firm. It was written by appellant himself, in the presence of the party who paid the money. He added the initials "A. B." to it, and he was understood to be acting as the agent of the firm, and to have written the name "Cluff & Co." by himself as such agent. By these acts he may have committed some other crime, but he did not commit forgery. We have been referred to no authorities to the point that the signing of another's name as his agent is forgery, while there is a multitude of authorities to the contrary in text-books and adjudicated cases. "If a man accept or indorse a bill of exchange in the name of another, without his authority, it is a forgery. But if he sign it with his own name, per procuration of the party whom he intends to represent, it is no forgery; it is no false making of the instrument, but merely a false assumption of authority." 2 Archbold, Crim. Prac. 819. The doctrine is fully discussed, and the views hereinbefore stated declared, in Reg. v. White, 2 Car. & K. 404. In that case the defendant brought a bill to a banker as from Tomlinson. The bill was not indorsed, but the defendant said he would indorse it. The banker wrote, "Per procuration Tomlinson." beneath which the defendant signed his own name. It was held that this false assumption of authority was not forgery, as there was no false making. It has frequently been held that "the false instrument should carry on the face of it the semblance of that for which it is counterfeited," although it is not necessary that the semblance should be exact. 2 Archbold, Crim. Prac. 866. This rule illustrates the nature of forgery. How, in the case at bar, could there be any question about "semblance?"

The American authorities are as pronounced on the subject as the English. In Re Heilborn, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 484, the court, after having referred to other cases, says: "It might not be necessary to refer to these authorities, for it is the essence of forgery that one signs the name of another to pass it off as the signature or counterfeit of that other. This cannot be when the party openly, and on the face of the paper, declares that he signs for that other. There he does not counterfeit the name of the other, nor attempt to pass the signature as the signature of that other. The offense belongs to an entirely different class of and not in making a counterfeit or false paper."

An insurance agent who stamped a policy ticket with a false date and issued it after the person whom it purported to insure had been accidentally killed, and did this to defraud the insurance company, although he had authority to issue such policies on live persons, was held guilty of forgery. People v. Graham, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 135.

In the case of People v. Graham the court does not discuss the point that the agent signed his own name. It seems impossible to reconcile this decision with the others on the subject which deny that an agent's signing his own name can constitute forgery merely because he misused his authority or falsely assumed authority, unless the distinction is to be found in the fact that in People v. Graham the forgery consisted rather in a material alteration of the instrument, which was duly signed by the insurance company's officers, than a false making of an instrument.

Feigned signatures of the payees of warrants, signed to vouchers or receipts in order to obtain the warrants from the secretary of an institution, were made by the superintendent of the institution, and the warrants thereupon delivered to him by the secretary. On an application for the extradition of the superintendent on a charge of forgery it was contended on his behalf that the offense did not constitute forgery because the secretary who delivered to him the warrants knew that he was the person who signed the names of the payees to the vouchers, but the court sustained the right of extradition. Some of the judges agreed on the ground that there was some evidence of collusion between him and the secretary. Another reason considered by some of the judges was that the secretary was not the only person to be prejudiced by the act.

and that the payees of the warrants did not know that their signatures were being made by the defendant. Re Phipps, 8 Ont. App. Rep. 77, 4 Crim. L. Mag. 865.

In England it was early established that the signature of another's name without authority, but expressed to be per procuration and with the addition of the name of the person who made the signature, did not constitute forgery. The question was involved in the case of Rex v. Maddocks, 2 Russell, Crimes, 499, but did not reach a decision because the prisoner died before the case terminated.

But it was expressly decided in Reg. v. White, 2 Car. & K. 404, 1 Den. C. C. 208, 2 Cox, C. C. 210, that it is not forgery to sign the name of another, adding the name of the signer with the words "per procuration."

So, in Rex v. Arscott, 6 Car. & P. 408, it was decided that it is not forgery to sign one's own name to a receipt for another expressing that the money is received by the signer for such other person, although he may have in fact no authority to receive it.

A false postoffice money order signed "G. Jones, pro postmaster," was held a criminal forgery when the name was not signed by Jones and there was in fact no such person connected with the postoffice. Reg. v. Vanderstein, 10 Cox, C. C. 177, 16 Ir. C. L. Rep. 574.

But by 24 & 25 Vict. chap. 98, § 24, it is made forgery to sign the name of another person "by procuration or otherwise" with intent to defraud, and it was so held in case of a receipt signed "P. P. Susey Ambler, Wm. Kay." Reg. v. Kay, L. R. 1 C. C. 257, 30 L. J. M. C. 118, 22 L. T. N. S. 557, 18 Week. Rep. 934.

crimes." In Mann v. People, 15 Hun, 155, the court, in an elaborate opinion, in which the authorities and the arguments for an opposite view are fully reviewed and discussed, holds that "where one executes and issues an instrument purporting on its face to be executed by him as the agent of a principal therein named, he is not guilty of forgery, either at common law or under the statutes of this state, even though he has in fact no authority from such principal to execute the same." (We quote from the syllabus, which is a correct condensation of the opinion.) In Com. v. Baldwin, 11 Gray, 199, 71 Am. Dec. 703, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts says: "It is not, said Sergeant Hawkins, the bare writing of an instrument in another's name without his privity, but the giving it a false appearance of having been executed by him, which makes a man guilty of forgery. If the defendant had written upon the note, 'William Schouler by his agent, Henry W. Baldwin,' the act plainly would not have been forgery. The party taking the note knows it is not the personal act of Schouler. He does not rely upon his signature. He is not deceived by the semblance of his signature. He relies solely upon the averred agency and authority of the defendant to bind Schouler. So, in the case before us, the note was executed in the presence of the promisee. He knew it was not Schouler's signature." In Com. v. Foster, 114 Mass. 311, 19 Am. Rep. 353, the court says: "The falsity of the instrument consists in its purporting to be the note of some party other than the one actually making the signature. The falsity of the act consists in the intent that it shall pass and be received as the note of some other party." In State v. Young, 46 N. H. 266, 88 Am. Dec. 212, the supreme court of that state says: "To forge or to counterfeit is to falsely make, and an alteration of a writing must be falsely made to make it forgery at common law or by our statute. The term 'falsely,' as applied to making or altering a writing in order to make it forgery, has reference not to the contents, or tenor of the writing, or to the fact stated in the writing, because a writing containing a true statement may be forged or counterfeited as well as any other, but it implies that the paper or writing is false, not genuine, fictitious, not a true writing, without regard to the truth or falsehood of the statement it contains,—a writing which is the counterfeit of something which is or has been a genuine writing, or one which purports to be a genuine writing or instrument when it is not." In State v. Wilson, 28 Minn. 52, the court, referring approvingly to Mann v. People, supra, says: "The court decided that this did not constitute forgery, and held, in substance, that when one executes and issues an instrument purporting, on its face, to be executed by him as agent of a principal therein named, he is not guilty of forgery, although he has in fact no authority from such principal to execute or issue the same. In fact, we have found no authority to the contrary, and the text writers uniformly lay down or approve of the same rule." There are numerous other authorities to the same point, but further citation is unnecessary. Of course, the averment in the information that the appellant uttered and passed the said instrument "as true and genuine" is also, under the above views, unsupported by the evidence.

It is contended that the definition of "forgery" in § 470 of the Penal Code makes the crime different from forgery at common law, but, with respect to the question here under discussion, there is no such difference. At common law there were frequent embarrassing questions as to what kinds of writings were the subjects of forgery, while our Code, to avoid those questions, enumerates a very large number of writings as subjects of forgery. But as to what constitutes forgery of instruments which are subjects of forgery, the definitions at common law and by our Code are the same. "Forgery, at the common law, is the false making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, of any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy, or the foundation of a legal liability." 2 Bishop, Crim. L. 8th ed. § 523. In the notes to the section of Bishop just quoted, many other definitions are given, and it will be noticed that the leading descriptive words are "false making," or altering. In our Code the words are "every person who with intent to defraud another falsely makes, alters," etc., any of the written instruments enumerated. The definition is therefore essentially the same in both instances, and it is the same in the statutes of all the other states to which our attention has been called. But the meaning of the words "false making," when applied to forgery, is that hereinbefore stated. The broad and well-established distinction above set forth cannot be ignored by courts or jurors, even when, in their opinion, a more severe punishment should be imposed on a defendant than the one which the law prescribes for the offense of which he is guilty. As was said in Mann v. People, supra, "Whatever his misdeeds, he must not suffer for a crime which he has not committed." Forgery is a grave and exceedingly dangerous crime. A very large part of the business of civilized countries is done by means of negotiable instruments. These are rarely presented by the makers, but are paid to others on the faith that the signatures and the bodies of the instruments are genuine. The business of a bank would come to a standstill, if the paying teller would not pay any check until he could communicate with the drawer. Hence, if there were many successful forgeries, there would be the utmost confusion in business circles. Consequently forgery, no matter how small the amount involved, is made a felony. But obtaining money or other property by false pretenses, where the party defrauded gives credit, not to the genuineness of a writing, but to the person who deceives him, is made a misdemeanor or felony, according to the amount of money obtained by the false representation. For the foregoing reasons the judgment must be reversed, and, of course, another trial upon the theory on which the first trial was conducted would be useless.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: Temple, J.; Henshaw, J.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Allen T. LYNCH, Appt.,

v.

Isaac ROSENTHAL.

(.....Ind.....)

A sale of lots to be drawn by the purchasers, the advantages of location, character, size, or condition as between lots of the same class as arranged by the prices marked to be determined wholly by lot, while one prize lot is to be given to some one of the purchasers as the result of chance, is contrary to public policy and void.

(February 21, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Adams County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. F. Mann, A. P. Beatty, France & Merryman, and Lafollette & Adair for appellant.

Messrs. Richard K. Erwin and J. R. Bobo, for appellee:

The contract sued on is a lottery.

United States v. Olney, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 275; Governors of Almshouse v. American Art Union, 7 N. Y. 228; People v. American Art Union, 13 Barb. 577.

The court cannot take any cognizance of a controversy arising out of it.

Burger v. Rice, 3 Ind. 127; Madison Ins. Co. v. Forsythe, 2 Ind. 484; Collier v. Waugh, 64 Ind. 456; Mullikin v. Davis, 53 Ind. 206; Rothrock v. Perkinson, 61 Ind. 39; Keivert v. Meyer, 62 Ind. 587, 30 Am. Rep. 206.

The whole matter is absolutely void.

Ind. Const. art. 15, § 8; Swain v. Russell, 10 Ind. 438; Burger v. Rice, Madison Ins. Co. v. Forsythe, and Rothrock v. Perkinson, supra; Jones v. Noe, 71 Ind. 368.

Hackney, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit by the appellant against the appellee for specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real estate. The material features of the contract were that Lynch held a contract for the purchase of a tract of land lying adjacent to the corporation line of the city of Decatur, in Adams county, which land he was about to plat as an addition to said city, in accordance with a diagram then drawn, and made a part of the contract, exhibiting fifty-four lots. The appellee and others agreed, severally, by the express provisions of that contract, "to purchase of said first party [Lynch] the number of lots indicated by the number placed opposite" his name, "on the following conditions, to wit: The price of said lots shall be the same as shown by the annexed plat" (the prices varying according to classes and locations), "and whenever all of said lots are sold, except the six lots . . . marked 'Reserved,' . . . and the lot marked 'To be Given Away,' then said second parties shall meet, and determine by lot the number of the lot or lots to be awarded to each respective subscriber, and shall also determine, in some manner to be agreed upon by themselves, the manner of awarding the prize lot. As soon as said lots are awarded, and it is determined in whom the respective ownership shall lie, then the said Allen T. Lynch shall make out and deliver to each party a good and sufficient warranty deed for each of said lots, to each of said subscribers." It is further stipulated that one half of the purchase price for any lot shall be paid or secured when the deed is delivered, and the other half when Lynch might build and put in operation, near the lots, a furniture factory of the character therein described. There were thirty-five subscribers for one lot each, the appellee being one of that number. Each of the three paragraphs of complaint alleges subscriptions for less than the whole number of lots for sale under said contract, and the waiver by all the parties of any requirement to sell all of such lots; that all of the subscribers, including the appellee, met and determined by lot which of the platted lots should be designated for conveyance to each subscriber, including a described lot for the appellee. And it is alleged, in detail, that the appellant complied with the requirements of the contract on his part; that he executed the required deed of conveyance to the appellee, and tendered it to him, and upon his refusal to accept it the same was brought into court for him. To the complaint the appellee filed seven answers in bar, the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th of which were sustained against the appellant's demurrer, and are here assigned as severally insufficient. The 3d answer pleads that all the lots agreed to be sold were not sold, and that the stipulation as to the sale thereof was not waived. This much of the answer presents the same question arising upon the 6th paragraph of answer. Counsel offer no objection to the sufficiency of either of these paragraphs in this respect, and we observe no objection to them. If all of the lots had gone into the hands of separate, bona fide purchasers, their prospective value would certainly have been greater than if but few had been sold and a large number left in the hands of a single owner. But, in addition to this feature of the 3d paragraph, it alleges that after said subscriptions were made the appellant and a number of subscribers met, and, upon the suggestion and assistance of the appellant and his attorney, certain of said fifty-four lots were awarded to the subscribers, severally, by placing the numbers of lots, severally, upon tickets, and placing them in a box, and then by placing the names of the subscribers, severally, upon tickets, and placing them in another box, whereupon two persons, who were blindfolded, drew simultaneously from the boxes a name and a number of a lot, until all of the names were drawn; and in each instance the lot whose number was drawn when a name was drawn was awarded to the subscriber whose name was so drawn, and constituted the selection of the lot to be conveyed to him; that at the same time, and in the same manner, said persons awarded the prize lot to one of the subscribers,—that is to say, they placed in one box thirty-four blank tickets, and one ticket marked "Prize Lot," and in the other box tickets containing, severally, the names of the subscribers, and, as names were drawn from one box, tickets were drawn from the other, until the name of one subscriber and the ticket bearing the "Prize Lot" appeared simultaneously, when that lot was awarded to such subscriber, and was thereafter conveyed by appellant to him. The contract, and the manner of its attempted execution, are alleged to have been void as against public policy. The 4th answer alleged that the prices of the lots, as marked upon the plat, were in excess of the actual values of the lots, and that the appellant, as an inducement to persons to subscribe, offered the chance of obtaining the prize lot in addition to that subscribed for; that appellant participated in the drawing, which was described as in the 3d paragraph. The 5th answer alleged the stipulations of the contract as to the selection of the lots subscribed for, and the awarding of the prize lot; that the lots were not of the values placed upon them; and that the values of those in any class were variant, so that one person drawing a lot at a given price might obtain one of greater or less actual value than that obtained by another subscriber drawing one of the same price. Appellant's learned counsel have not discussed their objections to these answers separately, but they have attacked them collectively as not disclosing the invalidity of the contract. They will be regarded, therefore, as having waived all other questions arising upon them.

NOTE.—On the question what constitutes a lottery scheme, see also People v. Elliott (Mich.) 3 L. R. A. 408, and note; Yellowstone Kit v. State (Ala.) 7 L. R. A. 599, and note; Ballock v. State (Md.) 8 L. R. A. 31 L. R. A.

671, and note; State v. Bonell (La.) 10 L. R. A. 60, and note; Long v. State (Md.) 12 L. R. A. 89, and note, 425; State, Kellogg, v. Kansas Mercantile Assn. (Kan.) 11 L. R. A. 430.

The argument is not made that contracts tainted with the vice of lottery schemes are enforceable. That such contracts are against public policy, and that those who have entered into them shall have no relief, in the courts, to enforce those that are executory, or to recover that which has passed under such as have been executed, is without doubt. Const. art. 8, §15; Burger v. Rice, 3 Ind. 127; Swain v. Busell, 10 Ind. 438; Rothrock v. Perkinson, 61 Ind. 39; United States v. Olney, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 15,918; Whitney v. State, 10 Ind. 404; Crews v. State, 88 Ind. 28; Hudelson v. State, 94 Ind. 426, 48 Am. Rep. 171; Riggs v. Adams, 12 Ind. 199; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1187; Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 2170-2172 (Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 2076-2078). The important question here is as to the character of the present contract. Does it infringe this principle of public policy? This inquiry depends upon what a lottery scheme is. In Hudelson v. State, supra, it was held that where a merchant, with each sale of merchandise to the value of 50 cents, gave the purchaser the right to guess as to the number of beans in a glass globe,—the nearest guesser to receive a gold watch,—the transaction was a lottery. The court there quoted with approval several definitions of a "lottery," some of which are as follows: "Whether the enterprise . . . be called a scheme of chance, a gift enterprise, or a lottery, it is still a scheme of chance, and in that sense a lottery or gift enterprise. Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 15." "Where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, what and how much he who pays the money is to have for it, that is a lottery." Hull v. Ruggles, 56 N. Y. 424. "A lottery is a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance." Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 465. In Rothrock v. Perkinson, supra, it was said: "It is well settled in this state that every scheme for the division or disposition of property or money by chance, or any game of hazard, is prohibited by law, and that every contract or agreement in aid of such a scheme is void as against public policy;" citing, in connection with some of the cases we have cited, those of Higgins v. Miner, 13 Ind. 346; Thatcher v. Morris, 11 N. Y. 437. "Lot" is defined to be "a contrivance to determine a question by chance, or without the action of man's choice or will." Chavannah v. State, 49 Ala. 396; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1181. Webster's International Dictionary defines "lot" as "anything used in determining a question by chance, or without man's choice or will." If the property subject to distribution possesses unequal values, so that one's good or ill luck in the scheme of distribution may determine whether he shall receive more or less for his investment, the scheme is a lottery. Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 465. Nor is it less a lottery because the person whose property is distributed, or the person who pays, does not personally participate in the drawing. Fleming v. Bills, 3 Or. 286; Riggs v. Adams, supra.

By the definite language of the contract in this case, the lot which the appellee agreed to purchase was to be determined by lot. It was to be one of the fifty-four parcels, to be designated wholly by chance, and without the will or choice of the appellant or the appellee. Whether he was to pay $100 or $300 was a question over which he had no choice, and the appellant was without control. Any advantage in the selection—by reason of location, character, size, or condition—of a lot from any of the various classes, as arranged by the prices marked, was not to be determined by the judgment of a subscriber or the seller, but depended wholly upon the chances to be settled by "lot," as the contract provided. Distribution by chance was never more certainly contemplated, and, if not so contemplated, the manner in which the appellee's alleged purchase was determined was never outwitted as a method of chance,—not even by the guessing upon the number of beans in the globe, for in that instance the person to be benefitted exercised his own judgment in determining upon a number. The method adopted was no less objectionable, as one of mere chance, than the methods of the old Louisville Library Association, or the more recent Louisiana Lottery. If there had been nothing in the contract directing the choice by lot, and the choice had been made in the manner alleged in some of the answers, every objection would prevail against it that would obtain if the appellee had been assigned a lot as the result of a game of cards, the throwing of dice, or the turning of the roulette. In any one of these methods the result depends entirely upon chance, and excludes the exercise of the judgment. In the case of Swain v. Russell, supra, this court quoted with approval from State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 334, 66 Am. Dec. 723, "that where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, what the party who pays the money is to have for it, or whether he is to have anything, it is a lottery." In the present case the subscriber is to get a lot more or less valuable, depending alone upon chance; and he is to pay for it a sum, more or less, depending alone upon chance. It was further said by this court in the case mentioned, referring to Den, Wooden, v. Shottwell, 23 N. J. L. 470: "Wooden had divided a parcel of land into fifty-eight lots, of unequal value, from $50 to $600 per lot, and disposed of them at $75 each, and the particular lot of land to which each person was to receive a title was determined by lot. The supreme court of New Jersey say this was, both in form and substance, a lottery." The difference between that case and the present is merely in degree of advantage or disadvantage to the parties, in the amount to be paid, and the proportionate values to be received, as between those who make the payments. The method of distribution in either involves the objectionable feature of chance, upon which the choice of property of higher or lower value and greater or less price is determined without the exercise of the will and judgment of the parties. The manner in which the chances in this case were determined is even more objectionable. Here forty-seven lots were made the subject of choice for the selection of but thirty-five lots, and thereby added to the objection of distributing thirty-five lots by chance the further vice of placing the appellant's remaining twelve lots in the scale, and his ownership, with locations, character, and values, all depending upon the result of the drawing.

Another feature of the contract, and the manner of executing it, is in the offer and award of the "prize lot." Counsel for appellant seek to eliminate this feature of the contract, and to uphold that which remains, by insisting that this lot was a gift to all of the subscribers, without contract that it should go to any one by lot. If this were true, and the appellee was denied the benefit of that part of his contract by the appellant's conveyance to one of the subscribers in violation of the contract, we are at a loss to determine how he (the appellant) is in a position to insist upon the enforcement of a contract which he has violated and rendered impossible of complete execution. But we do not agree with this view of the contract. It is stipulated that a "prize lot" is "to be given away," and is to be "awarded" in a manner to be determined. It is not stipulated that all of the subscribers shall become the owner of this lot, nor, in fact, that any one of them shall, but when the parties came together, with the knowledge and consent, if not the direct participancy, of the appellant, the contract is construed to mean that the "prize lot" is to be awarded to some one of the subscribers, who, by the result of chance, is proved to possess the luck to have his name and the "prize lot" ticket drawn simultaneously. This construction of the contract is ratified and acted upon by the appellant in the act of conveying the lot to the lucky subscriber. This construction of the contract renders certain that doubtful part of it which omitted to stipulate the person to whom and object for which the "prize lot" was to be awarded. It was to increase the interest of a subscriber, who, by subscribing for one lot, had the chance, for the same money, to get two lots. We find, therefore, that both the contract and the manner of attempting to comply with its terms were against good morals, forbidden by public policy, and void.

Appellant insists that the lower court erred in sustaining a demurrer to his reply to these answers, in which reply he alleged that, when he tendered appellee's deed, it was declined, not because the transaction was against public policy and void, but for the reason, then stated by him, that appellant had not complied with the requirement of the contract as to the building of a factory. Authorities to the proposition that one may not assert one defense out of court, and another in court, to the prejudice of the complaining party, are cited. We do not stop to consider the true doctrine of these cases. It is enough to say that one who asks equity must present clean hands in which to receive it. Here the appellant, from the beginning, had unclean hands. He originated, carried forward, and in this suit sought to enforce, a vicious contract. He is in no position to ask that equity estop his ally from exposing the vice of that contract, the enforcement of which public morals forbid. The evidence supports the judgment of the circuit court. There is no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Tennessee, Appt.,
v.

H. S. OLD.

(95 Tenn. 723.)

A statute making it an indictable offense to vote without presenting to the judges of election an original poll-tax receipt, or a certified duplicate copy thereof, or a certificate of a constable or deputy collector, or else an affidavit of the voter, that he has paid his poll-tax and that his receipt is lost or misplaced, is within the power of the legislature, even as applied to a voter who has actually paid his poll-tax, where the Constitution requires "satisfactory evidence" of such payment and also gives the legislature in a note to State, Allison, v. Blake (N. J.) 25 L. R. A. 480.

NOTE.—The general question how far there is an absolute constitutional right of voting is presented 31 L. R. A.

power to enact laws "to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box."

(March 23, 1896.)

APPEAL by the State from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Wayne County quashing an indictment against the defendant for illegal voting. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. W. Pickle, Attorney General for the State.

No appearance for appellee.

Snodgrass, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was indicted in the circuit court of Wayne county for illegal voting. The charge was that, in a certain election, held on the 15th of October, 1895, in the fourth civil district of Wayne county, to elect a justice of the peace, the defendant, being over the age of twenty-one years, and having had a polltax assessed against him for the year next preceding the election, which he had paid, did unlawfully vote in said election without furnishing to the judges thereof satisfactory evidence that he had paid said poll tax, to wit, that he did not present to the judges of said election his original poll-tax receipt, or a duly certified duplicate and copy of the same, or the duly authenticated certificate of a constable or deputy collector, as required by law, nor make affidavit in writing signed by him that he had paid his polltax and that his receipt therefor was lost or misplaced. This indictment was quashed on motion of defendant, and the state appealed in error.

The correctness or incorrectness of the judgment depends upon the question whether chapter 23 of the Acts of the Extra Session of the Legislature of 1891 is or is not constitutional. There is no doubt of the application of that act, nor is there any objection to the manner of its passage. On August 7, 1891, Gov. Buchanan issued his proclamation convening the general assembly in extraordinary session. The law in controversy was included in the call, and the manner of its subsequent passage by the legislature thus convened by the governor, its regular enactment by that body, and its approval by the governor, are not questioned. It was properly passed on the 18th and approved on the 19th of September, 1891 (Acts Ex. Sess. 1891, pp. 45-48). Nor is there any question of the validity of the indictment thereunder as to form or terms. The 1st section of the act provided "that chapter 222 of the acts of the regular session, approved March 30, 1891, regulating the elective franchise [which act was itself an amendment of the act of 1890, Ex. Sess. p. 67, chap. 26], in accordance with art. 4, § 1, of the Constitution of the state, be so amended as to require that the satisfactory evidence to be furnished by the voter to the judges of the election, whether general or special, whether national, state, county, or municipal, that he has paid the poll tax contemplated by the Constitution assessed against him, if any, for the year next preceding said election, shall consist of the original poll-tax receipt or a duly certified duplicate and copy of same, or the duly authenticated certificate set out in § 8 [which provided for a trustee's certificate and its form], when said tax has been paid to a constable, and not to said trustee, properly certified by the trustee, or shall make affidavit in writing and signed by the voter that he has paid his poll tax and that his receipt is lost or misplaced, which affidavit shall be filed with the said judges and by them attached and made an exhibit to the returns of said election." The 5th section of this act provided "that any person voting, or any judge of any election permitting, knowingly, any person to vote, in the same without having first complied with the provisions of § 1 of this act [the section just quoted], shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $50 and imprisoned in the county jail or workhouse ninety days." A reference to the indictment clearly shows that it states an offense under this act, and, if the act be valid, is clearly good. The objection of the defendant is that the act is unconstitutional, and this involves the consideration of the constitutional provisions which it is urged, on the one hand, invalidate, and, on the other, authorize, this statute. These are embodied in art. 4, § 1, of the Constitution of 1870. That section reads as follows: "Every male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, being a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state for twelve months, and of the county wherein he may offer his vote for six months next preceding the day of election, shall be entitled to vote for members of the general assembly and other civil officers of the county or district in which he resides; and there shall be no qualification attached to the right of suffrage, except that each voter shall give to the judges of election where he offers to vote satisfactory evidence that he has paid the poll taxes assessed against him for such preceding period as the legislature shall prescribe, and at such time as may be prescribed by law, without which his vote cannot be received. And all male citizens of the state shall be subject to the payment of poll taxes and the performance of military duty, within such ages as may be prescribed by law. The general assembly shall have power to enact laws requiring voters to vote in the election precincts in which they may reside, and laws to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box." Independently of the conclusion of this provision, it cannot be successfully denied, and is not disputed, that the legislature would have the right to make the furnishing "satisfactory evidence" of the payment of a poll tax a prerequisite of voting, and its nonfurnishing an indictable offense; and the original act of 1890, which we have cited, confined itself to these general terms. The first amendatory act of 1891 provided that the "satisfactory evidence" should consist of the original poll-tax receipt, or a duly certified copy, or an affidavit that the voter had paid his poll tax and that his receipt was lost or misplaced. Acts 1891, p. 436. The act we are considering enumerated these, and added provision for certificate when paid to a constable,—not an enlargement, but rather an explanatory provision, covering case of such payment, which might have been of doubtful construction under the first act of 1891.

The objection made to the act is not that the legislature could not prescribe that "satisfactory evidence" should be furnished, nor is it objected that the legislature (in prescribing that such evidence should be a receipt for payment, or a certified copy, or the affidavit of the voter that he had paid the tax and had such receipt, which was lost or misplaced) was requiring evidence not satisfactory, or evidence difficult to make, or which, in any event, could exclude the voter from the exercise of his right to vote. It is obvious that to require the original alone, or either the original or copy of receipt, as the only evidence, might make voting a matter of difficulty, and, in case of loss, an impossibility; but, when to these is added the provision that the voter's own affidavit of their loss is sufficient to enable him to vote without them, it is obvious that no hindrance is imposed to his free and unobstructed right of suffrage. It cannot be denied that the original receipt was good evidence, nor, in its absence, that a certified copy is good evidence. It is only in favor of the right, however, that the legislature makes them "satisfactory," for it might be true that a voter might have either, and yet not in fact have paid the tax. So, it is true that his affidavit might be false, and still it is made evidence. In other words, the legislature has left with the voter, unhampered and unhindered, the opportunity, as well as the right, to furnish such satisfactory evidence in the kind of evidence prescribed, and, having done so, has no more nor less discharged than it was authorized to do, its constitutional duty. If, under the guise of requiring satisfactory evidence, it had acted arbitrarily, and contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, if not to its letter, its action might well have been held void; but when it adopts, even under that part of the constitutional article requiring the offering of satisfactory evidence, only the production of that evidence which all mankind would deem to be such as the voter could easiest make, and which is most naturally expected to establish the fact to be shown, it could not be held that the legislature had transcended its power under the Constitution had the first clause of § 1 of article 4 stood alone. But the clause in question does not stand alone. It was obvious to the Constitution makers that fraud and force might be attempted in our elections, as they had been everywhere else; and so it was deemed proper, though it was probably not essential (for, in the absence of restriction by the Constitution, the legislature would have possessed general power on this subject, as all others of legislative nature), to add specific power to enact laws "to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box," thus putting its constitutional authority beyond cavil under the general terms of the Constitution as to "satisfactory evidence." But under such terms, repeated only and literally in a statutory enactment (as was the case in the act of 1890), and leaving this phrase to be construed as might best accord with the capacity, judgment, and partisan bias (where it might exist) of all the thousands of judges of elections who would thereafter have to construe and give it effect, it is clear that no greater source of oppression and impurity of the ballot box could be conceived than might be originated in diverse and improper construction and exercise of such undefined power by the judges of election. Voters might be denied the privilege of suffrage upon the most false and flimsy pretenses of the insufficiency of their evidence of payment of poll tax, and, on the other hand, might be permitted improperly to exercise it upon the most unsatisfactory, and, indeed, upon no, evidence, provided the judges of election should hold themselves satisfied with whatever was offered or with none.

31 L. R. A.

The framers of the Constitution, therefore, did not intend to leave the legislature, by any restriction, powerless to prevent this result, but especially, along with this declared authority to legislate on the poll-tax provision so as to designate the time preceding election for which it should be paid and ages within which it should be paid, authorized it, on this and all other subjects, to enact such laws as would secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box. Within proper limits the legislature is the judge of what such laws should be, and it was clearly within their province to say that this was such a law. Cook v. State, 90 Tenn. 407, 13 L. R. A. 183. It is obvious, too, that it is so in fact. We have already shown that the evidence which the act declares to be satisfactory is that most naturally and most easily obtainable and to be made by the voter, and that only which ordinarily and by common consent is assumed by all to be the acceptable evidence of the fact of payment. But we have also suggested that while, for all convenient and practical purposes, it is the most available and best evidence, it is not, in fact, the best. The best evidence which could be required, perhaps, by any judge of election, would be the actual payment in his presence, by the voter, of his tax to the collector. Now, suppose, under the Constitution, the legislature had no power to prescribe what should be satisfactory evidence, and the phrase left in general terms to the judges of election for their construction and their guidance, and that some or all judges would be satisfied with no less evidence than that suggested, it is obvious that such view would be subversive practically of the right of suffrage. So other modes of proof might be demanded,—as, that the voter should produce witnesses, to prevent imposition of forged receipts on the judges, and then witnesses of the good character of these, that the judges might be thoroughly satisfied. And so illustrations might be multiplied of the various constructions which, naturally and innocently, different judges of elections might put upon these words, to say nothing of the multiplied frivolous and false constructions which extreme partisan officials might give to them, to defeat or obstruct the votes of those who should be of another political party than that of the judges. And, too, in the matter of permitting voters to cast their ballots on "satisfactory evidence" of poll-tax payment, what a diversity of construction would prevail! In one case the mere statement of the voter would be deemed satisfactory; in another, not; and so of unsworn statements of other witnesses for the voter.

And, again, because some one of the judges or others knew, or did not know, that he had voted at a former election in same year, or because he was good for the tax, he is presumed to have paid it, or, being honest, that presumption is indulged; or because somebody would say that they had heard the collector say this tax was paid, or that all poll tax of the given county was paid, hence no special evidence in the particular case is required, etc. These illustrations, too, might be multiplied indefinitely, but the ones given are sufficient to show how differently and erroneously might be construed and applied the general terms used in the Constitution if it was not permitted to be given one easy, fixed, plain, and natural limitation by the legislature; or, speaking more accurately, if the legislature was not permitted to prescribe just, plain, easily observable offerings of proof as the "satisfactory evidence" of the Constitution, and thus destroy the facility to suppress the freedom of elections, and to sully the purity of the ballot box, which lurks beneath the dangerous limits of this general phraseology.

It was not only, therefore, within the power of the legislature, but it was the duty of that body, to pass some such law as would define this evidence, and compel judges of election to accept it when offered, in all cases alike, and thus enable every voter in Tennessee to cast his free and unhindered ballot, and, at the same time, to prevent the denial to any voter, however low and humble, ignorant or illiterate, of such right, by the adoption of such method of evidence as he could get, or if he could not get, could give himself, when he went to vote, and thus make it impossible for him to be cheated out of the privilege of voting, under the constitutional provision on this question. On the general question of the validity and strict binding effects of such laws as require, not merely the existence of certain facts, but particular proof of their existence to be made, as a prerequisite to voting, there is no doubt, and we refer to a few of the authorities where the question is more elaborately considered. It is too well settled now to need argument or extended statement. Paine, Elections, § 451; Brightly, Elect. Cas. p. 452; Re Cusick's Election, 136 Pa. 476, 10 L. R. A. 228; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 758; 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 544; Re Duffy's Election, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 531. And that a vote cast without such prerequisite proof of fact is illegal, though the fact existed, is well recognized. Some of the cases referred to, and numerous others, cover this proposition. These are on the general subject, but the express language of our Constitution is not (merely) that the voter shall pay, but that "he shall give to the judges of election satisfactory evidence of payment, without which his vote cannot be received." The statute, in pursuance of this provision, requires the giving of such satisfactory evidence, and makes the failure to do so an indictable offense.

The court makes neither the Constitution nor the law, but upon it is devolved the duty of applying them, and, so doing, we are left no alternative but to hold the indictment in this case valid.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore reversed, and the case remanded for trial.

31 L. R. A.

Sims LATTA, Exr., etc., of W. H. Brown, Deceased,
v.

Mary Lou BROWN.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. Other devisees must contribute to make up a deficit in a devise caused by a widow's election to take dower instead of a gift under the will, where the refused share of the widow given to the disappointed devisee is not sufficient to supply the loss to such devisee.
2. The right of remaindermen to be accelerated and immediately to enter upon and enjoy the use of land devised subject to a widow's life estate, when she refuses to take under the will, is subject to the superior right of a disappointed devisee whose share is diminished by the widow's election to have compensation for such loss by taking the life interest which the widow refuses.

(March 7, 1886.)

APPEAL by defendants, the Alexander children, from a decree of the Chancery Court for Maury County determining the rights of beneficiaries in the will of W. H. Brown, deceased, upon his widow's electing against the will and taking some of the devised property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Vertrees & Vertrees, for appellants:

The interest which Mrs. Brown was given by the will may be sequestered to compensate Mrs. Taylor for the loss she has sustained by reason of Mrs. Brown's dissent and the allotment of part of her portion to Mrs. Brown as dower; but the interests of the Alexander children cannot be sequestered for that purpose.

Dower is the estate which the wife has by operation of law in the lands of her husband. Combs v. Young, 4 Yerg. 218, 26 Am. Dec. 225.

By Mill. & V. Code, § 3244, it has been restricted and limited to narrower bounds than those by which it was defined at common law, but as far as it goes it is still the same estate. This estate is one she is entitled to under the law, which no one can defeat.

Frost v. Etheridge, 1 Dev. L. 30; Combs v. Young, 4 Yerg. 229, 26 Am. Dec. 225.

Such, however, is not the case with respect to the widow's right in the personal estate.

Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 593.

When a widow dissents she shall be endowed as if her husband had died intestate.

Code, § 3251.

The mansion house shall be included in the dower estate.

Code, § 3247; Vincent v. Vincent, 1 Heisk. 333.

With the possibility of a dissent before him, and with certain knowledge as to the consequence which must follow, Dr. Brown made a will whereby he gave the mansion house to NOTE.—The law as to the effect of a widow's election to take against a will upon rights of other persons in the estate is believed to be entirely found in the present case and in the note to Jones v. Knappen (Vt.) 14 L. R. A. 233, referred to by the court.

his daughter instead of his wife, and made no provision whatever against the disappointments which his daughter and grandchildren would suffer in the event his wife should dissent from his will. It must therefore be assumed that he intended the consequences of a dissent on the part of the widow to fall precisely where the law places them.

Re Vance's Estate, 141 Pa. 201, 12 L. R. A. 227.

The doctrine of election is founded on the same reasons and governed by the same rules when applied to a widow claiming dower as when applied to any other case.

2 Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 1081; Leonard v. Steele, 4 Barb. 22; Rutherford v. Mayo, 76 Va. 117; Jennings v. Jennings, 21 Ohio St. 81.

One equitable or chancery consequence is that "compensation" is oftentimes allowed.

No court is authorized to make a new distribution for the sake of equality.

Re Vance's Estate, supra; Gretton v. Harvard, 1 Swanst. 441, note.

Equity will sequester the interest intended for the electing beneficiary, to compensate Mrs. Taylor for the loss. But no other interests than that can be sequestered.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 517; 1 Woerner, American Law of Administration, § 119; Gretton v. Harvard, 1 Swanst. 441; Jennings v. Jennings, 21 Ohio St. 58; McReynolds v. Counts, 9 Gratt. 242; Timberlake v. Parish, 5 Dana, 352; Sandoe's Appeal, 65 Pa. 314; Re Batione's Estate, 136 Pa. 307; Gallagher's Appeal, 87 Pa. 200; Jones v. Knappen, 63 Vt. 391, 14 L. R. A. 293; Colvert v. Wood, 93 Tenn. 454.

A dissenting widow takes a distributive share of the personalty subject to the testator's debts and the expense of administration. It is not protected like the dower.

Code, § 3252; Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 556.

Legacies must abate ratably when necessary to pay debts and give the widow her third of the personalty remaining after paying debts.

Pritchard, Wills, § 471.

Mr. N. R. Wilkes also for appellants.

Mr. E. H. Hatcher for Mrs. Taylor.

Mr. L. B. Hughes for the Taylor children.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Dr. W. H. Brown, of Columbia, Maury county, Tenn., died, leaving surviving him his widow, Mrs. Mary Lou Brown, his daughter, Mrs. Maggie C. Taylor, and Lizzie C. and Willie B. Alexander, his grandchildren by a deceased daughter. He left a will by which he devised to his daughter Mrs. Taylor, for life, with remainder to her children, his residence, two storehouses and lots, and three other lots in Columbia. He left a farm of about 630 acres of land in Maury county, which, by his will, he divided into two equal parts, one half of which he gave to his widow for life, and the other half to the Alexander children, with certain limitations over in the event of their dying without issue. The half given to the wife, upon her death, was to be equally divided between Mrs. Taylor and the Alexander children, and the widow was given choice of the two portions. The personal property was also bequeathed, but as it all was required to pay debts, it need not be further considered. The widow dissented from the will, and dower was thereupon assigned her, embracing the residence, one storehouse, and the rent of the other for four years, all of which was property given by the will to Mrs. Taylor. The farm was divided into two parcels, of unequal size, but equal value, and Mrs. Taylor was allowed to take choice, on the idea that she was substituted to Mrs. Brown's rights in this regard, and she chose lot No. 1, being the larger parcel. Upon the bill filed to wind up the estate and settle the rights of the parties, the chancellor decreed that Mrs. Taylor should take the lot No. 1 for life, as part compensation for what she lost by the dissent, and that injury further had resulted to her as a consequence of the widow's dissent, and that such further injury or damage should be borne by Mrs. Taylor and the Alexander children in the proportion which they took in value in the estate of Dr. Brown. The master made a report designed to show the respective values of the shares, but the court was of opinion that it did not sufficiently appear what the amount of Mrs. Taylor's loss or injury was, and the report was set aside, and the master was directed to report in dollars and cents what would be just compensation to Mrs. Taylor arising out of the dissent and allotment of dower. Taylor and wife excepted to the action of the court refusing to confirm the clerk's report, but did not appeal. The Alexander children, by leave of the court, appealed before the coming in of the second report. The court of chancery appeals held with the chancellor, that not only the property thus refused by the widow could be given to the devisee, thus disappointed, but that the other devisees must contribute pro rata to make good the deficit, if any, according to the respective values given to them, the land renounced by Mrs. Brown in this case being insufficient to make good to Mrs. Taylor the loss sustained by her in consequence of the dissent; and it is mainly upon the latter portion of this holding that the case is now before us, it being clear that the devise refused by Mrs. Brown must go to Mrs. Taylor to reimburse or indemnify her in her loss under the dissent, unless the doctrine of acceleration prevails in behalf of the Alexander children. The holding and reasoning of the court of chancery appeals is that, when the widow dissented, her right of dower attached and became an encumbrance on all the testator's lands, no matter to whom devised; and that it "hovered" over all of them as an encumbrance until assignment made, and, inasmuch as the assignment made in this case was exclusively out of property devised to Mrs. Taylor, that devised to the Alexander children was thus relieved of the encumbrance, and, upon broad grounds of equity, their shares must contribute pro rata to reimburse Mrs. Taylor for the loss sustained by her. This contention, thus presented, has not been directly adjudicated in Tennessee, but it is claimed that in principle it has been decided in favor of the holding of the court of chancery appeals. For the Alexander children it is earnestly insisted that by Mill. & V. Code, § 3247, it is provided that dower shall be so allotted as to embrace the dwelling house, outhouses, buildings, and other improvements, or, if it be unjust to give the widow all the house, a proper part must be assigned, and, unless great injustice result on account of the value of the house, its value is not to be taken into consideration. Vincent v. Vincent, 1 Heisk. 333. It is therefore argued that the right of dower is not a common burden which hovers over all the land until it is localized by assignment in a particular locality, but that it must be so located as to embrace the mansion house and other improvements, although it may embrace other lands in order to make the amount to which the widow is entitled. Assuming the correctness of this contention, it is therefrom argued that when the testator made his will, giving his mansion house to Mrs. Taylor, he must have had in view the law that his widow could take it by dissenting from the will; and inasmuch as he made no provision for such contingency, he must have intended that in such event Mrs. Taylor should bear the loss so far as she could not be compensated out of the property devised to the widow, and which, upon her dissent, she renounced. On the other hand, it is insisted for Mrs. Taylor that, the renounced property having been exhausted without fully compensating the disappointed devisee, she has the right to call upon all the other devisees to contribute pro rata to make up this deficit, and thus execute the will of the testator and preserve the rights of each, so far as may be, under the changed condition of affairs.

There is no serious question made, and cannot be, that the dissent of the widow, and her election to take what the law gives her, instead of under the will, is followed by the usual consequence of an election in other cases, and that the property designed for her in the will must be sequestered and given to her for compensation, as in other cases of election. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 497-517; Jennings v. Jennings, 21 Ohio St. 56, 81; Dean v. Hart, 62 Ala. 310; McKey-nolds v. Counts, 9 Gratt. 242; Kinnaird v. Williams, 8 Leigh, 400, 81 Am. Dec. 658; Sandoe's Appeal, 65 Pa. 314; Re Batione's Estate, 136 Pa. 307; Colvert v. Wood, 93 Tenn. 454; Cruftman v. Cauffman, 17 Serg. & R. 26; Callahan v. Robinson, 30 S. C. 249, 3 L. R. A. 497; Allen v. Hannum, 15 Kan. 625; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 255, and notes; Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 55; Jones v. Knappen, 63 Vt. 391, 14 L. R. A. 293. But, in order to sustain the holding of the court of chancery appeals in this case, there must be the further interposition of the doctrine of contribution between the devisees in order to make up the deficit, when there is such deficit, after applying the property devised to the widow, and refused by her. For the Alexander children, it is insisted that no such doctrine of contribution exists, but that only the general results of an election follow, and hence only the refused share of the widow can be given to the disappointed devisee. The learned court of chancery appeals, speaking through Judge M. M. Neil, cites Henderson v. Green, 34 Iowa, 437, also reported in 11 Am. Rep. 149, and the case of Robinson v. Harrison, 2 Tenn. Ch. 11, as conclusive upon the point presented. In the first case the testator devised the plantation on which he resided to his wife, in lieu of dower, also certain personal property, and he gave 40 acres of land to Euretta Green, and 160 acres to Emily Booher, subject to the life estate of the widow. The widow dissented and took dower, and 80 acres of that assigned Emily Booher was given to her in the assignment, and 40 acres additional of Emily Booher's share was sold to pay debts. The court held that both devises to Mrs. Green and Mrs. Booher were specific, and that Mrs. Green's 40 acres must contribute also to the common burden of the widow's share upon her dissent. It will be noted in this case that all the lands, including the 40 acres given to Mrs. Green, were given to the widow for life, so that, to the extent of the life estate of the widow, it was simply sequestering that property given by the will to her, and not separate property given exclusively to a devisee, and it is conceded that all the property given to the widow may be sequestered under the general rule. It seems, however, that the court in that case did not limit the sequestration to the life estate, but held the entire 40 acres liable to contribution. The court also said that it was manifest from the terms of the will that the testator intended Mrs. Green should take her 40 acres burdened with the encumbrance of the widow's dower. We find no express language to this effect in the will, and the manifest intention must appear from implication or the general principles of law in such cases, if at all.

It is said that the later case of Gainer v. Gates, 73 Iowa, 149, is in conflict with the conclusions of the court of chancery appeals, and probably with the earlier case of Henderson v. Green, 34 Iowa, 437, 11 Am. Rep. 149. In it, Gainer devised all his lands, except his mansion and homestead, to his wife, and gave the homestead to plaintiff, and gave twelve legacies to twelve different legatees. The widow was, however, given a life estate in all the property, real and personal. The widow dissented and the homestead was assigned to her as dower, and this defeated the legacy to Gates. Suit was thereupon brought by Gates against the administrator and heirs to recover the value of the homestead thus lost. The effort in that case was to charge the estate with the value of the homestead, and the court held that indirectly this was an effort to recover from the heirs of the testator, and taking it out of the estate was making all contribute pro rata. The court said: "The law presumes that the execution of the will was with a knowledge of the law by the testator. He knew that nothing would pass to plaintiff except with the widow's consent. The law will presume that it was his purpose to make the devise contingent upon such consent; that his purpose and wish was that, if the wife did not hold the homestead, plaintiff should, but, if she did, plaintiff should take nothing by the will. If we may inquire into the purpose and wish of the testator, we can reach no other than this conclusion." The question of compensation under the general doctrine of election appears to have been ignored. This case is somewhat obscure, both in its statement of facts and conclusions of law, and was decided upon several grounds not applicable in this case. It was not an effort to recover from the legatees or devisees, but from the administrator and heirs, and it appeared there was fund enough passing in residuum to the heirs to compensate for the loss, and it was this fund which was sought to be reached. The legatees and devisees were not before the court, and not affected by the holding. The court said: "We need not inquire whether this doctrine is applicable to the case of the widow and the beneficiaries under the will other than plaintiff, for the reason that no claim is made against them in this action. It is surely not applicable to the heirs, who will take the residue of the estate." And the court's conclusion was that the plaintiff could not recover against the estate, which was not bound by any contract to him. Mr. Farnham, the annotator of the Lawyer's Reports, cites this as one of the two cases out of harmony and line with the current of authority, and refers to it as a peculiar case. It clearly does not consider the right to contribution from the other legatees and devisees under the will; and the doctrine of compensation so uniformly held in other cases was not discussed, but was ignored, and the decision was placed upon other and different grounds. See Jones v. Knappen (Vt.) 14 L. R. A. 293, and notes.

The special question of requiring the residuary legatees and devisees or the heirs to make good such deficiency is considered in the cases of Re Vance's Estate, 141 Pa. 201, 12 L. R. A. 227; Gallagher's Appeal, 87 Pa. 200; Timberlake v. Purish, 5 Dana, 352. The gist of these decisions, as we understand them, is that the residuary legatees, and, by parity of reason, heirs, will be required to make good such loss, rather than specific legatees. In the case at bar this question does not arise, as there is no residuary fund, and no intestacy as to any property, and the effort is to enforce contribution among special devisees; that is, devisees of specific property.

Sandoe's Appeal, 65 Pa. 314, is much commented upon. In that case, Bard, the testator, gave to his daughters pecuniary legacies, to his son William his mansion place, subject to certain charges for his wife, and, if he died before twenty-one without issue, the mansion place to go over to Jefferson, his other son, in fee. The executors were directed to buy a farm for Jefferson, equal to the mansion place, if he desired it, and to sell other real estate for that purpose. The widow dissented. The assets were not sufficient to meet the provisions of the will. The court directed the pecuniary legacies to the daughters to be paid in full, and whatever deficit there might be after sequestrating the benefits intended for the widow, and selling the real estate specified in the will, should be paid out of William's mansion farm. It was evident from the whole will that the testator intended William and Jefferson to share equally in his estate. The decree directed the deficiency, after selling the other real estate, to be raised out of William's mansion farm, taking care, however, to preserve the equality of value between the two brothers. It appeared that William had received $4,123.91 more than his share, and it is evident the clause in the decree had special reference to this feature, and intended it to be refunded if necessary; and we think the case not only holds and announces the general doctrine that the renounced share of the widow shall be applied to the reimbursement of the disappointed legatee or devisee, but that the remaining devisee, William, must contribute to make up any deficiency so at all times to keep the shares of William and Jefferson equal, which was the primary intention in the will.

The case of Robinson v. Harrison, 2 Tenn. Ch. 11, is also referred to as sustaining the conclusion of the court of chancery appeals by that court. In that case the chancellor held that, when the personal assets were insufficient to pay debts and the widow's distributive share of one third, it was the duty of the executor to make the deficiency fall proportionately on all the specific devisees and bequests, and to account to the widow for the stock bequeathed to her, less her proportion of the loss, and he did not have the right to select one legacy to bear the burden of the widow's dissent, whatever may have been his right to dispose of the stock to pay debts. This case, it appears, was affirmed in the supreme court. It is assailed upon the ground that the court proceeded in that case upon the idea that the widow's "third" of personal estate was, like her dower, superior to the claims of creditors, which was incorrect, and that the legatees and devisees made no question or resistance, and such seems to have been the case. But this, we think, does not destroy the force of the decision, because the widow's right to her "thirds" is superior to the claims of special legatees under the will; and the court proceeded upon this idea in making the burden of the "thirds" fall equally upon all the special legacies, there being no general or residuary legacy. This was evidently what the court intended to decide in a case of legacies, making the widow's "thirds" occupy the place of dower in this case.

A very strong and ingenious argument is made upon the theory that the dower right before assignment is not an encumbrance "hovering" over the whole of the lands of the deceased. It is said that, upon the husband's death, the dower of the widow becomes a consummate or "vested right," which ripens on assignment into a freehold estate; and this is unquestionably correct. 2 Scribner, Dower, 8, 26, 28. But it is further insisted that it is a localized right to the mansion house, and not an encumbrance hanging over the whole estate, and that the mansion must be assigned unless great injustice would result, and even then a part of the mansion must be assigned, and hence it must be so localized as to rest on the mansion premises; and the testator, knowing this as a matter of law, intended that, if the mansion was taken by the widow, then Mrs. Taylor, to whom it was given, must lose it. Even if we were to concede the correctness of the proposition as to the first statement, that the widow must take the mansion in her dower assignment, the conclusion deduced is still a debatable proposition, and by no means follows as a logical result. But we are not prepared to assent to the correctness of the first proposition. We do not think that, prior to the allotment of dower, the widow acquires a freehold estate in the land at any place. She has no estate until assignment; afterwards she has. Thompson v. Stacy, 10 Yerg. 493; Whyte v. Nashville, 2 Swan, 364. She is not required to take the mansion in her dower. She may waive it, and take dower elsewhere. The right to the mansion rests upon her choice alone, and it is not imposed upon her against her will. The heirs or devisees cannot require her to take it, but it is optional with her. If, in this particular case, she had elected to take the lands allotted to the Alexander children, would it be insisted that they would have been confined to the land refused by her to reimburse themselves? It is evident in this case that the testator did not intend his daughter and grandchildren should share equally in his bounty, but only in certain proportions, and this is not disturbed, but followed, by the conclusion reached by the court of chancery appeals; that is, the relative proportions of Mrs. Taylor and the Alexander children are attempted to be preserved as indicated in the will.

The guardian ad litem for the Alexander children presents still another view of the case, so far as their rights are concerned, which is that, by the will, they are remaindermen of a fourth of the tract of 630 acres of land offered to the widow for life by the will, but renounced and refused by her upon her dissent. It is insisted that, the widow having declined and refused to take this life estate in one half the land, the estates of the remaindermen were accelerated, and they became, immediately on her refusal, entitled to enter upon and enjoy this part of the land out of which the widow was, by the will, to have a life estate. This contention is based upon the holding of this court in Robinson v. Harrison, 2 Tenn. Ch. 11; Waddle v. Terry, 4 Coldw. 51; Armstrong v. Park, 9 Humph. 195; Brown v. Hunt, 12 Heisk. 405; State v. Smith, 16 Lea, 667. And this is unquestionably the general rule, but, under the facts in this case, the right or equity in Mrs. Taylor to compensation for her loss is superior to, and must prevail over, the right and equity of the remainderman to be accelerated. Wood v. Wood, 1 Met. (Ky.) 515; Timberlake v. Parish, 5 Dana, 352; Jones v. Knappen (Vt.) 14 L. R. A. 294, 295, and notes on page 295.

The decision of the Court of Chancery Appeals is affirmed, and the cause will be remanded to the chancery court at Columbia for the execution of the order made by that court, and the costs will be equally divided, as decreed by that court.

STATE of Tennessee, to Use of OVERTON COUNTY,

v.

Hardy COPELAND et al., Appts.

(.....Tenn.)

1. An officer is not an insurer of the safety of public funds in his hands on a bond faithfully to perform his duties and to collect and pay over moneys, but responsible only for the exercise of good faith, diligence, prudence, caution, and a disinterested effort to keep and preserve the funds for those entitled.

NOTE.—As to the conflicting authorities on the liability upon an officer's bond for loss of money by bank failure, see Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. (Colo.) 22 L. R. A. 449, and note; also the case of Fairchild v. Hedges, post, 851.

31 L. R. A.

2. An officer is not to be considered as a debtor for public funds in his hands which he has no right to use in any way except for the purposes of his trust; and he holds them, not strictly as a special bailee, but as a trustee clothed with legal duties and liabilities.

3. The liability of a county trustee who gives a bond faithfully to perform the duties of his office and collect and pay over school taxes, is fixed, not merely by the terms of his bond, but by the laws relating to his office.

4. A deposit of public funds in a bank of undoubted standing and reputation is not negligence or want of proper business prudence and caution on the part of an officer.

(March 2, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Overton County Chancery Court in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to enforce liability on the county trustee's bond for money which he had not turned over. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Vertrees & Vertrees, J. A. Barnes, W. W. Goodpasture, and W. H. Hussey for appellants.

Mr. G. B. Murray for appellee.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill against the defendant Hardy Copeland and others, as sureties upon his official bond as county trustee of Overton county, for school taxes deposited by him in the Nashville Savings Company, at Nashville, Tenn., called in the record and generally known as "Marr's Bank." Upon the hearing, the chancellor gave judgment against the defendants for $3,119, and interest from October 12, 1895, and all costs, and the defendants have appealed and assigned errors. These assignments are as follows: (1) In finding that Mr. Copeland was not sufficiently careful and diligent; (2) in holding that Mr. Copeland should have acted only upon an examination of the bank, made or caused to be made, or upon knowledge; (3) in holding that Mr. Copeland, as trustee, was bound, in law, to account for and pay over this fund, unless it was lost by the act of God or the public enemy; (4) in rendering a decree against Mr. Copeland and his sureties for the full penalty of the bond, to be discharged upon the payment of $3,119 and interest; (5) in rendering a decree against the defendants for said $3,119, interest, and costs; (6) in not rendering a decree dismissing the bill.

Only two real questions are presented, the first of which is whether Copeland was an insurer of the safety of the funds in his hands, and the other whether, if not an insurer, he exercised that degree of care that he should have done for the safe keeping of the funds in his hands. We consider the first proposition primarily, for, if it be held that the trustee is liable for such funds in every event and under all contingencies, except when the loss arises from the act of God or the public enemy, then the latter question is immaterial, and need not be considered. The learned chancellor in the court below delivered a written opinion, from which the reasons and grounds of his decision may be gathered. He says: "I am fully satisfied that Copeland did not intend or expect to lose the money when he placed it in Marr's Bank, and he believed it was safe there until a very short time before the bank failed, and perhaps up to the date of its closing." The chancellor then adds: "In the view I take of the case, conceding that Copeland acted in good faith, believing that this bank was entirely safe, the question is, Can a trustee make such a defense avail him in case the money is lost by the failure of the bank?" And the chancellor finally says: "I am constrained to hold that the defendant Copeland and his sureties are responsible for the money under the facts of this case, both upon the ground that the defense set up in the answer that the bank had a good reputation, was an old bank of high standing, that the deposit was made in good faith and confidence, and lost by the failure of the bank and without negligence on the part of Mr. Copeland, was not good in law, and also that the facts do not establish that high degree of diligence that would excuse defendants from accounting for the money even under the rule requiring a 'faithful discharge of duty.' . . . This is not a question of intent. It is a question of diligence or negligence, in a legal sense." The question of the measure of liability of a public officer for funds in his hands is one of prime importance, and at the same time one upon which there is some diversity of opinion. In some cases, the liability of the officer is made to turn upon the terms of his bond and it is construed as having been enlarged, and made an absolute engagement to pay over the money in any event and under every contingency. In other cases, the officer is regarded as a debtor for the funds that go into his hands, and not a bailee or trustee of such funds. In other cases, the officer is held liable on broad grounds of public policy, and the obligations resting upon him are made absolute and unconditional, because a different construction would open up a door for fraudulent practices and evasions by public officials. The matter is forcibly presented in the notes to State v. Harper, reported in 67 Am. Dec. 363-373, and also in the case of Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. (Colo.) reported in 22 L. R. A. 451, and notes, where the several grounds of liability are referred to, and the cases cited under each.

Considering these grounds of liability in the order named, it is evident that the terms of the bond must have some weight in determining what the liability of the officer is. But the main object of the bond, under our law, is not to fix the limit of the officer's liability, but to superadd the security of the bondsmen to that of the principal. The liability of the bondsmen is outlined in the bond, but, after all, the extent of liability of both principal and sureties, and the obligations they are under, are fixed and limited by the statutes and laws relating to such officers. The bond required of the county trustee to cover school funds is a special one. Mill. & V. Code, § 712. The bond executed by the defendant is in these words: "Now, therefore, should the above bounden Hardy Copeland truly and faithfully perform the duties of the office of county trustee for the term of his office, and shall faithfully collect and pay over, within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, to the proper officer designated by the laws of Tennessee to receive the same, all school taxes by him collected, or that ought to be collected during his said term of office, then his obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect." The oath required of the officer is to the same effect as the bond. Mill. & V. Code, § 716. The trustee is required to keep the school funds separate from all others (Mill. & V. Code, § 1167); and to use it directly or indirectly, or to receive or agree to receive any fee or interest from any bank for the deposit or use of the money, is made a felony (Acts Ex. Sess. 1885, chap. 16). The bond does not, in terms, fix the extent of the officer's liability. That is regulated by law, and we are of the opinion that there is nothing in the terms of the bond or the requirements of the statutes that makes the officer liable as on contract to keep, at all hazards and under every contingency, and to pay over funds in his hands, but he is only obligated to pay according to law. Can he, under our law, be held as a debtor for the fund, and hence liable for it in any event? If so he is impliedly given the right to use the funds, to receive and retain interest upon them, and to use them as his own. In the cases holding this doctrine, it is laid down that, if the officer make a profit or interest by using the fund, he is not liable therefor, but the usufruct belongs to him. This is certainly not the theory of our law, which makes it a felony for the officer to use it directly or indirectly, or to receive or agree to receive any interest from any bank for the use or deposit of it; and not only is it contrary to the statute, but, in our view, it is an unwise policy to consider the officer as a debtor. He is a trustee charged by statute with certain duties and responsibilities, but having no right to use the funds for his own purpose or to make them his own.

The third class of cases so construes the bonds, and so fixes the duties of public officers holding public funds, as to make them insurers of the safety and forthcoming of the fund, upon broad grounds of public policy. The leading case holding this doctrine of strict accountability is that of United States v. Prescott, 44 U. S. 3 How. 589, 11 L. ed. 739. In that case the bond was conditioned to keep safely and pay over when required to do so, and the court held the officer liable although the funds were stolen without fault on the part of the officer. This was followed in United States v. Dashiell, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319, where the condition of the bond was to pay over and account, and in Boyden v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527, where the condition of the bond was to discharge all the duties, and, under the act of Congress, it was the duty of the officer to pay over. This was followed by the case of United States v. Morgan, 52 U. S. 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643; Berans v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531; United States v. Keebler, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574; United States v. Watts, 1 N. M. 553; State v. Nevins, 19 Nev. 162. The rule has been followed in many cases in the state courts, and evidently on the authority of the leading case. We cite only a few by way of illustration. In State v.

Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322, the bond was "to perform all the duties," and the statute made it a duty to "deliver to his successor all money," and the officer was held liable for depositing money, as treasurer, in a bank of high standing that subsequently failed. In Omrø Supers. v. Kaime, 39 Wis. 468, the bond was "to faithfully discharge the duties," and "properly and legally disburse and pay all moneys," and the officer was held liable for a deposit in a bank of good reputation, but which afterwards failed. In State v. Croft, 24 Ark. 550, the condition was "safely to keep the money," and it was lost by failure of a bank reputed to be good, and the officer was held liable. See other cases cited in 22 L. R. A. 451, in the notes to the case of Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co., reported also in 19 Colo. 199, and 34 Pac. 944; State v. Harper, 67 Am. Dec. 363, and notes; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 4661, 466m, notes 1, 2. It is evident that the chancellor followed the rule laid down in the Prescott Case and cases in harmony with it, and held defendants liable on grounds of public policy. He says:

"Ruin will occasionally fall upon an innocent man, but better this than to open a door for the escape of a dishonest custodian of the means wrung from the honest taxpayer for the support of the government and the education of the children." On the other hand and holding a modified or contrary doctrine, may be cited the case of United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89, decided in 1872, in which the case of United States v. Prescott, supra, was limited, and it was held that an officer would be excused by the act of God or the public enemy. It is there said: "The general rule of official obligations as imposed by law is that the officer shall perform the duties of his office honestly, faithfully, and to the best of his ability. This is the substance of all official oaths. In ordinary cases, to expect more than this would deter upright and responsible men from taking office. This is substantially the rule by which the common law measures the responsibility of those whose official duties require them to have the custody of property, public or private. If in any case a more stringent obligation is desirable, it must be prescribed by statute or exacted by express stipulation." And again: "Where, however, a statute merely prescribes the duties of the officer as that he shall safely keep money or property received or collected, and shall pay it over when called upon to do so by the proper authority, it cannot, without more, be regarded as enlarging or in any way affecting the degree of his responsibility." By an act passed in 1866, the Congress of the United States provided that officers who lose public funds without fault or negligence may present the matter to the court of claims, and if that court find the fact to be that way, it shall be so certified, and the officer shall be given credit by the treasurer in his accounts. Since then, it has also been provided that certain classes of officers, like revenue collectors and clerks, shall deposit the funds in banks,—designated depositories of the United States. Consequently it appears that, when the act of 1866 and the decision in Thomas's Case are considered, the rule of liability with respect to United States officers is that they are not liable for public funds lost without fault or negligence on their part. It is evident that the rule laid down in the Prescott Case was considered too harsh and exacting, and Congress by the act of 1866 prescribed a different degree of liability.

31 L. R. A.

There are other cases, however, which have not followed the Prescott Case, among which may be cited York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675. In this case it appeared that the county treasurer had deposited the public money in his hands in a savings bank. The bank failed, and the money was lost. The bank had a good reputation, and the money was deposited to his credit as treasurer. The court held that he was not liable. The court stated the rule of liability as to trustees, receivers, administrators, guardians, and the like, and then asks: "If it would be wrong in principle to hold a private trustee responsible for loss which no care of his could have prevented, would it not be equally wrong to hold a public officer responsible under like circumstances?" The question is answered in the affirmative by the opinion. Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284. In this case the county treasurer had money in his safe in his office. Robbers came in, and beat him up, and then robbed the safe. The court below ruled that it was no defense, but, on appeal, the supreme court held that it was a good defense, and that he was not liable. The case is well reasoned, and announces the rule of the common law. In reviewing the cases which follow Prescott's Case, Virgin, J., says: "Notwithstanding the high character of the several courts whose decisions are above cited, we cannot yield our convictions as to the construction to be given to the bond in such case, or concur in relation to the new born public policy, based upon supposed facility or temptation, which depositories of the public money are said to possess for collusive robberies. 'For,' as was said by Redfield, J., in Bridges v. Perry, 14 Vt. 262, 'we cannot believe that they are founded upon any just warrant, either of sound judgment or constant experience.'" This case was approved in the later case of Strout v. Pennell, 74 Me. 262. In Alabama it is held that a tax collector who, without fault, is robbed by irresistible force, is not liable for the money of which he is robbed. State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59. The court of appeals of New York considered the question in People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477. In that case it appeared that the surrogate deposited moneys in his hands, which were the proceeds of judicial sales, in a private bank, which failed. He received interest on the fund, for the benefit of the litigants, but it was deposited subject to check or demand. The court recognizes the distinction between public funds and private moneys of litigants, and it also reviews the Federal cases in the light of the act of Congress of 1866 and the case of United States v. Thomas. The common-law rule of liability was declared to be the true one, and care and good faith to be the measure of liability. As the banker in that case was a man of good standing, and there was no negligence, the surrogate was held to be not liable. This case also recognizes the present condition of things.

—that it is the part of prudence to keep funds in bank, or the best and safest place. Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 23 L. R. A. 149. In this case, a clerk of a court deposited the money in his hands as clerk in a bank of good standing. The bank broke, and the fund was lost. It was held that the clerk was not liable. Among other things, the court, through Goddard, J., said: "From the agreed facts it appears that the money was lost through no fault of the clerk. He deposited the money in a bank of reputed solvency, as clerk of the court, and in doing so acted as prudent men ordinarily do with their own funds. The judgment of the court below must therefore be upheld, if at all, upon the principle that the conditions of his official bond imposed upon him an absolute obligation to pay the money when required, and that no exercise of diligence on his part will exonerate him from such obligation. Such is the contention of counsel for appellee, and for its support he relies on the case of United States v. Prescott, 44 U. S. 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1845, as the leading case, and several other cases in that court, as well as some decisions by state courts, which approve and follow the doctrine therein announced. In these cases in which the rule contended for was sustained, the court had under consideration the liability imposed by the official bond of receivers of public money, and the conclusions arrived at were influenced largely by considerations of public policy. Whether the case at bar is sufficiently analogous to these cases to bring it within the rule therein announced it is unnecessary to decide, since the Supreme Court of the United States in a later case has very much modified, if it has not in effect overruled, the extreme doctrine laid down in its earlier decisions. In the case of United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 387, 21 L. ed. 89, Justice Bradley, in speaking of the leading case of United States v. Prescott, supra, said: 'After reciting the condition of the bond, the court adds, with a greater degree of generality, we think, than the case before it required: "The obligation to keep safely the public money is absolute, without any condition, express or implied; and nothing but the payment of it when required can discharge the bond." This broad language would seem to indicate an opinion that the bond made the receiver and his sureties liable at all events, . . . and as the money in the hands of a receiver is not his,—as he is only custodian of it,—it would seem to be going very far to say that his engagement to have it forthcoming was so absolute as to be qualified by no condition whatever, not even a condition implied in law.' And, after reviewing the principal cases relied on by appellee, he further said: 'So much stress has, in almost every case, been laid upon the bond as forming, either directly or indirectly, the basis of a new rule of responsibility, that it seems especially important to ascertain what are the legal obligations that spring from such an instrument. The learned judges, in the great generality of the remarks made in some of the cases referred to, with regard to the liability of a receiving officer, and especially of his sureties, by virtue of his bond, have evidently overlooked what we conceive to be a very important and vital distinction between an absolute agreement to do a thing, and a condition to do the same thing, inserted in a bond. In the latter case, the obligor, in order to avoid the forfeiture of his obligation, is not bound at all events to perform the condition, but is excused from its performance when prevented by the law or by an overruling necessity. And this distinction, we think, affords a solution to the question involved in this case.

The condition of an official bond is collateral to the obligation or penalty; it is not based on a prior debt, nor is it evidence of a debt; and the duty secured thereby does not become a debt until default is made on the part of the principal. Until then, as we have seen, he is a bailee, though a bailee resting under special obligations. The condition of his bond is, not to pay a debt, but to perform a duty about and respecting certain specific property which is not his, and which he cannot use for his own purposes.' While the majority opinion distinguished the case under consideration from those preceding it, we think the reasoning of the learned justice who wrote the opinion logically and necessarily overrules the doctrine laid down in the former cases. If, as therein announced, the obligation imposed by the bond is absolute, and the officer was an insurer of the money received by him, how could the manner or cause of its loss affect his liability? Wherein is he more at fault when overpowered by one or two robbers than he is when intimidated by an army? Justice Miller refused to concur in the majority opinion, because it did not frankly overrule those cases and abandon the doctrine on which they rested, and in his dissenting opinion stated his personal views upon the question, as follows: 'When the case of United States v. Dashiell, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 182, 13 L. ed. 319, came before the court, I was not satisfied with the doctrine of the former cases. I do not believe now that, on sound principle, the bond should be construed to extend the obligation of the depository beyond what the law imposes upon him, though it may contain words of express promise to pay over the money. I think the true construction of such a promise is to pay when the law would require it of the receiver if no bond had been given, the object of taking the bond being to obtain sureties for the performance of that obligation. Nor do I believe that, prior to these decisions, there was any principle of public policy recognized by the courts or imposed by the law, which made a depository of the public money liable for it when it had been lost or destroyed without any fault or negligence or fraud on his part, and when he had faithfully discharged his duty in regard to its custody and safekeeping.' We believe the true rule is that a public officer who receives money by virtue of his office is a bailee, and that the extent of his obligation is that imposed by law; that when unaffected by constitutional or legislative provisions, his duty and liability is measured by the law of bailment. If a more stringent obligation is desired, it must be prescribed by statute: that his official bond does not extend to such obligation, but its office is to secure the faithful and prompt performance of his legal duties. Instances where the Constitution and statutes of the state have increased the common-law liability of certain officers have been recognized by this court in two cases at least. In the case of State v. Walsen, 17 Colo. 170, it was held that, by the constitutional provisions, the state treasurer was made absolutely liable for state moneys received by him; and in the case of McClure v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 122 (recently decided), it was held that a county treasurer, by virtue of the statute regulating the duties of his office, was a bailee with express and extraordinary liability. No constitutional or statutory provision in this state imposes a more stringent obligation upon a clerk of the district court than that imposed by the common law. This rule of common law, as laid down by Justice Story, is as follows: 'In respect to property in the custody of the officers of a court, pending process and proceedings, such officers are undoubtedly responsible for good faith and reasonable diligence. If the property is lost or injured by any negligent or dishonest execution of the trust, they are liable in damages.'

The degree of diligence which officers of the court are bound to exert in the custody of the property seems to be such ordinary diligence as belongs to a prudent and honest discharge of their duties, and such as is required of all persons who receive compensation for their services.' Story, Bailm. § 620. It is insisted in argument that this doctrine refers only to specific property, and does not apply to money deposited with the clerk, because it is assumed that he holds the relation of debtor to the fund, and therefore may use it as his own. To this we cannot agree. The money received by him is a trust fund, and a conversion of it to his own use would constitute embezzlement, and subject him to criminal prosecution. The defendant, Wilson, as appears from the agreed facts, did not mix the money in question with his own funds, or in any manner treat it as his own. He deposited it in the bank as clerk, and the bank had notice thereby that the money so deposited was held by him in his official capacity. At the time of the deposit the bank was in good standing. We think, under the circumstances, he is not chargeable with any fault that should render him or his sureties liable for the loss. The judgment of the court below will be reversed, with directions to enter judgment for defendants."

This principle has been recognized and announced in Tennessee. In The Governor v. M'Even (1842) 5 Humph. 265, it was declared that the liability of public officers is to be determined like that of private trustees; or, as Reese, J., expressed it, "the measure of fiduciary responsibility, in the view of a court of chancery, will be the same, whether arising from public or private relations." In Peck v. James (1859) 3 Head, 76, the rule was reaffirmed. James, the trustee of Granger county, moved against Peck, his predecessor in office, for a balance of school funds in his hands. Thereupon Peck filed a bill to be exonerated, on the ground that the money had been paid to him in bills of the Bank of East Tennessee, but that the bank broke before he was required to pay out all the fund, and while a balance of $680 in these notes remained in his hands. It was held that the trustee was entitled to be exonerated. "We think," said Caruthers, J., "the principle settled in the case of The Governor v. M'Even, 5 Humph. 265, must govern this. It is held in that case that 'the measure of fiduciary responsibility, in view of a court of chancery, will be the same, whether arising from public or private relations;' and that in the absence of bad faith, the same fair and equitable principles of adjustment which govern the subject of agency in general will be applied to and regulate the accountability of public agents." There are other cases where the officer and his sureties were held liable, but upon other grounds, which do not exist in this case. In Hill v. Alston, 12 Heisk. 569, the clerk and master of Shelby county was held liable for money lost by the failure of the bank in which it was deposited. It appeared that the money was deposited in his individual, and not in his official, name. The money so deposited was partly money he had received officially and partly his own private means. Interest was paid to him on these deposits. He was held liable on the ground that the money was deposited with his personal money to his individual credit, under an agreement to receive interest thereon. The inference is undeniable that, if the facts had been otherwise, the clerk would not have been held liable. In Comfort v. Patterson, 2 Lea, 670, the question was whether a clerk and master could set off a claim on account of a deposit made in a broken bank, against a note the bank held against him. The facts were that the deposit was to the credit of "M. L. Patterson, C. & M." It really consisted of (1) his individual means, (2) and costs to which he was entitled, (3) and funds received officially. A few days before the bank failed, he deposited $1,500 of his individual means to the credit of this account. The note against which he pleaded the set-off was only for $1,000. It was held that this plea of set-off was good. It was held that the clerk's "individual" share of the fund exceeded his indebtedness, and could be set off against it. The question was reserved whether he could set off the balance of the fund against an individual claim. It was said, by way of dictum, that funds of various cases, deposited in one general deposit in the officer's name as clerk and master, "without any designation of the case or party entitled," would be personal, and the words would be descriptio personae, "not altering the rights of either party."

We think that it is not in accord with the spirit of our decisions, whatever it may be elsewhere, nor with sound public policy, to hold a public officer liable for public funds as an insurer. His obligation is the same as that prescribed by the common law, which is that he discharge his trust with diligence, prudence, caution, and good faith, such as prudent persons bestow upon their own important affairs. This is the rule laid down in Meecham, Pub. Off. § 301; Murfree, Off. Bonds, § 197; United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 342, 21 L. ed. 91; Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284. Under such rule, a private trustee is not liable for money lost by the failure of a bank, when the reputation of the bank is good, and the money is deposited in good faith to the trustee's credit, separate and apart from his own (1 Perry, Tr. 443; Lietz v. Mitchell, 12 Heisk. 676); and the same rule applies to an administrator (Willeford v. Watson, 12 Heisk. 476), or an executor (Pritchard, Wills, 699). It is difficult to see what just end or sound public policy can be subserved by adopting a different rule as to public officials. If a public officer is held to be an insurer against loss when he exercises the utmost diligence, caution, and good faith, it will result that no man of any financial standing or business prudence would accept a public trust which involves the handling of public money. There would be but little inducement to act honestly and in good faith, since neither would avail against an unforeseen and unavoidable casualty. We are of opinion that, under our statutes and decisions, a public officer intrusted with public funds is not an insurer against loss, but is liable only if he acts without proper diligence, caution, prudence, and good faith. We think this is the sound rule, notwithstanding the weight of earlier authority holding the contrary doctrine, and all or nearly all based upon the Prescott Case.

We proceed, therefore, to examine whether Copeland, the trustee, did exercise the proper diligence, caution, prudence, and good faith necessary to absolve him from liability for the loss in this cause. He had in his hands $5,000 of public money, which he deposited in Marr's Bank on the 9th of February, 1893. He could not, at the time, lawfully pay it out, and it was his duty to keep it. Before making the deposit in that bank he consulted the judge of the county court of Overton county, and requested him to have the court designate a place to put the fund until he was called upon to pay it out, stating that he would put it anywhere the court would select. He advised with Mr. Windle, one of his bondsmen, and a good business man and merchant, as to where it should be placed, and Windle suggested that the local bank of Livingston, in Overton county, could be easily robbed, and advised that it be kept in some Nashville bank. The trustees of the county, for several years, had, as a matter of safety, deposited the public funds under their control in Nashville and Sparta. He conferred with many persons, who advised that it be placed in some good bank. Marr's Bank stood high at the time. Defendant's bondsman, Windle, recommended it. He was advised by Judge Goodpasture, a former resident of Overton county, a man of experience and substance, to select Marr's Bank, with the statement that he had been depositing in it for twenty-six years. He was then residing at Nashville, and depositing in it. It appears to have been the only bank in Nashville that did not close its doors in the panic of 1873. The reputation of the bank at Nashville, as well as elsewhere, was excellent. It had been in apparently successful operation for thirty years. Other bankers, lawyers, and business men of Nashville say that its reputation was above suspicion. The money was put to his credit as trustee, and was not mixed with any funds of his own. It remained until June 13, 1893, when Copeland attempted to draw it out. After persistent demands, $2,000 was paid, and then the remaining $3,000 was again persistently demanded. The whole of it was all the time subject to check on demand. The bank could not pay the $3,000 and suspended, and assigned on the next day, and proved to be totally insolvent, and only a pro rata of about 6 per cent, or $180, has ever been received since its suspension. It is said, however, that the deposit was made with an understanding that Copeland was to receive 6 per cent interest on it, and interest was subsequently entered up on the account on the books of the bank, the amount being $42.50, as of date March 31, 1893. Copeland denies positively that he ever received a cent of interest, directly or indirectly, or that there was any agreement that he should receive any. It appears to have been the custom of the bank to enter upon the pass book of the customer the fact that interest was to be allowed, when such was the agreement, and no such entry was made upon the pass book given to Mr. Copeland. There was, however, an entry made on the ledger of the bank, after the name of Copeland, trustee, "6 per cent." This is explained by Mr. Freeman, the bookkeeper, with the statement that the "country accounts" of the bank were, as a rule, interest-bearing, and he so entered it without any instructions to do so. Marr gives the same explanation. All the witnesses, Marr, Freeman, Copeland, and Goodpasture, state that no interest was to be paid; Marr's statement being somewhat indefinite and negative in character. It appears that, previous to this, Copeland had some funds in the local bank of Livingston, which offered to pay interest on the deposit, which Copeland refused; but he did accept a gratuity, as he says, a present, in consideration of his deposit, and a credit of 2 per cent was entered on his account on several occasions.

The statement of the president and cashier of the bank at Livingston are given, and from these we get the only intimation of fact which tends to show any want of good faith and unselfish action on the part of Copeland, outside of the book entry to which we have already referred. It appears that the defendant Copeland had $1,700 on deposit in this bank, and drew it out only a day or two before making the deposit in Marr's Bank. He had kept his money in this bank for a year or two, and had been paid interest or a gratuity as before stated. It is argued from this, and the entry upon the ledger at Marr's Bank, that Copeland was to have interest from the latter bank at the higher rate of 6 per cent instead of 2, as paid by the Livingston Bank. Mr. Estes, the cashier of the Livingston Bank, states that, a short time before the failure of Marr's Bank, he met with Copeland in Nashville. At that time there was a financial panic all over the country, which had affected the country banks as well as the city banks of Nashville. The Capital City Bank of Nashville closed, and on the next morning witness had a conversation with Copeland, in which the distressed condition of all the banks was commented upon, and in that conversation Copeland stated that he had his money in Nashville, and was a little uneasy about it. Witness said to him, if he would take his deposit back to the Livingston Bank, he could check on it at any time, and he and Miller, the president, would go security for the bank, and allow 4 per cent interest on the deposit. Copeland replied, "Can't you beat that?" and witness responded that he could not and would not; and Copeland thereupon replied, "I can beat that here in Nashville." He then adds, but in a very indefinite way, that he intimated to Copeland that Marr's Bank was unsound, and Copeland then referred to the Fourth National of Nashville, and left witness under the impression it was in the Fourth. A few days thereafter Copeland was in Livingston, and stated to witness that he had seen Miller, the president, and he had agreed to the proposition witness had previously made. On this occasion witness states that he again referred to the unsoundness of Marr's Bank. He proves that he and Miller, at that time, were worth $20,000 of property free from incumbrance and subject to execution. On cross-examination he states that Copeland did not say, in the Nashville conversation, that he could do better because he could get a higher rate of interest. He was also examined as to the condition of the Livingston Bank, and stated that it had a capital of $20,000; that it owed depositors, at the date Marr's Bank failed, $37,307.04, and had cash $4,527, and loan notes, $28,700; that it had tied up in the Commercial National Bank, which had then failed, $20,080.80; that after the failure of the Commercial National Bank the Livingston Bank borrowed all the money it could get, and paid 10 to 12 per cent for it from some parties, and lower rates to others, the cashier and president going the bank's security. Miller corroborates Estes in many particulars. He states, in addition, that he offered Copeland interest on his deposit, which Copeland declined, but said he would accept a gratuity; that they borrowed all the money they could get to tide their bank over the financial troubles. Copeland, being recalled, states that in the conversation at Nashville, no mention whatever was made of Marr's Bank, and only upon one other occasion, when Mr. Estes, referring to one of Marr's circulars, said that his bank would break some day. He corroborates Estes and Miller about the proposition to return the funds to the Livingston Bank, and that Miller and Estes would be securities, and allow 4 per cent interest, to which he replied he could beat that,—meaning that he could beat it by keeping the money safe, for he had examined into the condition of the Livingston Bank after the failure of the Commercial, and did not consider it safe, and knew that it was borrowing all the money it could get. He consulted with attorneys and others, and was advised not to return his money to the Livingston Bank, and in this he is corroborated by several witnesses. This is the substance of all the testimony as to the condition of the bank and the caution and care exercised by defendant Copeland in regard to it.

It is said that defendant had no right to deposit it in any bank; that by so doing he simply parted with the money, and made the bank his debtor; that he could not loan the money directly to a bank or an individual; that a deposit is virtually a loan; and that it should have been kept as a special deposit in some vault or safe. This argument, we think, is quite plausible, but is more specious than sound. If the money had been deposited in a vault of a bank, or in a safe, and lost, under the authorities cited and relied on by plaintiff the defendant would still have been liable, even though it had been placed in a safe furnished for that purpose by the county or state authorities. Jefferson County Comrs. v. Lineberger, 3 Mont. 231, 85 Am. Rep. 462; Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. (Colo.) 22 L. R. A. 451, note. The question resolves itself into a business proposition, whether it is more prudent to deposit the money in bank, or place it as a special deposit in some vault or safe. The consensus of public opinion and the almost universal trend of business transactions are in favor of the former proposition, bearing in mind that the funds must be kept separate and apart, and must be put to the proper credit, and be subject to immediate check, and placed in a bank whose reputation is above question, and the deposit made in good faith, and not because of personal benefits or advantages which may accrue to the officer. Our act, making it a felony to receive interest upon money deposited in bank by a public officer, impliedly conceives that it may be deposited in bank. The liability of banks for special deposits is quite limited. If the deposit is for hire, then ordinary care only is required. If no hire or compensation is paid, only slight care is required, and the bank is only liable for gross negligence. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 95, 96, and notes. The law allows an officer no compensation to be used in the hiring of a special deposit.

We do not consider a public officer a special bailee, in the sense that he must keep the identical funds which he collects, and pay them out. If this be held, it must necessarily result in much embarrassment and confusion. In the first place, it would necessarily follow that the collector must receive only gold, silver, or such money as is a legal tender, for he could only require those who have demands against the fund to receive such legal tender. Again, he must handle this fund every time it becomes necessary to make a payment out of it, and thus expose it upon every occasion when it is necessary to handle it. It would also follow that he must have it in such shape, denominations, and amounts as would enable him to make the exact change necessary to pay each claimant; otherwise, he would be compelled to mingle other funds with it, and thus destroy its integrity as the original money received. It would prevent the giving of checks, which are so necessary to the prompt and proper despatch of business and keeping of accounts in everyday transactions.

The learned chancellor was of opinion that due caution and diligence were not used by defendant. He says: "In this case the defendant made no personal examination, nor did he have any examination made, as to the solvency of Marr's Bank, nor had the bank officials made any publication for a long while of its condition, as required by its charter. He took the opinion of his friends, whom he confided in; but the opinions given were not based upon any examination or actual knowledge as to the solvency of the bank." Nothing can be predicated, to the prejudice of the defendant, that he did not make or cause to be made a personal examination of the bank. Such an examination, except perhaps by an expert, would have resulted in nothing reliable. Nor would any bank of standing submit to a personal examination by its customers. The standing of a bank can alone be determined by outsiders, by its mode of doing business and its reputation in business circles. The fact that it did not make the stated publications required by law is a circumstance to be considered, with all others, bearing upon the question of due caution in its selection, and must be considered in connection with the fact that, although the law stood upon the statute books, it had not been observed by state banks. The want of such publication is a failure to comply with the law, but, under the circumstances, not an indication of unsafe condition.

The conclusions to which we come, upon an examination of the entire record, are:

1. That the defendant was not an insurer of the safety of the public funds in his hands, but responsible only for the exercise of good faith, diligence, prudence, and caution, and a disinterested effort to keep and preserve the fund for those entitled.

2. That it was neither negligence nor want of proper business prudence and caution to deposit the funds in a bank of undoubted standing and reputation; and Marr's Bank, at the time of the deposit, had such standing and reputation.

3. The defendant Copeland cannot be considered as a debtor for the funds in his hands, but, on the contrary, had no right to use them in any way, except for the purposes of his trust; and he held them, not strictly as a special bailee, but as a trustee clothed with legal duties and liabilities.

4. The measure of the trustee's liability is fixed by the laws relating to his office, and not merely by the terms of his bond, and there is no unconditional obligation to pay under any and every contingency. The primary object and purpose of this bond are, not to fix or define the limit of his liability, but to superadd to his personal responsibility the security of his bondsmen; and the liability of both principal and sureties under the bond is fixed by the laws relating thereto.

5. The weight of the evidence is that there was no agreement that interest should be paid upon the deposit by Marr, and defendant Copeland was not influenced by this consideration to make the deposit in that bank.

6. The defendant Copeland was justified in not returning the funds to the Livingston Bank, when the president and cashier of that bank suggested that it be done. The proposition made by the president and cashier to induce its return was an illegal one, so far as interest promised was concerned, and was calculated to arouse suspicion as to the condition of the bank. Nor would it have been an act of prudence, under the facts in this record, to return the fund to that bank, in its condition at that time, even though it was secured by the personal indorsement of the president and cashier. The liability of the bank, as well as these officers, was at that time too great to warrant the trustee in putting his funds into their hands, even on the security offered.

7. The decree of the chancellor, in holding the defendant Copeland and his sureties liable for the funds deposited in the Nashville Savings Company, and which were lost by its failure, is erroneous under the facts in this record, and must be reversed, and the bill must be dismissed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

James C. FAIRCHILD, Appt.,

v.
John B. HEDGES, Treasurer of Pierce
County, et al., Respts.

(..... Wash.)

The loss of public money by a bank failure will not prevent liability of the county treasurer upon his bond to pay the money as the commissioners shall direct, although he was not negligent in selecting the bank and the county had not provided a suitable and safe place in which to deposit the money.

(February 27, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County in favor of defendants in an action brought to compel defendants to accept certain certificates of receivers of an insolvent bank in settlement of plaintiff's account as former treasurer of said county. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to the conflicting authorities on the liability upon an officer's bond for loss of money by bank failure, see Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. (Colo.) 22 L. R. A. 449, and note; also the case of State, Overton, v. Copeland (Tenn.) ante, 844, 81 L. R. A.

Messrs. Snell & Bedford, for appellant:

The various courts have taken two views upon the question of the liability of officers.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 801.

Since Marx v. Parker, 9 Wash. 478, that question has been absolutely and finally settled in favor of the less stringent or bailee theory. The line of authorities holding in favor of the bailee theory are:

United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284; People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477; Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440; York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675; Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co., 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449; McClure v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 122; State v. McFetridge, 84 Wis. 478, 20 L. R. A. 223; Story, Bailm. 620; Perry, Tr. § 441; Bridges v. Perry, 14 Vt. 262; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59; Odd Fellows Mut. Aid Assn. v. James, 63 Cal. 599, 49 Am. Rep. 107.

Such a deposit is not a loan even though the statute provides that the commissioners shall once a quarter count the money in the hands of the treasurer.

State v. McFetridge, supra; Moulton v. Mc.

Lean, 5 Colo. App. 454; United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; Wilson v. People; Pueblo & A. V. R. Co., Cumberland County v. Pennell, and People, Nash v. Faulkner, supra; Tillinghast v. Merrill, 77 Hun, 481; York County v. Watson, and Bridges v. Perry, supra.

Messrs. Colner & Shackleford, for respondents:

Where a general deposit of money is made in a bank, the title to the money passes to the bank; the relation of debtor and creditor arises between the depositor and the bank.

The only duty of the bank is to pay the depositor a like amount of money upon demand. It is a loan.

Phenix Bank v. Risley, 111 U. S. 125, 28 L. ed. 374; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, 3d ed. § 289; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 93, 94; Story, Bailm. 9th ed. 88; State v. Keim, 8 Neb. 68.

There is no difference in law between a loan to a banking corporation, copartnership, or company, and a loan to any other kind of a corporation, company, or copartnership, or to an individual.

There is no difference between a deposit with a bank and a deposit with a mercantile firm or copartnership.

Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146.

Any use of the public moneys except as authorized by law is unlawful.

Marr v. Parker, 9 Wash. 473; State v. Krug, 12 Wash. 288.

The treasurer is absolutely liable for the moneys entrusted to his care, and must account for and pay over the identical moneys received, or moneys of equal value and amount.

Throop, Pub. Off. 222, 223; State v. Nevin, 19 Nev. 162; State v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 323; Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 131, 20 Am. Rep. 637; Lowry v. Polk County, 51 Iowa, 50, 33 Am. Rep. 114; Griffin v. Mississippi Levee Comrs. 71 Miss. 767; Rose v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 451; Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647; McKinney v. Robinson, 84 Tex. 489; Tillinghast v. Merrill, 77 Hun, 481; Ward v. School Dist. No. 15, 10 Neb. 293; Nason v. Directors of the Poor, 126 Pa. 445.

Gordon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was, for four years prior to January, 1895, the qualified and acting treasurer of Pierce county, and the respondent Hedges succeeded him as such treasurer. The respondents Holmes, Rogers, and Bartholomew constitute the board of commissioners, and the respondent Gloyd is county auditor of said county. From the record it appears that, during his terms of office as such treasurer, the appellant deposited sums of money coming into his hands as such treasurer in various banks, some of which banks thereafter failed, and this proceeding was instituted by the appellant to compel the respondents to accept, in settlement of appellant's account as treasurer, certain receivers' certificates of insolvent banks. The petition asserts that the deposits were with the knowledge of the respondents, in accordance with his business custom; either the county of Pierce nor the board of county commissioners of said county provided him with any safe place for keeping the funds; that the safest and surest manner of keeping them was to make a deposit of them in reliable banks of good standing in the community; that the several banks selected by him as places of deposit were of high standing and repute, etc. The lower court sustained respondents' motion to quash the affidavit upon which the application for a writ of mandate was based, and, the relator electing to stand thereon, judgment of dismissal was rendered, from which he appeals. For a better understanding of the nature of the controversy, we quote the following from the opening statement contained in appellant's brief, viz.: "The question at issue in this action is narrowed by agreement of parties to the consideration of the one question, to wit: 'Is the county treasurer of Pierce county, Wash., liable personally or upon his bond for money deposited in a bank which afterwards becomes insolvent, in a case where there is no charge of negligence or want of care in any degree against the treasurer, and where it is further admitted that the county has not provided a suitable and safe place in which to deposit the amount of money which may come into the treasurer's hands?'"

Appellant's contentions are: (1) That the treasurer is not the debtor or insurer of the money that comes into his hands, but only the bailee for hire, or trustee of an express trust, who was only responsible for the exercise of good faith and reasonable skill and diligence in the discharge of his trust; and (2) that there is no statutory or constitutional inhibition against depositing such funds in the banks for safe-keeping; that, under the circumstances, it was his duty to so deposit said funds; and that he would be liable for negligence only in selecting such depositories. Section 5, art. 11, of the Constitution of the state, requires that "the legislature shall provide the strict accountability of the said officers [referring to the county officers] for the fees which may be collected, and for all public moneys which may be paid to them, or officially come into their possession." The statute makes it the duty of the county treasurer to receive all moneys due and accruing to the county, and disburse the same in the manner provided by law, and requires him, before entering upon the duties of his office, to give a bond to the county, conditioned, among other things, that "all moneys received by him for the use of the county shall be paid as the commissioners shall from time to time direct, except where special provision is made by law for the payment of such moneys, by order of any court, or otherwise, and for the faithful discharge of his duties." 1 Hill's Code, § 211. An examination of all the authorities has satisfied us that, while such officers are bailees, "they are special bailees, subject to special obligations," and that "it is evident that the ordinary law of bailment cannot be invoked to determine the degree of their responsibility." United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89. "His liability is to be measured by his bond, and that binds him to pay the money." Boyden v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527.

On this branch of the case, this court, in Marx v. Parker, 9 Wash. 478, after reviewing the authorities bearing upon the proposition, said: "It seems to us that every one of the earlier cases cited, where the expression was used that such and such an officer was not a bailee, or a mere bailee, or was a debtor, must be regarded from the standpoint of the court and the particular case. They were, one and all, cases where suit had been brought upon the bond of the officer, and he was attempting to excuse his default because he had lost the money by robbery, or from some other cause over which he claimed to have had no control. But in every such case it was held that his liability was absolute, and the true reason under United States v. Thomas, supra, must be, not that he was any the less a bailee, but that the statute imposed upon him a measure of duty larger than that found in the common law." We take it that it is fundamental in the law of bailments that the amount of care which the bailee is required to take of the goods or property intrusted to him may be expressly fixed by the contract, and that it is only in the absence of an express agreement that the law presumes it to have been the intention of the parties that a bailee for hire (other than common carriers and the like) is required to exercise only ordinary care, prudence, and caution in the custody and control of the property with which he is intrusted. In the well-considered case of Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427, the court says: "There is some conflict in the decisions as to the responsibility of public officers and their sureties for the loss of public moneys without negligence or fault on the part of the officers. While in some cases the rule of responsibility of bailees for hire has been applied, exonerating officers who have been found guiltless of negligence, this measure of responsibility is not generally accepted. The great weight of authority in this country will sustain the general propositions, with respect to the liability of such officers and their sureties for the loss of public moneys, that where the statute, in direct terms or from its general tenor, imposes the duty to pay over public moneys received and held as such, and no condition limiting that obligation is discoverable in the statute, the obligation thus imposed upon and assumed by the officer will be deemed to be absolute, and the plea that the money has been stolen or lost without his fault does not constitute a defense to an action for its recovery; that the rule of the responsibility of bailees for hire is not applicable in such cases; that, where the condition of a bond is that the officer will faithfully discharge the duties of the office, and where the statute, as before stated, imposes the duty of payment or accountability for the money, without condition, the obligors in the bond are subject to the same high degree of responsibility; and that the reasons upon which these propositions rest are to be found both in the unqualified terms of the contract and in considerations of public policy." In Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647, the court says: "It is too well settled to require discussion that an officer who is custodian of public money does not occupy the relation of a mere bailee for hire, who is responsible only for such care of the money as a prudent man would take of his own. He is bound to account for and pay over the public money." In Rose v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 451, the court says: "By accepting the office of township treasurer, McNabb assumed the duty of receiving and safely keeping the money of the township, and paying it out according to law. He or his sureties are bound to make good any deficiency which might occur in the funds which came under his charge, whether they were lost in the bank or otherwise." In Griffin v. Mississippi Levee Comrs. 71 Miss. 767, it is said: "The idea that the tax collector may make a general deposit of public money in bank, and thereby absolve himself from liability to pay over as he is by law required to do, is so utterly unreasonable as to need no combating. Like all others depositing funds in bank, the tax collector took the risks involved in so doing. The state looks to its officer, and the officer must look to his unreliable or unfaithful banker." In Nason v. Directors of the Poor, 126 Pa. 445, the court speaking through Chief Justice Paxson says: "The failure of the bank in which the defendant deposited the money is no defense. A receiver of public money, who has given bond for its safe-keeping, is not discharged from liability therefor by the failure of his banker." In Ward v. School Dist. No. 15, 10 Neb. 298, the court says: "It was Ward's duty, under the law, to keep the money securely. . . . The money was within his control, placed there by force of the statute, and if he saw fit to intrust it to the care of another, he did so at his peril." In Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 550, the defendant, as township treasurer, had given a bond conditioned (pursuant to the statute) that, "if the said M, as treasurer, shall faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of said office as required by law, then this obligation shall be null," etc. It was held that the defendant was absolutely liable for all moneys coming into his hands, and that he could not plead, as a defense, that the money was, without his fault or negligence, stolen from him, the court saying: "These rules are applicable to all contracts, and the public interests demand that, at this day, when public funds in such vast amounts are committed to the custody of such an immense number of officers, they should not be relaxed when applied to official bonds. A denial of their application in such cases would serve as an invitation to delinquencies which are already so frequent as to cause alarm." In Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. 372, Mr. Chief Justice Gibson says: "The keepers of the public moneys, or their sponsors, are to be held strictly to the contract; for if they were to be let off on shallow pretenses, delinquencies, which are fearfully frequent already, would be incessant." In addition to the foregoing, the following cases are to the same effect: Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs., 22 Ind. 125; State v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322; State v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 368; New Providence v. McEachron, 33 N. J. L. 339; State v. Clarke, 73 N. C. 255; Jefferson County Comrs. v. Lineberger, 3 Mont. 281, 35 Am. Rep. 462; Thompson v. Township 16, 30 Ill. 99; McKinney v. Robinson, 84 Tex. 489; Tillinghast v.

Merrill, 77 Hun, 481; Baily v. Com. (Pa.) 10 Atl. 764.

We think that, by the great weight of authority upon the question, an officer, such as a county treasurer, under our law, is held to the rule of strict accountability. As is said in Thompson v. Township 16, supra, "They know well, on assuming their positions, the hazards to which they are exposed, and they voluntarily assume the risks, and are paid for so doing." And if "it appears to be a harsh measure of justice to hold that the treasurer and his sureties are liable, on his official bond, for the money deposited under the circumstances disclosed in the affidavit of defense, and subsequently lost without his fault or negligence, it is impossible to reach any other conclusion without ignoring the authority of well considered cases." Baily v. Com. supra. We have examined all the cases cited in the able brief of the appellant bearing upon this proposition, but are unable to perceive that they are in conflict with the doctrine above laid down. A single case need only be referred to,—Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 14 L. R. A. 103. It was there held that the guardian, who deposited the moneys of his ward in a bank believed by him to be solvent, was not liable for the funds so deposited upon the failure of the bank. We think that the distinction is very clear between the liability and duty of one receiving moneys as a guardian, for the benefit of a private individual, and the liability imposed by statute and by express undertaking upon a public officer as in the case at bar. As to the former, "he is merely the trustee or agent of the private parties interested in the money, and no greater or higher responsibility should be imposed upon him than would be imposed upon any agent or trustee. People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 488. The loss in this case was not occasioned by the act of God or a public enemy, and we are not called upon to decide whether, under the circumstances attending such a loss, the officer would be exempt from liability. This conclusion necessarily leads to an affirmance of the judgment entered below, and renders it unnecessary to decide whether a county treasurer may lawfully deposit the funds of his county in a bank or banks.

Affirmed.

Anders, Scott, and Dunbar, JJ., concur.

Hoyt, Ch. J., dissenting:

I am unable to agree with the conclusions of the majority, stated in the foregoing opinion. I think that money coming into the hands of a county treasurer, as such, belongs to the county, and not to the treasurer; that the relation of debtor and creditor is not created. He holds it as trustee for the county, and is only responsible for the exercise of such care in its safe-keeping as is required of a trustee for hire. Under the statute and the obligation which he gives, he is bound to properly discharge the duties of the office, one of which is to exercise due care in safely keeping the funds of the county. But it is a strained construction of such statute and obligation which makes him the guarantor of such safe-keeping.

R. A.

If it is a part of his duty to produce the money regardless of contingencies, he should be allowed to do what he pleases with it until called upon to so produce it. It is unfair and illogical to say that he is personally responsible for the safe-keeping of the money, and at the same time must make only such disposition of it as may be prescribed by the one for whom he holds it. The cases which have held public officers to be guarantors of the safety of funds coming into their hands are mostly from Federal courts, and have been largely induced by the peculiar language of the Federal statutes. To hold that the officer cannot make such disposition of the funds as he thinks proper, and yet must be responsible for its safe keeping, is so illogical and fraught with such hardship upon the officer that I am not willing to follow the cases which have so held. If the relation of debtor and creditor was created by the receipt of the money by the officer, so that he could dispose of it as he pleased, there would be reason in holding him responsible for its safe-keeping; but this would be against public policy. In my opinion all that our statute requires of a county treasurer is either that he should produce the money coming into his hands when required by law, or that he should show that he had exercised the care required of a trustee for hire and that it had been lost without fault on his part. Such has been the holding of the courts under statutes of the same substance as ours, where the bond required was to the same effect. See Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284; Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440; York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675; Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449; State v. McFetridge, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L. R. A. 223; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59. These cases are directly in point, and many others could be cited; also, a large number which, though not deciding the exact question here involved, in principle sustain the contentions of appellant. United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477; McClure v. La Pluta County Comrs. 19 Colo. 122; Bridges v. Perry, 14 Vt. 262; Odd Fellows Mut. Aid Assn. v. James, 63 Cal. 598, 49 Am. Rep. 107. See also Story, Bailm. 620, and Perry, Tr. § 441.

Did the appellant exercise such care when he deposited the funds in question, in due course of business, in a bank which, after diligent inquiry, he had reason to believe, and did believe, to be solvent? If what we have said as to the degree of care required of him is the proper measure of his liability, he was discharging his duty as to the fund when he was making such disposition of it as a prudent man would of his own; and, since it is a fact, of which we must take judicial notice, that the most prudent men keep their funds on deposit in such banks, it must follow that, when appellant did this with the funds of the county, he was exercising due care with reference thereto, unless he was prohibited by the statute from thus disposing of them. It may be fairly deduced from the statute that the county treasurer is prohibited from loaning the funds of the county; and if the depositing of the same in a bank is a loaning, within the meaning of these statutes, the appellant had no right so to deposit the funds in question. That the depositing of money in bank is, for certain purposes, a loaning of it to the bank, so that the relation of debtor and creditor exists in regard thereto, is beyond question; but, in my opinion, to so deposit money is not to loan it, within the meaning of the statute as to the disposition of public funds. The loaning of money in the ordinary sense is a transaction by which, at the instance of the borrower, one parts with his funds for a consideration. A deposit in bank is of a different nature. Money is placed there primarily for other purposes than to secure interest thereon. The primary object is to secure its safe-keeping and availability whenever required, and for that reason it is not a loaning, within the ordinary acceptance of the term, and hence not within the provisions of the statutes. And so the courts have held. See State v. McFetridge, supra, and the other cases cited. In my opinion, the appellant was justified in depositing the money of the county in a bank; and if, in the selection of such bank, he used such care as a prudent person would in dealing with his own funds, and only so deposited it in banks which he had reason to believe, and did believe, to be solvent and safe, he should not be held responsible for loss occurring on account of such deposit. In my opinion, the judgment should be reversed.

Albert John ROTH by Guardian ad Litem, Respt.,
v.

UNION DEPOT COMPANY, Appt.

(13 Wash. 525.)

1. Kicking cars out of sight around a curve on a down grade without any person on them, in a thickly settled community where it is the custom to use the tracks as a footpath without objection from the railroad company, where it is known that from 50 to 100 people a day walk upon the track, and the cars are not usually sent this way, is such gross and wilful negligence that the railroad company will be liable for a child killed by a car thus kicked, especially where two of them were kicked on parallel tracks at the same time, although the child had no right to use the track.
2. A child should not be held to the same degree of care in avoiding danger while walking on a railroad track as a person of mature years and accumulated experience.
3. Negligence of a parent cannot be imputed to a child in an action brought for the benefit of the child, injured by the negligence of another.
4. A verdict of $15,000 is not excessive for injury to a boy who was run over by a car and one of his legs crushed so that amputation was necessary.

(January 27, 1896.)

NOTE.—For negligence in kicking cars or making flying switches, see note to Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 18 L. R. A. 63.
31 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. W. Cotton, J. M. Ashton, and Lester S. Wilson, for appellant:

The court erred in admitting evidence that other persons had walked upon the defendant's railway tracks without being molested, for the purpose of showing a license in the plaintiff.

A license cannot be shown solely by this evidence. It must also be shown that the user by the public was such, or the method of use or the means of use were such, that a person of ordinary intelligence would understand that he was authorized to enter thereon.

Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269, 8 Am. Rep. 628; Chenery v. Fitchburg R. Co. 160 Mass. 211, 22 L. R. A. 575; Carrington v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Ala. 472; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 113 Ind. 59; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 18 S. W. 670; Central Railroad v. Brinson, 70 Ga. 207; Blanchard v. Lake Shore & M. R. Co. 126 Ill. 416; Glass v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 94 Ala. 581; Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 208, 97 Am. Dec. 96.

License cannot be established by mere user.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 62 Md. 479; Grethen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 609; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 375, 84 Am. Dec. 457; Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co. 142 Mass. 296.

A person who enters the premises of another under a mere license must take the property as he finds it, and assumes all risks of injury to himself incident to the ordinary use and occupation of the premises by the owner.

Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 472; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 507, 22 Am. Rep. 112; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 368; Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. 129 Mass. 371, 37 Am. Rep. 368; Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535; Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426; Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588; McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 126, 26 Am. Rep. 555; Gramlich v. Wurst, 86 Pa. 74, 27 Am. Rep. 684; Buelow v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (Iowa) 60 N. W. 617; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 10 Ind. 225, 50 Am. Rep. 783.

The defendant company was under no greater obligation in regard to minors than to adults.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 258, 47 Am. Rep. 706; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 378, 84 Am. Dec. 457.

The verdict is excessive and was due to passion and prejudice.

Ferguson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 63 Wis. 145; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 36 Kan. 58; Masadillo v. Nashville & K. R. Co. 89 Tenn. 661; Western & A. R. Co. v. Young, 83 Ga. 512.

Messrs. D. W. Henley and Fenton & Saunders for respondent.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a railway terminal company in the city of Spokane. Its railway tracks and yards lie parallel with the Spokane river, near its north bank, in that city. North of the defendant company's yards and tracks there is an addition to Spokane city, on which lived, at the time the accident alleged in this case occurred, a number of families, variously estimated in the testimony at from twenty-five to fifty. The railway lines and switches of the appellant ran in a westerly direction across Washington street, at a right angle therewith, and near the north bank of and parallel with the Spokane river, and ran northerly from Washington street, thence in a northwesterly direction, making a short curve around a high bluff of rocks, and thence in a straight line to and beyond the east line of Mill street, of said city, extended north. At a point east of the east line of Mill street, so extended, the appellant had located a switch, from which diverged several side tracks, running parallel with each other, in an easterly direction, around said sharp curve. The railway tracks on the said switches were located on a down grade from Mill street, in an easterly direction, around the said sharp curve; and cars detached from an engine above the switches would, by reason of the down grade, run of their own momentum down to and across Washington street at a rapid speed. For many years before the construction of appellant's yards at this point, the people residing north of the appellant's right of way were in the habit of using several footpaths, which converged into a well defined path as they reached the appellant's right of way near Howard street, and the people residing between Washington street and Mill street were accustomed to go to the south side of the river by these footpaths, which converged into one path near Howard street, and thence directly down the right of way of the appellant to Washington street; and there was also a path leading across the tracks of appellant, running along the north bank of the river to Washington street; but, after the construction of appellant's tracks, the path leading from the tracks along the north bank of the river was abandoned as a footpath, and the people residing north of the tracks, after reaching the tracks, used the right of way of the company until they reached Washington street, it being a more convenient and shorter route to the city than any other way they could travel. It is insisted by the respondent, and the testimony shows without any doubt, that the appellant, and its servants and agents operating their cars at this point, knew of the existence of this footpath, and that the people of all ages residing to the north of the track were accustomed, at almost every hour of the day, to use this footpath and the right of way of appellant from the point where the path entered the right of way to Washington street; that it was not only used by the people who lived north of the tracks, but that it was used indiscriminately. On the 12th day of April, 1892, the plaintiff and respondent, Albert John Roth, a boy of nine years of age, while going down through this path on the right of way of appellant, was knocked down by a car, the wheels of which passed over one of his legs, crushing it so that amputation of that limb became necessary. It seems that the appellant's agents, in switching the cars, sometimes, when help was short, instead of sending an engine down with the empty car, would, in railroad parlance, "kick" the car, and let it go down the track unattended by a brakeman; that it was not the usual way to send the cars unattended by a brakeman, but that they sometimes did so; and it is conceded that that was the manner of switching the cars at the time of this accident. It seems that, at the same time that the respondent, who was in company with his sister and another boy about his own age, came down the path, two cars were "kicked" down the track behind them on appellant's tracks, and the respondent, in order to avoid being injured by one of these cars, started to cross one of the tracks, and in doing so was run over by a car going down the track which he was attempting to cross. By reason of the close proximity of these cars, he became confused, and in attempting to escape from one, was run down by the other. Neither of these cars was attended by any person, but they were "kicked" down, through the cut around the sharp curve, out of sight of the employees who "kicked" them, and they acquired a considerable speed by reason of the down grade of the track. It is conceded that there was no brakeman or any person along the track to look out for the cars, or to warn any person who might be on the track way of danger. The respondent, at the time of the injury, lived with his father and mother, north of the track, and was accustomed daily to go to the south side of the river to sell newspapers to support himself and his family. An action was brought in his interest, by Frank Roth, his guardian ad litem, and a verdict was rendered for $15,000 damages. Judgment followed, and an appeal has been taken to this court.

The overwhelming weight of testimony is to the effect that, for three or four years immediately preceding this action, it had been the custom of the people north of the track, and of others, to use this right of way as a footpath; that from 50 to 100 people passed over it daily; that this custom was known to the appellant; that it made no objection to it; and that it posted no notices warning people not to travel upon the path. There was some little testimony offered in defense to the effect that people had been told not to go through there, but this was a question of fact which was submitted to the jury, and, under the testimony, they were amply justified in coming to the conclusion that the travel was as alleged by the respondent. This condition of things was testified to, not only by numerous citizens, but by many of the employees of the company, or men who were employees during that time. One witness testified, "They used it just about the same as you would a sidewalk;" another, that persons traveling over this route could be seen every hour in the day. Witness L. N. Davis, who had worked for the company, and who lived in that neighborhood, testified, "Well, there is people, most all the time you would look out, traveling; especially at train time you would see them, all kinds of ways, going; see them taking little wagons, hauling trunks through there, and baby carriages, and everything." This witness testified that that was the main pathway of all the people north of the track. So that the essential question in this case is. Was the respondent a licensee or a trespasser at the time he was traveling on the appellant's right of way, or does an acquiescence by a railway company in travel on its right of way imply a license? for it is an admitted fact in this case that the respondent was not there by special invitation of the appellant, that he was not there for the benefit of the appellant, but that he was there simply for his own convenience and pleasure. A number of cases are cited by the appellant to sustain the contention that, notwithstanding the fact that a railroad company acquiesces in such travel by the public, and does not take any steps to stop them, no implied consent to such use is established, and that such acquiescence does not vary the company's duties as to trespassers; and it may be conceded at the outset that a railroad company does not owe any duty to a trespasser, for there is no presumption that a trespasser, or a person without consent, actual or implied, will be upon the track.

We have carefully examined the cases cited by the appellant, and a majority of them we think can be easily distinguished from the case at bar. The case of Chenery v. Fitchburg R. Co. 160 Mass. 211, 22 L. R. A. 575, was an action for running down the plaintiff at a point on defendant's track where it was crossed by a private way, along which she was traveling. The court instructed the jury that, as a matter of law, if people were accustomed to cross a railroad track at a certain place, and the company made no objection, license from the company was implied, and that such a license imposed a duty to use reasonable care to protect the crossers; and the court in that case simply held that this was a question of fact for the jury to determine. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 112 Ind. 59, was a case where a track was laid upon a public street, and the court held that the rights of the public and the railroad company respecting the use thereof were mutual, though those of the latter were paramount; that a person was not a trespasser who walked along such track, and if in so doing his foot became fastened in an opening which existed by reason of the negligent construction of the track, and he was run upon by a train of the railroad company which was negligently managed, he being without fault, the railroad company was liable for the injury sustained. This was what was decided in this case, though the court indulged in a general discussion of the subject involved in the present case, and said that, on the hypothesis that the place where the person received his injury was exclusively the roadway of the company, something must be superadded to the negligence of those in charge of the train in order to justify a recovery, and that a trespasser had no right to exact care from a railroad company. The question of license or acquiescence did not arise in that case, and was not discussed, and we can see nothing in the case, either of dicta or decision, which bears upon the case at bar. In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 18 S. W. 670, the court held that evidence that a person had been in the habit of traveling on a track, and that the engineer had seen persons on that part of the track, but no more frequently than on other parts of the track similarly situated, and that no measures had been taken to prevent such use of the track, was not sufficient to establish a license to the public to use the track. In that case the locality was remote from any station, and the court especially announced in its decision this fact, and the further fact that there was nothing in the facts of the case to show that the company assented to or knew of the use of the track by others, and that the facts of that particular case were not sufficient to establish an implied consent to the use of the track on which a license could be assumed to have existed, and the further fact that there was nothing in the testimony to show any acts of negligence on the part of the appellants, but, on the contrary, that it showed an entire absence of negligence,—a different case from the one under discussion, where the track was in a thickly settled locality, and where a uniform travel by the public had been established for a period of from three to four years. Persons are seen, not infrequently, by engineers, traveling on tracks in country places, and in districts where frequent travel is necessarily impossible; and, of course, the knowledge that a person occasionally traveled upon a track in such a place as that would not be sufficient to establish a license to the public generally, and that is all that was decided in that case. Central Railroad v. Brinson, 10 Ga. 207, seems to be a miscitation, as the case is not reported in that volume [70 Ga. 207]. Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 208, 97 Am. Dec. 96, simply decides that this is a question for the decision of the jury. In the case of Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummel, 44 Pa. 375, 84 Am. Dec. 457, there is no question of license or acquiescence discussed. The court held, in rather rabid language, that there was an intrusion upon the rights of the railway company; that the company had no reason to suppose that either man, woman, or child might be upon the railroad where the accident happened; that it had a right to presume that no one would be upon it, and to act upon the presumption. The main contention there was that the company did not blow the whistle of the locomotive. The court held that they were not bound, under the circumstances of that case, to do so. But this case is mentioned and distinguished by other subsequent cases in Pennsylvania, which hold that a license could be established by acquiescence. Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. 129 Mass. 367, 37 Am. Rep. 568, was a case where a woman had been invited to attend a meeting held at a house of worship, and was injured by reason of the dangerous condition of the society's premises; and the court held that whether the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care, or whether the way was reasonably safe, were questions of fact for the jury. The case in no way bears upon the case under discussion. Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, was a case where the principal of a school had asked permission for a class of students to visit the company's power house, for the purpose of viewing the machinery; and in passing through the power house one of the students fell into a vat of boiling water, and it was there very properly held that the traction company was under no obligation to especially provide against accidents. The court in its discussion of the question quotes the case of Hounsell v. Smyth, 7 C. B. N. S. 788, which case is quoted in several subsequent cases, where the court said, "Suppose the owner of land near the sea gives another leave to walk on the edge of the cliffs,—surely, it would be absurd to contend that such permission cast upon the former the burden of fencing." But this case can have no bearing upon the question discussed here. It certainly would not impose the burden of fencing; but if, after he had given a person permission to walk on the edge of the cliffs where there was a single path, and no way of escape from it accessible, he had sent a blind car down the path after him, a different liability might reasonably have been established. Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, decided that where a woman went to a building for her own convenience to inquire about a matter which concerned herself alone, she could not recover from the owner of the building for injuries received by striking her head upon a projecting sign placed on a post at the corner of the landing. This case seems to us clearly not to be in point. Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588, was a case where the members of a fire patrol forced open the door of a building then on fire, and entered the main floor and basement; and, while using an elevator, the rope broke, and one of the patrolmen was injured. The owner of the building was not present, and did nothing to induce the entry. The court held that the owner of the building was not liable to the party injured, although the elevator and its appliances were not safely constructed and maintained. The court in its opinion says: "There is nothing in the case to indicate an invitation, either express or implied, to either enter the premises or use the elevator, and, there being no invitation or inducement on the part of appellee, no duty was imposed upon him to leave the elevator in such condition, when the building was closed at night, as that it could be operated with safety." It would seem that it would be stretching the law to hold that the owner of a building would reasonably contemplate an emergency such as the burning of the house, and that, by reason of the contemplation of such emergency, he should be held to have invited the patrolmen to use a dangerous appliance. The case of Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Schweindling, 101 Pa. 258, 47 Am. Rep. 706, involves no question of license. The case of Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co. 142 Mass. 296, may tend to support the contention of the appellant, though it does not very clearly appear from the opinion what the real circumstances of the case were, or what the court would have held under the circumstances of this case. The case of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112, seems to decide squarely in favor of the appellant's contention that the simple acquiescence of a railroad company in the use of its track or right of way, by persons passing along it, as a footway, does not give such person a right of way over the track, and does not impose upon the company the duty of protecting or providing safeguards for persons so using its grounds; and this case was followed 31 L. R. A.

by the the supreme court of Illinois in the case of Blanchard v. Lake Shore & M. R. Co. 126 Ill. 416, and the supreme court of Maryland in the case of Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Allison, reported in 62 Md. 479. These cases hold that the relative rights of the railroad company and the injured party are not changed by reason of the acquiescence on the part of the company in the use of its track or right of way, and it follows from the logic of the cases that the company would be held responsible only for such gross negligence as indicated wilfulness. The case in 71 Ill. 500, cites in support of its conclusion the case of Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, supra, and Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 120, 98 Am. Dec. 317. We think the Illinois supreme court mistook the logic of those cases; and such was the opinion of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, which reviewed the Hummell and Gillis Cases in the case of Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269, 3 Am. Rep. 628, and in some subsequent cases, and distinguished them from a case where license by user had been established.

Probably the strongest case supporting the views contended for by the appellant is the case of Glass v. Memphis & C. R. Co. reported in 94 Ala. 581, where it was held that the fact that persons living in the neighborhood of a railroad track are accustomed to walk upon the track without objection of the company does not make them any the less trespassers; that, where such track is used without the direct consent of the company, the company could be held only for negligence amounting to wantonness or an intention to inflict injury; and further held that such wantonness and intention could not be inferred unless the employees actually knew of the peril of the decedent, and failed to make reasonable effort to avert it. We think that all the cases cited can be distinguished, possibly, from the case at bar, so far as the doctrines announced are concerned, excepting this one; and this court, we think, went too far in holding that wantonness could not be inferred unless the peril of the decedent was actually known to the employees of the company. Conceding, for the moment, the doctrine that the plaintiff in this case was a trespasser, and conceding, further, that the defendant could be held only for gross negligence, we think the circumstances of this case did most emphatically indicate gross negligence; and we are of the opinion that, under the circumstances of the case, the defendant ought to be held to have presumed that when it threw a car out of its sight around a curve, on a down grade, in a thickly settled community, where it had knowledge that its track was used by from 50 to 100 people a day, somebody's life would be imperiled by this careless mode of switching its cars, and that it carelessly and wantonly placed itself in a position where it could not see the peril of the passers-by. The evidence shows that it was not its general custom to switch its cars in this way, but that it did so only occasionally, when short of men. The rule as laid down by many writers is that such a duty is imposed upon a railroad company in operating its trains as would be imposed upon an honest man in the transaction of his business. It seems to us that no honest or humane person would be guilty of transacting his business in the reckless manner in which the appellant in this case transacted its. Duties are relative, and that which would not be a duty under certain conditions would become a most imperative duty under others. The people of modern times hold life and limb in too high regard to allow them to be weighed in the scale with mere convenience or selfish property interests. This is the sentiment of humanity, and a sentiment which ought to be reflected by the decisions of the courts. This appellant, to save the expense of an employee for a few minutes, hurled not only one, but two, blind cars down this right of way, regardless of the fact, which it must have known, under the circumstances, as shown by the testimony, that they were liable to cause the death or permanent injury of some one; and we think that this fact alone establishes gross and wilful negligence, notwithstanding the fact that none of the employees saw the danger of the plaintiff in this case; and, of course, under all the authorities, a railroad company is not allowed to run down and destroy a naked trespasser who is upon its track, but is held to be responsible for an attempt to prevent his injury after his peril is discovered. Very much more in accordance with the plainest principles of humanity was the doctrine announced in South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Donovan, 84 Ala. 141, viz., that those who are operating a railroad in a town or city, or through a thickly populated district, where there is occasion for people to pass along the track, and a usage to that effect, owe the duty of keeping a vigilant lookout for such persons at such places. See also Glass v. Memphis & C. R. Co. supra. The two Illinois cases which we have just noticed seem to have lost sight of the doctrine of comparative negligence, which was announced by the supreme court of Illinois in the case of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hammer, 72 Ill. 347, and the opinion in 71 Ill. 500, supra, must be construed somewhat with reference to the principles enunciated in the later case, where it was held that, while it was negligence for a person to travel on the track of a railroad at its depot grounds, where everybody had notice that cars were constantly passing and engines switching cars, it was also negligence on the part of the company to have flying switches passing on a track, without an engine attached or a bell ringing or a whistle sounding; and, where both parties were at fault in these respects, it was for the jury to determine, under all the circumstances, whether the negligence of the plaintiff was slight and that of the defendant gross; and, if the negligence of the plaintiff was slight and that of the defendant gross, that the plaintiff could recover. The court in that case announced that the rule had not been at all times accurately stated, and that, inadvertently, courts had laid down the rule that a plaintiff who was guilty of negligence could not recover, but that the true rule was that he could recover, notwithstanding his negligence, if his negligence had been slight and that of the defendant gross; that where persons go upon or pass over the grounds connected with railroad depots, they are presumed to know that the place is dangerous, and hence are required to use care and prudence commensurate with the known dangers of the place; but that, on the other hand, the servants of the company knowing that it is a place where persons are constantly passing, their duty to exercise caution and prudence is also enhanced. "In such places," says the court, "they must use more effort and precaution for the preservation of life and limb than at places where persons have no right to be and the employees have no right to expect to find them. While the great commercial and business interests of the country demand their protection, still the lives and personal safety of persons are paramount. All other considerations must yield to this, the first and greatest and most important of all rights, for which governments are organized and laws enacted." The court does not stop with the announcement that they must use more effort for the preservation of life and limb at such places than at places where persons have no right to be, but coupled with that is the further provision that they must use more precaution than at places where they have no right to expect to find persons. In the case at bar they did have a right to expect to find people on this track, where these two insensate objects were sent, without control, notwithstanding the fact that people had no legal right to be there.

In opposition to the doctrine announced by these few cases, however, we cite, first, the case of Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269, 3 Am. Rep. 628, where it was held directly that the company had the right to detach cars and send them on, without a brakeman, out of sight around a curve, but that this would be different when, by license to others and by sufferance, they permitted the public to enjoy a privilege of passage which would bring them into danger. It is true that in this case certain privileges were granted over the right of way to certain persons, for the purpose of unloading and shipping lumber, but this privilege was not granted to the plaintiff nor to the public in general, and cannot affect the principles announced in the decision. This was a case where a woman carried her nineteen months old child with her to where she went to wash, near the railroad track. After having crossed over the track to get some water she set the child down before a chair, and engaged again in washing. In three or four minutes she missed the child. It had strayed upon the track and was run over by a lumber car, which was detached and sent around a curve in the siding, on a slight down grade, unattended by a brakeman. Both of the child's arms were so crushed that they had to be amputated. "Conceding the right of the railroad company," said the court, "to the exclusive use of its tracks over the lot, . . . the true question is whether the circumstances created a different duty. The ownership of the lot gave to the company the right to use it as most convenient and expedient in moving its cars; and no one can gainsay the right to detach and send cars ahead without a brakeman, even out of sight and around a curve. But the case is altered when, by a license to others, they have devoted this ownership to a use involving their interests and their safety, and, by sufferance, permitted the public to enjoy a privilege of passage which might bring their persons into danger." The court then, after noticing the fact that the way was used to unload lumber, proceeds to say: "It also suffered its track to be used by a neighboring population as a way across the lot from one part of the city to another. . . . The presumption of a clear track at this place could not reasonably arise, . . . but greater precaution against injury to those thus permitted to use the lot and the tracks of the company became a duty." And, in speaking of the negligence in sending the car round the curve where people were liable to pass, the court said: "Its only purpose was to save a few hundred feet of travel to the engine, by detaching it from the car when in motion, and stopping the engine before it reached the switch, in order to permit it to run forward on the main track to hitch onto other cars. To save this short time and distance a life was periled and a serious injury inflicted." And the court, as we have before indicated, in reviewing the instructions of the court below, who relied upon the cases of Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 375, 84 Am. Dec. 457, and Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317, distinguished those cases from the case then under consideration, and found that the trial court had erred in applying the principles enunciated in those cases to the case at bar, and, in quoting from the language of the court in the Hummell Case, this expression, "precaution is a duty only so far as there is reason for apprehension," says that that is the very feature which distinguished that case from the case under discussion. So, in this case, accepting that maxim, that "precaution is a duty only so far as there is reason for apprehension," and applying it to the circumstances of this case, it must be convincing to the mind of every reasonable person that there was reason for apprehension that a car, thrown around this curve, unattended, under the circumstances of the travel proved, would do incalculable damage to some traveler. Hooker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 76 Wis. 542, was a case where a woman was walking across a high trestle, accompanied by two children. It was conceded that she was not there in the interest or for the benefit of the railroad company, but that she was there simply for the purpose of amusing and entertaining the children, and that they had to walk across this bridge or trestle on ties. While on the bridge they were overtaken by a passing train and were all killed. The testimony tended to prove that the bridge, for many years and up to the time of the accident, had been habitually and constantly used by men, women, and children, going back and forth through that part of the city, as a foot pathway, without any objection or warning by the company that it should not be so used, until after the accident. The court held that by reason of said acquiescence in the travel of the public, Mrs. Dacey, who was using the bridge with the children, was not a trespasser, that she was using it properly and lawfully, and that the defendant should be held to the ordinary rule of negligence. In Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645, a New York case, it was held that the acquiescence of a railroad company in the habit of certain persons crossing its track at a place not a public highway amounts to a license, and imposes a duty upon the company, as to all persons so crossing, to exercise reasonable care in the running of its trains, so as to protect them from injury; that the sufficiency of the warning required at such crossings is a question for the jury. The court, in the course of its opinion, says: "The legal principles applicable to the facts appearing here have been frequently enunciated by this court, to the effect that where the public have, for a long time, notoriously and constantly, been in the habit of crossing a railroad at a point not in a traveled public highway, with the acquiescence of the railroad company, such acquiescence amounts to a license, and imposes a duty upon the company, as to all persons so crossing, to exercise reasonable care in the running of its trains, so as to protect them from injury." It will be noticed that in these last two cases there is no question of any affirmative action on the part of the companies in granting licenses to people who travel on their tracks, but the decisions were based squarely upon the doctrine of acquiescence. In the case of Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co. 99 N. C. 298, the same principle was decided, and the court there, in discussing the proposition, and noting the contention of the defendant that the plaintiff's intestate was a trespasser in being wrongfully on the track, and that the injury was the result of his own wrong,—in which case State, Bacon, v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 58 Md. 482, was cited,—said: "We think that upon a careful examination of the cases cited by counsel for the appellant, it will be found that in the most of them the injury was the result of the contributory negligence of the party injured, proximately causing it, and not resulting directly from the negligence of the defendant, and where they have gone beyond this, they are not in accord with the rulings of this court, nor in harmony with the current of authority,"—citing Byrne v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 362, 58 Am. Rep. 512, where it was said that "where the public for a series of years had been in the habit of crossing the railroad, the acquiescence of the defendant in the public use amounted to a license or permission to all persons to cross at that point, and imposed the duty upon it, as to all persons so crossing, to exercise reasonable care in the movement of its trains so as to protect them from injury." To the same effect are: Kelly v. Southern Minn. R. Co. 28 Minn. 98; Barry v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 377; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Troutman, 11 W. N. C. 458; Taylor v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 113 Pa. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 446. In the last-mentioned case the court, quoting from Barry v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra, said: "The company had a lawful right to use the tracks for its business, and could have withdrawn its permission to the public to use its premises as a public way, assuming that no public right therein existed; but so long as it permitted the public use it was chargeable with knowledge of the danger to human life from operating its trains at that point, and was bound to such reasonable precaution in their management as ordinary prudence dictated to protect wayfarers from injury. . . . The company is an actor at the time in creating the circumstances which imperil human life, and it would be an alarming doctrine that it was under no duty to exercise any care in the movement of its trains." See also Delaney v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 38 Wis. 67; Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 676; Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 53 Wis. 626; Barry v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra.

In fact, the overwhelming weight of authority seems to be to the effect that acquiescence creates a right which imposes upon the railroad companies the duty of ordinary diligence; and, as the instructions of the court on this proposition were all based upon this theory, and the objections to such instructions were based upon the opposite theory, it is not necessary to specifically review them. It is sufficient to say that we think the instructions were given in accordance with the great weight of authority.

And the instruction in regard to contributory negligence, we think, was also properly given. By the overwhelming weight of authority, a distinction is made between the responsibility of a child and that of an adult. It seems to us that it would be a monstrous doctrine to hold that a child of inexperience—and experience can come only with years—should be held to the same degree of care in avoiding danger as a person of mature years and accumulated experience. In the simplest transactions of life we recognize this distinction. It is recognized by the law in all of the turntable cases. It was recognized by this court in the case of Illwaco R. & Nav. Co. v. Hedrick, 1 Wash. 446, where it was held that the testimony of the company that it had been in the habit of leaving the turntables unlocked (in an action against such company for the death of a child of tender years) was not admissible. No court would hold that an adult who would deliberately put his feet down between the wall and a turntable when it was in motion, so that they would be ground off, was not guilty of contributory negligence. His experience would naturally teach him better. But everybody, and especially people who are employing dangerous agencies, must deal with children just as they are, and must take notice of their lack of judgment and lack of experience. The care or caution required is according to the capacity of the child, and this is to be determined, ordinarily, by the age of the child. In the case of Mowrey v. Central City Railway Co. 51 N. Y. 666, the court said: "The old, the lame, the infirm, or the young are entitled to have their condition and ability, mental and physical, considered in diminution of the degree of care exacted of them." The rule is, however, laid down by Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 78, as follows: "It is now settled by the overwhelming weight of authority, that a child is held, so far as he is personally concerned, only to the exercise of such degree of discretion as is reasonably to be expected from children of his age." Another point made by the appellant is that it was not allowed to show that the accident was caused by the negligence of the parent. This being an action brought for the benefit of the child, and not for the benefit of the parent, the negligence of the parent cannot be imputed to the child. The only remaining question is as to the amount of the judgment recovered. It is contended by the appellant that the amount of the verdict is excessive, showing prejudice and passion on the part of the jury. We are not willing to say that $15,000 will more than recompense the plaintiff for hobbling through life maimed and disfigured. We are aware that many courts have held, in similar cases, that the amount of this verdict was excessive, but we think it probable that if such injuries had happened to the judges themselves, or to members of their families, their views as to excessive damages would have undergone a radical change.

31 L. R. A.

The judgment will be affirmed.

Scott and Gordon, JJ., concur.

Hoyt, Ch. J., dissenting:

I feel compelled to dissent from what is said in the foregoing opinion as to the effect of the railroad company's allowing, if it did allow, persons to travel along and across its right of way. In my opinion, railroad companies occupy the same relation to the real estate which they own as other owners of such property. The general rule that an owner of uninclosed real estate will lose no rights by reason of the fact that he allows a path to be made across it without objection on his part is too well settled to require the citation of authorities in its support. The plaintiff's own evidence in the case at bar showed that the right of way of the appellant, along and across which persons had been accustomed to pass, was open to the common and entirely uninclosed. Hence, under the general rule above stated, the railroad company could lose no rights by reason of persons having been allowed to travel upon it, even if it was shown that the highest officers of the company had full knowledge of their custom so to do. Upon the other questions discussed, I express no opinion.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (Department 1).

Vincent P. BUCKLEY, Appt.,

v.

Giles H. GRAY, Respt.

(110 Cal. 339.)

1. An attorney is not liable to a son for even gross negligence in so drawing the will of the mother as not to carry out her desires in the disposition of her property, even though the son suffers great pecuniary loss thereby, there having been no privity of contract between the son and the attorney.

2. The employment of an attorney by a mother to draw her will, in which a provision was made for one of her sons, is not a contract made for the benefit of the latter, within Civ. Code, § 1559, providing that a third person may enforce a contract entered into between others for his benefit, so as to entitle such son to recover from the attorney for his gross mistake in so writing the will as to deprive the son of the provision designed by the testator for his benefit.

(December 10, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sonoma County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for defendant's negligence in drawing a will contrary to the instructions of the maker, the result of which was to deprive plaintiff of property intended for him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Blake, Williams, and Harrison for appellant.

Messrs. Haven & Haven for respondent.

Van Fleet, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to recover for negligence of attorney in drafting and executing a will. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and, plaintiff failing to amend, judgment was entered against him, from which he appeals. The complaint alleges, in substance, that on October 5, 1888, defendant, an attorney at law, was employed by Mrs. C. M. A. Buckley, the mother of plaintiff, to draw her will, which she desired and directed to be so drawn as to leave all the residue of her estate, after certain specific legacies, to her two sons, then living, the plaintiff and one John P. Buckley, to the exclusion of the children of a deceased son of the testatrix; that in pursuance of such employment defendant on said day drew a will for said testatrix, and superintended and directed the execution thereof; that in the preparation of said will, and in directing the execution thereof, the defendant was guilty of gross carelessness and negligence in the performance of his professional duties, in this: that said will was so drawn as not to legally express the desires or direction of the testatrix as to the exclusion of said grandchildren, but in such manner that the latter were permitted under the will to take of her estate; and that in directing the execution of said will this plaintiff, although named in said will as one of the devisees thereunder, was caused by the defendant to become one of the subscribing witnesses thereto, thereby rendering the provisions of said will as to the plaintiff void. It is further alleged that said John P. Buckley died before the testatrix; that thereafter, in May, 1891, said testatrix died without having revoked or altered said will; that the will was admitted to probate, and the estate of said testatrix duly administered; and that under the decree of distribution said grandchildren received one half of said estate, amounting to $85,000, in which amount plaintiff alleges himself damaged, and for which he asks judgment against defendant.

We think the demurrer was properly sustained. In our judgment the complaint clearly fails to state a cause of action against defendant in favor of the plaintiff. It is to be observed that the action is not by the client, but by a third party, her son. It is a general doctrine, sustained by an overwhelming weight of authority, that an attorney is liable for negligence in the conduct of his professional duties, arising only from ignorance or want of care, to his client alone,—that is, to the one between whom and the attorney the contract of employment and service existed, and not to third parties. The exceptions to this general rule, if they may be in strictness deemed such, are where the attorney has been guilty of fraud or collusion, or of a malicious or tortious act. Responsibility for a fraudulent act is independent of any contractual relation between the guilty party and the one injured; and one committing a malicious or tortious act, to the injury of another, is liable therefor without reference to any question of privity between himself and the wronged one. Where, however, neither of these elements enters into the transaction, the rule is universal that for an injury arising from mere negligence, however gross, there must exist between the party inflicting the injury and the one injured some privity, by contract or otherwise, by reason of which the former owes some legal duty to the latter. 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 562, 574; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621, and cases therein cited; Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 234, 12 L. R. A. 746, and cases cited. In National Sav. Bank v. Ward, supra, the general rule above adverted to is exhaustively discussed, and its limitations stated by Mr. Justice Clifford, for the court. That was a case where a third party sought to maintain an action against the attorney for damages resulting to him from relying upon the correctness of a defective certificate of title to a piece of real estate furnished by the attorney to a client, upon the faith of which the plaintiff had loaned money on the property. In holding that the plaintiff could not maintain the action, it is there said: "Beyond all doubt, the general rule is that the obligation of the attorney is to his client, and not to a third party, and, unless there is something in the circumstances of this case to take it out of that general rule, it seems clear that the proposition of the defendant must be sustained.

NOTE.—As to right of action on a contract by a third person for whose benefit it was made, see note to Jefferson v. Asch (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. 257.

R. A.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 215. Conclusive support to that rule is found in several cases of high authority. Fish v. Kelly, 17 C. B. N. S. 184." And after commenting upon the case of Fish v. Kelly, and the case of Robertson v. Fleming, 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 167, 209,—from the latter of which cases Lord Wensleydale is quoted as saying that "he only, who, by himself or another as his agent, employs the attorney to do the particular act in which the alleged neglect has taken place, can sue him for that neglect, and that that employment must be affirmed in the declaration of the suit in distinct terms,"—the learned justice proceeds: "Analogous cases involving the same principle are quite numerous, a few of which only will be noticed. They show to a demonstration that it is not every one who suffers a loss from the negligence of another that can maintain a suit on such grounds. On the contrary, 'the limit of the doctrine relating to actionable negligence,' says Beasley, Ch. J., 'is that the person occasioning the loss must owe a duty, arising from contract or otherwise, to the person sustaining such loss. Such a restriction on the right to sue for a want of care in the exercise of employments or the transaction of business is plainly necessary to restrain the remedy from being pushed to an impracticable extreme. There would be no bounds to actions and litigious intricacies, if the ill effects of the negligence of men could be followed down the chain of results to the final effect.' Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5, 8. . . . Cases where fraud and collusion are alleged and proved constitute exceptions to that rule, and Parke, B. very properly admits in the following case, that other exceptions to it exist which are as sound in principle as the judgments which establish the rule. Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 761-767. Examples of the kind are given in that case, two of which deserve to be noticed, as they have been urged in argument to disprove the rule; but they cannot have any such effect, for the plain reason that they stand in many respects upon a different footing. 'These cases,' says the court in that opinion, 'occur where there has been a wrong done to the person, for which he would have a right of action, though no such contract had been made;' and the court gives as an illustration the patient injured by improper medicines prepared by an apothecary, or one unskillfully treated by a surgeon, where both would be liable to the injured party, even if the father or friend of the patient contracted with the wrongdoer." In Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra, it is said: "The right of a third party to maintain an action for injuries resulting from a breach of a contract between two contracting parties has been denied by the overwhelming weight of authority of the state and Federal courts of this country and the courts of England. To hold that such actions could be maintained would not only lead to endless complications in following out cause and effect, but would restrict and embarrass the right to make contracts by burdening them with obligations and liabilities to others, which parties would not voluntarily assume," citing Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109, and a large number of other cases. "The rule is put upon two grounds, either of which is unquestionably sound. One ground is given by the court in the opinion in Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109, as follows: 'If we were to hold that the plaintiff could sue in such a case, there is no point at which such actions would stop. The only safe rule is to confine the right to recover to those who enter into the contract. If we go one step beyond that, there is no reason why we should not go fifty.' The other ground is thus stated in the New Jersey case above cited: 'The object of parties in inserting in their contracts specific undertakings with respect to the work to be done is to create an obligation inter sese. These engagements and undertakings must necessarily be subject to modifications and waiver by the contracting parties. If third persons can acquire a right in a contract, in the nature of a duty to have it performed as contracted for, the parties will be deprived of control over their own contracts.' Plaintiff, not being a party to the contract, cannot maintain this action on account of injuries resulting from any breach of duty defendant owed Pickle, arising purely out of the terms of the contract between them."

No authority has been brought to our notice contravening the rule as stated in the foregoing citations. Some, which at first glance might be so taken, will be found upon analysis to fall within one or the other of the exceptions noted, and not to infringe upon the general doctrine. Within such class fall the cases relied upon by plaintiff to support his general right to maintain the action. This case comes strictly within the general doctrine as above stated. No fact is alleged bringing it within any of the exceptions thereto. It is not alleged that defendant did the act charged maliciously, or through any evil intent, or with any fraudulent purpose, or that he did it in any affirmative sense. The complaint proceeds solely upon the theory that it was through negligence arising either from ignorance or carelessness, or both; and this, although it may be conceded that the complaint discloses an instance of the grossest ignorance on the one hand, or unpardonable carelessness on the other, and shows very grievous injury to plaintiff as a result, does not, within the principles above announced, make a case entitling the plaintiff to maintain the action. It is claimed, however, that the action can be maintained under the rule, expressed in § 1559 of our Civil Code, that a contract made by one person with another for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by the latter, the argument being that the employment of defendant by plaintiff's mother to draw her will was clearly for plaintiff's benefit, inasmuch as the latter was one of the objects of her bounty, as expressed in her will; and a number of cases are cited which are supposed to bring the case within that rule. But, in our judgment, that provision has no application to this case. It is intended to apply to instances where the contract is made expressly for the benefit of the third person, not where the third person is or may be merely incidentally or remotely benefited as a result of such contract. Such is the language of the Code, and such will be found to be the application of the doctrine in all the cases cited by counsel, or which have come to our attention. The terms of § 1559 are: "A contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." This rule, we are told by Mr. Pomeroy (Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 139), was originally adopted prior to the reformed procedure, being based partly upon considerations of convenience and partly upon a liberal construction of the nature of the contract, and the purpose of which was to avoid circuity of action, and to enable the real party in interest to sue. That author proceeds to give us illustrations of its application, and each instance given is a case where the contract was in express terms made for the benefit of the third party, and by reason of which the latter became the real party in interest. No such application of the doctrine as is here contended for is even remotely hinted at. The contract between the plaintiff's mother and the defendant, which was the subject of the breach, cannot be said in any legal sense to have been expressly made for plaintiff's benefit. It was a contract for employment of defendant's services as an attorney, to draft the will of Mrs. Buckley, the immediate purpose of which was for the benefit of the latter, to enable her to make disposition of her estate in accordance with her desire.

31 L. R. A.

Remotely, it is true, she intended plaintiff to be benefited as a result of such contract, by providing for him in her will. Such provision, however, could create no vested right in plaintiff until the death of the testatrix. Until that event the will remained purely ambulatory, and the provision for plaintiff could be at any time changed or withdrawn. It therefore created a mere possibility in plaintiff,—not a right which made him in law a privy to the contract. To hold that, by reason of the provision for plaintiff in the will, the contract is to be considered one made expressly for his benefit, is to confound the terms of the will with those of the contract. The latter alone was the subject of the breach, and by defendant's negligence in carrying out that contract the testatrix alone suffered legal injury. Although the ultimate consequential injury to plaintiff would appear to have been great, it was, so far as defendant is concerned, damnum absque injuria, against which the courts are powerless to relieve. In this view, it is not material to notice the other objections made to the complaint. The demurrer having been properly sustained, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Garoutte and Harrison, JJ., concur.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Third Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1895, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. PERSONAL RIGHTS.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Constitutional amendment.

The adoption of a proposed constitutional amendment is discussed in various phases in a case which holds that a proposal to change the location of the seat of state government is not invalidated by making the change conditional on donations and the erection of buildings in addition to a vote of the people, although the existing Constitution requires such vote only. (Mo.) 815.

Unreasonable seizures.

The taking as exhibits on a criminal prosecution for causing the explosion of a boiler the boiler, engine, and other materials, although done under order of court, is held to be a violation of the constitutional protection against unreasonable seizures. (Mich.) 163.

Due process of law.

The constitutional requirement of due process of law is held to be violated by a statute providing for assessments on property without any notice to lot owners or opportunity to be heard. (Va.) 382.

Due process of law is held to be denied by a statute making the issue of improvement bonds which could be done without notice to the owners of property affected, within forty days after the assessment, conclusive of its validity. (Wis.) 213.

The owner of hogs is not deprived of property without due process of law by making it unlawful to allow them to run at large. (W. Va.) 131.

The right of a municipal corporation, such as an incorporated school district, to the protection of a constitutional provision as to due process of law against a statute attempting to take away a complete defense under the statute of limitations, is established in an Illinois case. (Ill.) 71.

A statute requiring railroad companies to carry freight for the same rates that any other company may carry it between the same points, without providing for any investigation of the matter, is held to be a denial of due process of law. (Neb.) 47.

Sunday.

The constitutionality of the statute prohibiting barbers to carry on business on Sunday except in two places within the state is sustained as an exercise of the police power to protect health. (N. Y.) 689.

Delegation of power.

The unconstitutionality of a statute attempting to delegate legislative power to an insurance commissioner by authorizing him to adopt a standard policy is declared in Wisconsin, following Minnesota and Pennsylvania decisions. (Wis.) 112.

Eminent domain.

Land owned by a railroad company but not actually in use or necessary for the enjoyment of its franchise is held subject to condemnation by another railroad company for whose use it is necessary. (Mont.) 298.

Voting.

A statute making it a crime to vote without certain documentary proof of the payment of a poll tax, or the voter's affidavit of such payment and of the fact that the required document has been lost or mislaid, is held valid, even as against a voter who has actually paid his poll tax. (Tenn.) 837.

The right of the mayor to vote in the election of an officer by the city council, of which he is declared to be a member, is limited to the case of a casting vote to break a tie, where the charter in general terms says that he shall preside in the board of aldermen and joint meetings of the two boards, but shall have only a casting vote. (Me.) 116.

Taxes.

A mistake as to the location of lands whereby taxes are paid to a school district which has no right to them is held to give no right to recover back the taxes paid, either in favor of the taxpayer or of the other district in which he was taxable. (Ill.) 329.

A tax of 2 per cent on the gross receipts of a foreign building and loan association is held not to interfere with the freedom of commerce or to deny the equal protection of the laws. (Ky.) 41.

Courts.

The appointment of a receiver by a Federal court is held ineffectual to prevent the subsequent sale of property under execution from a state court to satisfy a mechanic's lien, where the judgment establishing the lien had been rendered before the receiver was appointed. (Mo.) 335.

Power of the courts to interfere with the action of the governor or of a legislative commission of which he is a member, in respect to the selection of a site for a public institution and the letting of contracts therefor, is discussed at length in a case which denies the power of the courts to interfere. (Or.) 473.

Jurisdiction of a cause of action for negligence arising in Mexico was refused in Texas because the Mexican law applicable to the case was so different in respect to the judgment to be entered that the Texas court could not undertake to enforce it. (Tex.) 276.

The right of a state court to entertain an action on an undertaking given to stay proceedings on appeal in admiralty is sustained in an elaborate opinion reviewing the question of jurisdiction as between admiralty and other cases. (N. D.) 238.

The jurisdiction of a court of admiralty in a suit for death of a passenger by collision between vessels is sustained, where the state statute gives such right of action and makes it a lien on the vessel. (C. C. App. 9th C.) 715.

A judgment of a court which has jurisdiction of the matter, committing an infant to the custody of a board of children's guardians, is held not to be void on collateral attack though it assumes to act under an unconstitutional statute. (Ind.) 740.

Municipal corporations.

A constitutional limitation of city indebtedness to the amount for which income and revenue are provided in any year is held not to be violated by a contract to pay an annual sum for a period of years for disposal of sewage, if the annual sum is within such limit. (Cal.) 794.

A contract by city authorities for street lights for a term of five years payable monthly is held void under a statute prohibiting contracts or any other mode of binding the city beyond existing appropriations for the purpose. (Ind.) 743.

An unusual and important case respecting void annexation of territory to a city is that in which, on grounds of estoppel, the court refused to disturb the jurisdiction of the city after it had been exercised for several years. (Iowa) 186.

A statute in Massachusetts requiring a town which votes to establish an electric-light plant to purchase one already established, if there is such, is construed and enforced. (Mass.) 457.

License.

An ordinance imposing a license fee of $10 per day on itinerant merchants is held void for unreasonableness, while a provision discriminating between residents and nonresidents of a city is also held void. (Ill.) 522.

A license tax on peddlers is held unconstitutional where it exempts manufacturers who have paid a tax on capital, since this discriminates against nonresidents. (Va.) 379.

A statute giving municipal authorities discretion to license such persons as they think proper as transient merchants is held to infringe a bill of rights prohibiting exclusive public emoluments or privileges. (Conn.) 55.

Streets.

General authority to open streets and condemn land therefor is held sufficient to justify opening a street across depot grounds of a railroad company. (Iowa) 183.

Road commissioners in Massachusetts were held to be public officers, and not servants of the town, for whose acts the town was liable in the use of a steam drill for the repair of a road, although the work was ordered by county commissioners to be paid for by a special appropriation. (Mass.) 174.

The power of a city to compel proper insulation and support of electric wires laid in the streets is held not to be precluded by the prior grant of a franchise to a gas company to lay pipes or other things in the streets for lighting purposes. (Mo.) 793.

Officers.

The doctrine that there can be no de facto officer without a de jure office is repudiated by a decision that official acts by officers in an office created by an unconstitutional statute cannot be collaterally attacked before the statute has been authoritatively adjudged unconstitutional. (Ohio) 660.

The civil service provisions of the New York Constitution of 1894 are held to be self-executing so far as to require appointments made without compliance therewith to be held illegal by the courts, while the exemption of the department of public works from the civil service act, which existed under the old Constitution, is held no longer to exist and no re-enactment of the law is held necessary. (N. Y.) 399.

The liability of an officer for public funds which he deposits in a bank and which are lost by the bank's failure is held not to be that of an insurer, and to be measured by negligence or want of proper business caution. (Tenn.) 844.

Adopting the stricter and harsher rule which perhaps a majority of the cases follow, the supreme court of Washington holds a county treasurer on his bond although the money had been lost by failure of a bank in which he had deposited the money without any negligence. (Wash.) 851.

Water supply.

A statute regulating the distribution of water from canals is held valid as applied to a prior contract which gave the consumer the right to draw the amount of water to which he was entitled, if the owner of the canal failed to comply with his contract. The statute prohibited this and made ample provision for the distribution of water by persons appointed for that purpose. The contract right was held subject to the police regulation. (Colo.) 828.

A free supply of water to a house of correction chiefly controlled by a board and not by the city council is refused, where the water is furnished by an incorporated board having no source of revenue for the running expenses of the waterworks except the water rates, although the city is required to pay any deficiency in the expenses of the house of correction, as this expense should be borne by all the taxpayers, and not by the consumers of water only. (Mich.) 468.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

A contract to buy its "requirements" of coal for a season, made by a lumber company, is sustained against the contention that it was uncertain. It is held to mean the amount needed, and not merely what the purchaser should choose to require. (Ill.) 529.

Statute of frauds.

A contract to furnish iron work for a brick building, to be made according to special designs, is held not to be for a sale of personal property within the statute of frauds. (Cal.) 508.

Marriage by a woman is held a sufficient part performance of a contract in consideration of marriage to take it out of the statute of frauds, and an additional part performance is shown where her child was surrendered to the custody of the husband and performed services for him under the contract. (Mo.) 811.

Banks.

The acceptance of a check is held necessary to give a right of action against a bank by the holder for refusal to pay it. (Ohio) 653.

Transferring an account in a savings bank to a new account in the names of the depositor and his wife jointly, subject to the order of either and to survivorship on the death of either, is held to partake somewhat of the character of an equitable assignment, and to give her the property on the husband's death. (Md.) 454.

Bills and notes.

An option for the extension of a note, indorsed upon the back, is held not to destroy its negotiability. (Ala.) 234.

Public policy.

A contract to secure the control of a corporation by the control of the voting of stock of other persons is held void on grounds of public policy. (N. D.) 557.

A sale of lots which were to be distributed by chance among the purchasers, with a prize lot to be given to one of them by chance, is held to be contrary to public policy and to be void. (Ind.) 885.

Sunday contract.

After the execution of a transaction by which forfeits were deposited on Sunday to secure an invalid Sunday contract, the mere fact that this was done on Sunday will not give one party the right to recover back his deposit unless he had notified the holder not to pay it over before this was done. (Ala.) 792.

Attorney's fees.

The constitutionality of a statute giving attorney's fees in a particular class of cases is sustained as applied to actions against railroad companies for appropriating lands without paying compensation. (Minn.) 558.

Guaranty.

A guaranty of interest on a note is held to run only until its maturity. (Ark.) 121.

Insurance.

Death from inhaling illuminating gas while asleep is held to be within a policy although it provided against liability for death from inhaling gas or from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled, or from accidents that bear no external and visible marks. (N. Y.) 696.

The fact that an insane beneficiary in a life insurance policy killed the insured under circumstances that would make the crime of murder if the beneficiary had been in his right mind is held not to defeat his right to the insurance. (Ill.) 67.

Carriers.

The duty of a carrier to furnish passenger cars on a regular passenger train, instead of a baggage car, is sustained unless the baggage car was the best that could be furnished and was made as safe as possible. (Md.) 313.

Oil and gas lease.

A provision that an oil and gas lease shall be void on the lessee's default is held to give him no option to set up the avoidance of the contract as a defense for his breach thereof, but merely to give the lessor a right to declare it void. (Ind.) 673.

Impairing obligation.

The change of remedy on a mortgage contract by extending the time for redemption on foreclosure is held in Montana and Kansas not to constitute an impairment of the contract obligation. (Kan.) 74; (Mont.) 721.

Accord and satisfaction.

A receipt in full given on payment of part of a claim only when there is no dispute about that part, but the other part is disputed, is treated as an accord and satisfaction. (Mich.) 171.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Nonuser of the franchise of a corporation and sole ownership of its stock are held insufficient to constitute a dissolution or vest title of the property in such stockholder. (Tenn.) 706.

A corporation is denied the right to hold corporate meetings in a state other than that in which it is created, for the purpose of organizing, electing officers, or performing any strictly corporate functions in organization; and it is 81 L. R. A.

held that it does not constitute a lawful corporation in the state where it thus organizes. (Fla.) 484.

The liability of a corporation for the fraudulent use of unanceled certificates of stock which had been surrendered and become mere vouchers, by an employee who extracted them from a safe, is denied, although they were in the hands of a bona fide holder. (N. Y.) 779.

Assurances that a certificate of stock is in a condition for transfer, given on inquiry by a person in charge of the office of a corporation, are held to estop the company from denying its liability where on the faith of such assurances the genuineness of the certificate had been guaranteed. (N. Y.) 776.

The liability of directors for indebtedness of a corporation in excess of its capital stock is considered in a Tennessee case, in which the capital stock paid in is held to be the amount subscribed by stockholders and the indebtedness is held to include bonded indebtedness. (Tenn.) 593.

The power of a president and secretary of an electric-railway company to issue negotiable notes for the corporation is denied, and the exercise of the power by them is held to raise no presumption of their authority. (Ark.) 535.

The invalidity of a contract for the sale of the entire plant of a corporation for shares in another company is declared in a case which holds that affirmative relief may be granted against interference with possession of the property, where the scheme is repudiated before the property is surrendered. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 415.

Preference among creditors.

In harmony with the weight of authority sustaining preferences by insolvent corporations in favor of ordinary creditors, an Illinois case goes to the extent of holding that securities given to directors by a going concern, although insolvent, in order to obtain money loaned at the same time when the securities are given, will be valid. (Ill.) 265.

So, preference to directors of an insolvent corporation is held lawful even when the preferred creditor is a relative of some of the directors, or when the preferred debts were guaranteed by the directors,—at least when it is not shown that they are able to respond to the creditor, or that the preference was for their benefit rather than that of the creditor. (Ill.) 269.

In South Dakota the preference of creditors by an insolvent corporation is denied in a case where the preference was to secure a debt for money borrowed by the company to purchase its own stock. (S. D.) 497.

Partnership.

Insolvent members of an insolvent firm are held to have no right to use the partnership property to pay their individual debts leaving firm debts unpaid. (Miss.) 470.

Name.

The right to the exclusive use of the name of the Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. is denied to a seceding body which became incorporated, although the older body was unincorporated. (Iowa) 133.

A firm name may be used by a purchaser of the assets and goodwill of a trading partnership upon its dissolution, and where a corporation is organized it may include the firm name in its own. (Ohio) 657.

Religious society.

The rights of the minority of a Free Will Baptist society to prevent a transfer of the property of the society by action of the majority to the Baptist denomination are sustained in an Iowa case, although their manual of church government has a provision for dismissing a church in good standing to join another evangelical denomination, since this is regarded as applying to the church in the ecclesiastical rather than the legal sense. (Iowa) 141.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

The liability of children to furnish support to poor parents, declared by a statute which provides no method of enforcing it, is held to make the children liable to the county when it has furnished necessary support. (S. D.) 461.

A statute making sentence to life imprisonment operate as an absolute dissolution of a marriage with the convict is held constitutional under a provision against legislative divorces; and a reversal of such a sentence for error is held not to restore the marriage relation. (Wis.) 515.

Divorce.

Utter desertion for three years as ground for divorce is held to exist where for that time a wife persistently refuses to return to her husband although during the time he makes her a visit and stays with her for several nights. (Me.) 608.

A divorce on a cross-bill in favor of a non-resident is allowed notwithstanding general statutory provisions limiting divorces in favor of residents. (Mich.) 160.

A judgment of divorce is held not to estop the wife who obtained it from asserting that her husband was dead before the divorce, where he was not served in the action and his whereabouts were unknown. (Cal.) 411.

V. PERSONAL RIGHTS.

The right of private persons to object to the publication of their pictures or photographs is held not to extend to a public character such as a great inventor. (C. C. D. Mass.) 283.

An attempt to prevent the erection of a statue as a memorial of a deceased woman, on the ground that it was an invasion of the right to privacy, was not successful where the attempt was made by her relatives and it appeared that the purpose of the statue was to do her honor, although in her lifetime she might have objected to it. (N. Y.) 286.

Post mortem.

The right of the proper officers to make a post-mortem examination without consent of the family of the deceased is sustained in the case of death from seemingly inadequate personal injury. (Md.) 540.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Seduction.

The right of a betrothed person to recover for the seduction or the alienation of the affections of his affianced is denied in a Michigan case. (Mich.) 282.

Refusal of check.

The right of a trader or merchant to compensatory damages on account of the dishonor of his check when he had funds to meet it is sustained on the ground that it is a slander upon him in his business. (Minn.) 552.

False imprisonment.

False imprisonment procured by a railroad detective is held to render the company liable although he exceeded his authority and disobeyed instructions, where he acted within the scope of his authority. (Tenn.) 702.

Pollution of water.

An injunction against the connection of a sewer underdraining a cemetery with a spring brook from which water is used for domestic purposes is sustained, notwithstanding the water was also polluted to some extent from other sources. (Ill.) 109.

Selling dangerous article.

One who sells a folding bed knowing it to be unsafe, but representing it to be safe, is held liable to any person injured while using it on account of its defects. (Cal.) 224.

Mistake.

A mistake of an attorney in drawing a will is held to give no right of action to a son of the testatrix, who by the mistake is deprived of a benefit that the testatrix intended to give him. (Cal.) 862.

Negligence as to gas.

A gas company which does not exercise care to discover and remedy a leak in a street main when notified that gas is escaping into a cellar of a building abutting on a street is held chargeable with negligence. The same case holds that it is not negligence as matter of law to carry a lighted lamp or to ignite matches in a cellar filled with gas. (Md.) 785.

Negligence as to electric wires.

For the breaking of a telephone wire insecurely fastened above a trolley wire without any guard wires between them, joint liability of the telephone company and the street-railway company is sustained. (Ala.) 589.

The duty to make streets substantially as safe after dangerous electric wires have been placed in them as they were before is held to accompany a grant of the privilege to place such wires in streets; and proof that a broken telephone wire hanging across a feed wire of an electric railway obtained a deadly charge of electricity from the feed wire is held to be sufficiently made by the fact of such contact without anything to show any other source. (Md.) 572.

A detached electric wire hanging in a public alley so as to endanger public travel is prima facie evidence of negligence. (Colo.) 566.

Liability for injury caused by contact with a broken telephone wire which is charged with electricity from a trolley wire is upheld where the street-railway company had not exercised sufficient care to avoid accidents. The extent of such care necessary is held to correspond to the degree of the danger. (Ark.) 570.

An electric-light company may be guilty of actionable negligence in failing to take proper steps to learn the condition of its wires as well as in failing to repair them. (S. C.) 577.

Injury to a workman familiar with electric wires, who while standing on a wooden pole moving electric lamps touched an iron post sustaining a span wire of a trolley line and the span wire at the same time, thus completing the circuit, when the span wire had circuit breaks to prevent charging the post, is held not to create any liability on the part of the trolley company. (Wis.) 583.

Fire.

Storing cotton in a rented building without right when it was hired for the storage of vehicles is held to make the tenant liable for damage to the building by fire, if this would not have resulted except for the dangerous character of the property. (Tenn.) 604.

Railroad negligence.

A railroad is held liable for kicking a car around a curve down grade at a place where numerous people used the track without objection as a footpath, and a boy was struck by the car. (Wash.) 855.

A defect in a sidewalk across a railroad, which causes injury to a person driving a snow plow over it, is held to give him a right of action notwithstanding his unusual use of the walk, if the defect was such as to make the walk unsafe for ordinary purposes. (Mich.) 170.

Carrier's liability.

The liability of a carrier for abuse and insult to one passenger by a drunken and disorderly fellow passenger is sustained where the conductor failed to interfere. (Minn.) 551.

The duty to consider the safety of a drunken passenger on ejecting him from a train is affirmed in a case holding the carrier liable for his death caused by another train soon after. (Ala.) 372.

One assisting to carry a sick passenger from one car to another on request of the conductor is held to have a cause of action against the carrier for injury by negligence in the operation of the train during such removal. (Ohio) 261.

Negligence in boarding an electric street car in motion is held to be within the rule applicable to other street cars, rather than the rule applicable to steam railroads, and therefore a question for the jury. (Ill.) 331.

A civil engineer of a railroad company traveling in the course of his duty and upon a pass is in the position of an employee, and not of a passenger, with respect to the risk of injury arising from the want of a watchman at a bridge which the train crosses, when he is presumed to know that no watchman is kept there. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 321.

Respondent superior.

An assault by the agent of an express company upon a person to whom he had just refunded an overcharge is held to make the company liable. (Miss.) 390.

The exemption of a charity such as a hospital from the operation of the maxim respondet superior is made in a Connecticut case after elaborate discussion. (Conn.) 224.

Cattle diseased.

The liability of the owner of cattle which communicate disease to others while trespassing on lands insufficiently fenced in Texas is held to depend on his knowledge of their condition, although he knew they were liable to break fences. (Tex.) 669.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS.

For one creditor to keep another ignorant of a trade with the debtor for his own protection is held not to avoid the preference which he thereby gains. (Ark.) 609.

Wages due a clerk before and during the last illness of his employer are "wages of servants" within the meaning of a statute classifying claims against an estate. (Kan.) 538.

Adverse possession under a deed purporting to convey the interest of a remainderman, together with the payment of taxes for the period of seven years, is held to bar the estate in remainder notwithstanding the outstanding life estate. This is an exceptional case. The general rule that adverse possession does not run against remaindermen during the life estate is considered in 19 L. R. A. 839. (Ill.) 325.

Manure.

The right of a tenant to manure produced on leased premises by stock in excess of that maintainable by products of the premises is sustained, and it is held that he will not lose his property therein by intermixing it with that of the landlord without the latter's consent. (N. H.) 698.

Gift.

The validity of a gift causa mortis of shares in a national bank is sustained in a case in which nearly all the shares of stock in such bank were actually delivered to the donee in contemplation of death. The opinion very extensively reviews the law on this subject of gifts by delivery of this kind of property. (Mont.) 429.

Life estate.

A royalty on an oil or gas lease is held to be an incident of a life estate and therefore included in a reservation of a life use, although the grantor specifically excepted it, also a sale of a part of the royalty previously made. (W. Va.) 128.

On a refusal by a widow to take a life estate given her by will, it is held that a devisee whose share is diminished by the widow's election is entitled to the life interest which the widow refused, as compensation, as against remaindermen claiming to be accelerated, and for any deficit remaining in the devisee's share the other devisees must contribute. (Tenn.) 840.

Trademark.

The words "fireproof oil" are held descriptive and therefore not subject to claim as a trademark for illuminating oil. (Ala.) 374.

A peculiar trademark case, the first of its kind, decides that a trademark cannot be had for such organic property as grape vines so as to prevent the use of the name of the parent stock by any person lawfully cultivating and selling its products. (C. C. App. 3d C.) 44.

Surface waters.

The doctrine as to surface waters in Minnesota is applied to justify the deepening of the natural drainage of a pond or marsh fed by surface waters, although in case of unusual rains the lands below may be more liable to be overflowed. (Minn.) 547.

Islands.

An island formed in a navigable river where land had formerly been washed away is held to belong to the owner of the remainder of the track only when it was formed by accretion beginning at the water line of such remaining land. (Ark.) 317.

Trust.

A fund contributed for the relief of sufferers from a fire by persons whose identity is not known is held to create a trust for the benefit of such sufferers which cannot be diverted by the trustees for the general benefit of the poor of the town, even after suitable relief has been afforded to the sufferers from the fire. (Me.) 118.

Effect of alienage.

The common-law rule against tracing descent through aliens is held revived in Illinois by repeal of a statute which had abrogated that rule, and a claim that provision for descent to next of kin avoided the rule by making the descent immediate to those persons is denied. (Ill.) 85.

Alienage of a son at the death of the testator is held not to bar his descendants from taking as heirs under an executory devise, where the disability of alienage was removed by statute before the time when the heirs were to be determined. (R. I.) 146.

The right of nonresident aliens to inherit from an alien resident is sustained under statutes prohibiting nonresident aliens from acquiring title except that a widow and heirs of aliens who have acquired lands in the state may hold by devise or descent for ten years. (Iowa) 177.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

Mandamus to compel the surrender of the insignia of office to one having a certificate of election is held proper, but the title to the office is not adjudicated in such proceeding. (Or.) 342; (Fla.) 357.

A replevin suit for goods sold, discontinued 81 L. R. A.

before judgment, with payment of the value of the property replevined to satisfy the replevin bond, is held not to defeat the right to claim payment of the purchase price of the goods. (Md.) 799.

Injuries received outside of the state by an employee of a railroad company whose line extends into the state are held to be within the Ohio statute making certain defects in railroad apparatus prima facie evidence of negligence. (Ohio) 651.

The rule as to a private action to abate a public nuisance is applied in denying an injunction by the owner of property abutting on a cul de sac against obstructing the way between his property and the closed end. (Wis.) 695.

Cases certified.

A certificate of the question whether or not a demurrer should be sustained to plaintiff's petition is held not sufficient to show a question to be decided under a statute requiring the very question to be decided to be certified. (Tex.) 392.

Attachment.

Shipping manufactured products out of the state to fill orders in the course of business is held to be a removal of property when the manufacturer is an insolvent corporation, that will sustain an attachment. (Miss.) 222.

An amendment to a complaint and affidavit for attachment, made after a general assignment for creditors, is held to discharge the attachment as to the assignee, where the amendment substitutes a different cause of action. (Minn.) 422.

Injunction.

An injunction against an elevated railroad in favor of an abutting owner whose easements are interfered with is denied, where his property has increased greatly in value and proportionately with other property in the vicinity by reason of the construction of the railroad. (N. Y.) 407.

An injunction against a default judgment was held not to be justified by the fact that defendant submitted his defense to an attorney and relied upon the latter to present it. (Ky.) 33.

A default judgment upon a note given for a gaming consideration is held not to be subject to attack by injunction. (Ga.) 767.

Fraud is held not to be ground for attacking a judgment by injunction unless it was inequitable and the complainant had exercised due diligence. (Neb.) 747.

The fact that a judgment of a justice of the peace is void for want of jurisdiction is not sufficient to permit an injunction against its execution, where there is a remedy by certiorari to set it aside. (Tex.) 200.

Trespass.

Trespass is held not to be a proper remedy for the unnecessary cutting or trimming of trees on a sidewalk by employees when removing telephone wires. (Ala.) 193.

Principal and Surety.

The right of a surety to his discharge by the discharge of his principal is held to continue even after judgment against him authorizing him to file a bill for relief. (Ind.) 59.

Examination.

The power of a court to make an order for the examination of a horse whose condition was a question in dispute, so as to authorize a veterinary surgeon to go on the premises of the owner without his consent to make it, is denied in a Michigan case. (Mich.) 169.

Receivership.

An attempt to extend the doctrine which gives preferences over mortgages to claims for running expenses of a receivership was made ineffectually in a case of a receivership of a telegraph company to which a bank made a loan which was used in paying claims for which receivers' certificates might have been, but were not, issued. (N. Y.) 403.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

The constitutionality of the summary proceeding under the South Carolina dispensary act to obtain a restraining order against carrying on the unlawful business is sustained in a case of contempt for violating such order. (S. C.) 678.

The offense of receiving funds on deposit in a bank known to be insolvent, which is declared by the Pennsylvania statute to be embezzlement, is held not to be committed by receiving the funds, knowing the bank to be insolvent, if they are placed in a separate envelope with intent to return them, and this is done without making them at any time a part of the funds of the bank. (Pa.) 124.

Distribution of liquors by an incorporated social club to its members is held not to be a sale within the meaning of a license law. (N. Y.) 510.

31 L. R. A.

Signing another's name as agent is held not to constitute forgery. (Cal.) 831.

A statute making it unlawful to bet upon a horse race in another state, or to send money by telegraph to be wagered in another state on a horse race in a third state, is held to be within the police power. (Va.) 822.

The record of conviction of a principal offender is held admissible against an accessory as prima facie evidence that the principal committed the crime as charged. (Mont.) 294.

A judge presiding on a criminal trial is held incompetent to testify as a witness in the case. (Ark.) 465.

The right of jurors to act upon their personal knowledge of the mental condition of one accused of perjury is denied. (S. C.) 489.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Affidavits. See ATTACHMENT.
Aliens; right to inherit, see DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.
 Inheritance by, from, or through, see DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.
Attachment; right to amend affidavit for:—Statutes permitting amendments; general statute of amendments; matter of substance or form; statute denying amendment; rule in absence of statute; additional affidavits; right to amend as against third person 422
Attorneys; negligence of, as a bar to injunction against judgment 36
Autopsy. See CORONER.
Banks; criminal liability for receiving deposit in bank knowing of its insolvency:—In general; constitutionality of statutes; effect of adopting existing nomenclature in defining the offense; liability in the absence of statute; who liable; liability of partnership; sufficiency of proof; other rulings 124
 Joint account in savings banks 454
Bills and notes; provision for renewal as affecting negotiability 234
Carriers; duty as to passenger taken ill during journey 261
 Duty as to furnishing proper cars for passengers:—In general; adoption of improvements; character of train 313
 Railroad employees or officers as passengers:—Riding in course of, or as part of employment; transportation to or from work; person riding for purposes of his own 321
Cases certified; definiteness of question to be certified:—whole case must not be sent up; whole case cannot be split up into distinct points; importance of questions; point of difference; question not general; question not abstract; question to be perfectly stated; question of fact not to be involved; necessary facts to be stated; as to sufficiency of evidence or indictment; as to demurrer; what will be considered; questions held proper; Illinois decisions; Iowa decisions; New Jersey decisions; Ohio decisions; Texas decisions; Wyoming decisions; criminal cases; tax cases 362
Contracts; impairment of obligation of, by police power as to electric wires 798
 Statute extending mortgagor's right of possession on foreclosure of pre-existing mortgages 721
Convicts. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Coroner; power of, to order post-mortem examination 540
Corpse. See CORONER.
 31 L. R. A.

Criminal law; effect of conviction of crime upon marriage relation 515
Descent and distribution; effect of state Constitutions and statutes upon the question of inheritance by or from an alien:—(I.) United States statutes; (II.) state Constitutions and statutes and their construction; (III.) decisions under English statutes 85
 Effect of statutes and Constitutions upon inheritance through an alien:—(I.) The English doctrine; (II.) the effect of state legislation 148
 Alien's right to inherit:—(I.) The common-law doctrine; (II.) upon what the right depends; (III.) power of the states to regulate; (IV.) lands granted for military services and colonization; (V.) inheritance of patent lands; (VI.) effect of annexation of territory or division of an empire; (VII.) the effect of naturalization; (VIII.) effect of marriage with an alien and residing abroad 177
Discovery; order to enter premises for examination 169
Divorce. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Electrical uses; liability for injuries by electric wires in highways:—(I.) General rules; (II.) danger of current; (III.) degree of care; (IV.) liability for broken, fallen, or sagging wires; (a) liability of owner; (b) presumption of negligence as to broken or fallen wires; (c) liability of party breaking them; (d) negligent delay in removing or repairing them; (e) municipal liability; (V.) failure to guard wires from falling wires of other owners; (VI.) concurrent liability; (VII.) wires charged by lightning; (VIII.) contributory negligence 568
 Police regulation of electric companies; (I.) In general; (II.) as to the occupation of highways or waters; (III.) as to guard wires; (IV.) as to the operation of electric lines; (V.) limitation of the police power: (a) limitations in state Constitutions: (1) impairment of obligation of contracts; (2) deprivation of property without due process of law; (3) class legislation; (b) limitations in Federal Constitution: (1) statutes requiring electric wires to be put underground; (2) statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies for not transmitting and delivering message properly; (3) statutes regulating telephone prices and requiring service on equal terms to all; (4) statutes imposing license fees on telegraph companies 798

Evidence. See also WITNESSES.

The right of jurors to act on their own knowledge of the facts id or relevant to the issue:—(I.) The general rule; (II.) modification thereof: (a) in general; (b) as to intoxicating liquors; (c) as to witnesses

489

Forfeiture. See MINES.

Forgery; by false assumption of authority in signing another's name as agent for him

831

Fraud; as ground of injunction against judgment when it was a defense to the original action

747

Participation by creditor in fraudulent intent of debtor which will make a transfer to pay or secure his debt invalid as to other creditors:—(I.) Necessity of participation; general doctrine; (II.) who are bona fide purchasers within the statute; (III.) what constitutes participation: (a) generally; (b) securing a preference; (c) knowledge of fraud, insolvency, etc.; (d) assumption of other debts as part of purchase price; (e) amount of property taken; (f) allowance of fair price; (g) security greater in value than debt; (h) security for overstated debt; (i) security for present and future advances; (j) inclusion of simulated debts; (k) reservation of benefits; (l) taking conveyance fraudulent on its face; (m) retention of possession; (n) failure to record; (o) other circumstances and conditions tending to show participation; (IV.) participation by agent; (V.) participation as between trustees and beneficiaries; (VI.) participation by one of several beneficiaries; (VII.) effect of other accompanying purposes besides that to defraud; (VIII.) effect of relationship or intimacy of the parties; (IX.) conveyances taken from a fraudulent grantee; (X.) presumption and burden of proof; (XI.) participation under bankruptcy and insolvency laws

600

Highways; as to injuries from electric wires in, see ELECTRICAL USES.

Police regulation as to use of, by electric wires

798

Husband and wife; the effect of a conviction and sentence of either husband or wife upon the marriage relation:—(I.) In general; (II.) necessity of a conviction; (III.) effect of an appeal from a conviction; (IV.) effect of commutation of the sentence or of a pardon; (V.) conviction in another state; (VI.) retroactive effect of statute; (VII.) allegation of infamous crime; (VIII.) where crime is prior to marriage; (IX.) conviction as desertion; (X.) classed with cruelty; (XI.) conviction as a bar to divorce by the party convicted

515

Injunction; negligence as a cause and as a bar to injunction against judgments:—(I.) As a cause for injunction against judgments; (II.) as a bar to injunctions against judgments: (a) in attending court; (b) in employing an attorney; (c) of attorney; (d) in ascertaining a defense; (e) in regard to evidence; (f) in asserting a defense; (g) delay in seeking

33

Enjoining judgments against or in favor of sureties:—(I.) Against sureties: (a) remedy at law as a bar to injunction; (b) valid defense must be shown; (c) in matters of negligence or for failure to make a legal defense; (d) in summary proceedings; (e) for newly discovered evidence; (f) where defense was prevented; (g) for equitable defenses; (h) on account of statutes; (i) pleading and parties; (j) injunction bonds; (II.) in favor of sureties

50

Against judgments for want of jurisdiction, or which are void:—(I.) In general; (II.) as to party; (III.) as to time; (IV.) as to venue; (V.) as to amount; (VI.) matter of process and service: (a) form; (b) time and manner; (c) fraud as to service; (d) acceptance of service; (e) party served; (f) service on corporation; (g) service on partners; (h) service at residence; (i) where there was no service as required by law; (j) where there was no notice; (VIII.) on account of appearance; (IX.) pleading and practice; (X.) where there was no judgment or it was set aside

200

Against judgments for defenses existing prior to their rendition:—(I.) failure of consideration: (a) generally; (b) in judgments for purchase money: (1) insolvency; (2) nonresidence; (3) rescission; (4) mistake; (5) title bonds; (6) defective title generally; (7) deficiency in amount of land; (8) fraud; (9) res judicata; (10) no cause of action for injunction; (11) sales by executors and administrators; (12) summary judgments; (13) court sales: (c) judgments in favor of purchasers; (II.) fraud: (a) where the defense is forgery or non est factum; (b) in obtaining a contract; (c) generally; (III.) public policy: (a) generally; (b) debt for Confederate money; (c) gambling debts; (d) usury; (IV.) set-off: (a) failure to assert at law; (b) parties; (c) unliquidated damages; (d) trial at law; (e) no set-off; (f) insolvency and nonresidence; (g) accounting; (h) equitable set-off; (i) in matters of an estate; (j) mutual agreements; (V.) payment: (a) failure to defend; (b) defense made; (c) equitable defenses; (d) summary proceedings; (e) pleading bill of discovery; (VI.) conditions; (VII.) partition and dower; (VIII.) as to party; (IX.) title to property; (X.) nonliability in general

747

Intoxicating liquors; rights of jurors to act on their own knowledge of 489

Judge. See WITNESSES.

Judgment; injunction against. See INJUNCTION.

Jurors. See EVIDENCE.

Justice of the peace. See also WITNESSES.

Power of, to order post-mortem examination

543

Landlord and tenant. See also MINES.

Rights of landlord and tenant in respect to manure on leased premises; English cases; American authorities; exceptions to the rule

606

Lightning. See ELECTRICAL USES.

Mandamus; to compel surrender of office:—(I.) general doctrine governing; (II.) necessity of a demand and a refusal; (III.) effect of such surrender; (IV.) sufficiency of title to support; (V.) special provisions relating to; (VI.) in the case of a private corporation; (VII.) when writ refused: (a) insufficiency of facts; (b) in case of a private party; (c) when there is another remedy; (d) in the absence of ouster; (e) prima facie title; (f) possession by an officer de facto ; (g) when the title is in issue; (h) question of election; (i) other relief sought; (j) relator's own act; (VIII.) English cases	342	Negligence. See ELECTRICAL USES.

Maure. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.		Officers. See MANDAMUS.
Master and servant. See CARRIERS.		Oil. See MINES.
Mines; forfeiture of oil and gas lease; manner of enforcing forfeiture clause; waiver; estoppel; how forfeiture clause regarded; absence of obligation clause; effect of alternative provision for rent; who may set up forfeiture	673	Partnership; criminal liability for receiving deposit in insolvent bank	125
Mortgages. See CONTRACTS.		Post-mortem. See CORONER.
Municipal corporations; liability for negligence as to electric wires	581	Principal and surety; enjoining judgment against or in favor of sureties	59
Naturalization; effect of, on inheritance	181	Privacy; law of	288
31 L. R. A.		Set-off; as ground of injunction against judgment when it existed before its rendition	747
		Street railways; liability for negligence as to dangerous electric currents on wires, see ELECTRICAL USES.
		Summary proceedings; injunction as to judgment by or against surety in	63
		Telegraphs. See ELECTRICAL USES.
		Telephones; liability for negligence as to dangerous electric currents on wires, see ELECTRICAL USES.
		Trial. See EVIDENCE.
		Witnesses; competency of judge as witness in a cause on trial before him:—(I.) Rule as to judges; (II.) justices of peace	465

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ACCESSION.

A tenant does not lose his property in manure by intermixing it with manure of the same quality and value belonging to the landlord, without the latter's consent. Pickering v. Moore (N. H.) 648

ACCIDENT. See INSURANCE, 3-5.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

A receipt in full given without protest on payment of the undisputed part of a claim after refusal to pay another part which is disputed, when the money is apparently accepted in full satisfaction, constitutes an accord and satisfaction. Tanner v. Merrill (Mich.) 171

ACCRETION. See WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also ADMIRALTY, 2; BANKS, 2.

1. In all cases of purely public concern affecting the welfare of the whole people or the state at large, the action of a court can be invoked only by such executive officers of the state as are by law intrusted with the discharge of such duties. State, Taylor, v. Lord (Or.) 473

2. An action for personal injuries caused by negligence is transitory, and may be maintained in any place where the defendant is found, if there be no reason why the court should not entertain jurisdiction. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex.) 276

3. The right of the owner of property destroyed by fire to recover damages from another by whose fault it was burned is, as against the defendant, unaffected by the fact that he may have already received full payment for his loss by insurance, and that the insurer is entitled to be subrogated to the claim. Anderson v. Miller (Tenn.) 604

4. Bringing a suit in replevin for goods sold, and discontinuing it before judgment, without obtaining any benefit therefrom, because the value of the goods was paid by the plaintiff to satisfy his replevin bond, does not estop him from claiming payment of the purchase price out of the assets of the estate of the purchaser. Bolton Mines Co. v. Stokes (Md.) 789

31 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Action; misjoinder of causes. 461
Election of remedy. 789

ADMIRALTY. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 2, 7; COURTS, 5.

1. A court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by personal representatives of a passenger killed by collision between vessels, under a state statute giving a right of action for death by negligence, as the tort is maritime. The Willamette (C. C. App. 9th C.) 715

2. Recovery for personal injuries or death due to collision cannot be had by libelants intervening after the vessel has been released on stipulation under the original libel. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Admiralty; exclusiveness of jurisdiction of. 239

Liability for death of person caused by collision; state statute creating lien on vessel. 716

ADOPTION. See CONTRACTS, 4; PARENT AND CHILD, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Possession for seven years by one claiming under a deed purporting to convey the interest of a remainderman, and sufficient to constitute color of title, coupled with payment of taxes for the same period, will bar the estate in remainder, notwithstanding the existence of the outstanding life estate, where the remainderman is under no disability and could have paid the taxes. Nelson v. Davidson (Ill.) 325

2. A deed purporting on its face to convey the title of land to the grantee is sufficient to constitute claim and color of title in the grantee, although the title, when traced back to its source, is not apparently legal and valid. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Adverse possession; as against remainderman. 325

AFFIDAVIT. See ATTACHMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS; ESTOPPEL, 2.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.
See SEDUCTION.

877

ALIENS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Right to inherit, see DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Inheritance by, from, or through, see DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

ANIMALS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 17, 24, 25; TRIAL, 6.

1. Knowledge of the owner of cattle that the fence of another person was insufficient cannot make the former liable for trespass by his cattle passing through such imperfect fence. Clarendon Land I. & A. Co. v. McClelland (Tex.) 669

2. Knowledge that cattle are liable to break fences is necessary in order to make the owner liable in Texas for permitting them to run at large. Id.

3. Failure of a land owner to comply with his duty to inclose his lands with a fence sufficient to exclude cattle of all sizes and kinds of ordinary disposition as to breaking fences will prevent his recovering any damages resulting therefrom by trespassing cattle. Id.

4. The owner of cattle is liable for their communicating a disease to others, if he knew or had good reason to believe that they could communicate it, and still let them run at large. Id.

5. Knowledge of the owner that cattle were breachy, but without knowledge or good reason to believe that they were liable to communicate disease, will not make him responsible for the effect of such disease actually imparted to the cattle of another person in consequence of their breaking a fence. Id.

6. Cattle known to be diseased may be placed by the owner in his own pasture without making him liable for communicating the disease, unless he is negligent in the manner of keeping them. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Animals; liability for communicating disease. 669

APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. The omission of the noncollusion clause from a cross-bill in a divorce suit is not fatal on appeal, but the court may allow it to be supplied. Clutton v. Clutton (Mich.) 160

2. Practice on appeal in an admiralty case to a territorial supreme court is regulated by rules and usages of courts of admiralty, and not by territorial statutes. Braithwaite v. Jordan (N. D.) 238

3. Evidence outside of the transcript is inadmissible on appeal to show that a motion stated therein to be made by one of the parties was in fact made by the other. Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bollman (Neb.) 747

4. The sufficiency of evidence to go to the jury or to sustain a verdict cannot be passed upon on appeal, further than to ascertain if at the close of the plaintiff's case there was evidence tending to prove the facts alleged in his declaration, and whether at the close of all the testimony the evidence, with all the inferences which the jury could justifiably draw from it, was insufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff. Cicero & P. R. Co. v. Meizner (Ill.) 331

Undertaking.

5. Failure of the court to fix the amount of an undertaking on appeal does not prevent its enforcement, if the respondent has treated the undertaking as sufficient and thereby waived the defect. Braithwaite v. Jordan (N. D.) 238

6. A good common-law obligation supported by a sufficient consideration is made by an undertaking to secure a stay of proceedings on appeal in an admiralty case, even if a mere cost bond might have been sufficient, where the respondent treats the undertaking as entitling the appellant to a stay. Id.

7. A bond reciting judgment for delivery of a vessel to the claimant in an admiralty case, when given to secure a stay of proceedings, is in the nature of a stipulation for value, which is valid as a voluntary bond when claimant refrains from disturbing the appellants in possession of the vessel pending an appeal. Id.

Waiver of error or defense.

8. The right of a defendant to be sued in the division of the district of Washington in which he resides is waived by appearing in another division and having the action transferred to that of his residence. The Willamette (C. C. App. 9th C.) 715

9. A party cannot complain on appeal of a ruling which he procured to be made. Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bollman (Neb.) 747

10. An error in instructions cannot be complained of by a party who subsequently asks and obtains the same instructions. Cicero & P. R. Co. v. Meizner (Ill.) 331
Queen City Mfg. Co. v. Blalack (Miss.) 222

11. A defendant in attachment who appears in open court and consents that judgment may be entered for the full sum demanded cannot on appeal, where the declaration, notes, and open accounts sued on, are absent from the record, without exception taken at the trial on the ground that they were not filed, assert that the debt sued for was not due, or that the notes and accounts were not filed. Queen City Mfg. Co. v. Blalack (Miss.) 222

12. The objection that the ground of an attachment sued out on a large demand consisting of many items, some of which are due and others not, is maintainable only as to a few of them as representing debts fraudulently contracted, must be made in the trial court to be available on appeal. Id.

Grounds of reversal.

13. Failure of an instruction to explain the meaning of a word which might mislead the jury is not ground for reversal, if a proper charge upon the subject was not requested. Clarendon Land I. & A. Co. v. McClelland (Tex.) 669

14. An explanation of a charge, given without objection, is not error where it does not lay down a different proposition of law from that contained in such instruction. Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (S. C.) 577

15. Refusal of an instruction as to how far intent constitutes fraud is not reversible error if a proper disposition of the case can be arrived at from the acts of the parties without regard to the intent. Rice v. Wood (Ark.) 609

16. Admission of testimony by the presiding judge on a trial for murder, reflecting on the good faith of defendant in a previous application for a continuance, is reversible error although the testimony is subsequently excluded and no objection was taken to the competency of the judge as a witness, where the competency of the evidence was objected to. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 465

17. The enforcement of a rule that attorneys who testify in the case cannot, without permission of the court, argue the case to the jury, is not reversible error, where counsel did not, before testifying, explain his position and request the court's permission to sum up. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

Termination of controversy.

18. Reversal of an erroneous injunction decree against making a bust of a deceased person for exhibition at a public fair will not be refused because the fair has closed, if there is also the purpose of placing the bust permanently in a proper place as a memorial to the deceased. Schuyler v. Curtis (N. Y.) 286

APPORTIONMENT. See ELECTION DISTRICTS.

ASSIGNMENT. See BANKS, 4.

ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS. See INSOLVENCY.

ASSOCIATIONS. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 2.

ASSUMPSIT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

To recover money paid for illegal securities. 71

ATTACHMENT. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3.

1. The shipping by an insolvent corporation of its manufactured products out of the state to fill orders by which the goods are to be delivered in other states, so that they remain its property when sent out of the state, is a removal of its property beyond the state which constitutes a ground for attachment, although its business cannot be successfully conducted unless the property is sent outside the state for sale. Queen City Mfg. Co. v. Blalack (Miss.) 222

2. An attachment is discharged as to an assignee for creditors of the defendant by an amendment to the complaint and affidavit for attachment, made after the assignment, which substitutes an entirely different and distinct cause of action. Heidel v. Benedict (Minn.) 422

3. Sureties on an indemnity bond to a sheriff to cause him to levy an attachment may be held liable as principals to the owners of the property attached if the attachment is wrongful. Rice v. Wood (Ark.) 609
31 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RECEIVERS.

Attachment; right to amend affidavit for:—Statutes permitting amendments; general statute of amendments; matter of substance or form; statute denying amendment; rule in absence of statute; additional affidavits; right to amend as against third person. 422

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The mere signature of the attorney general in his official capacity, to a complaint or bill shown to be that of a private relator, is not sufficient to impress it with the functions and capacity of an information competent to put in motion the machinery of the courts, whereby they will take cognizance of questions pertaining to the high prerogative powers of the state, or affecting the whole people in their sovereign capacity. State, Taylor, v. Lord (Or.) 473

ATTORNEYS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 17.

An attorney is not liable to a son for even gross negligence in so drawing the will of the mother as not to carry out her desires in the disposition of her property, even though the son suffers great pecuniary loss thereby, there having been no privity of contract between the son and the attorney. Buckley v. Gray (Cal.) 862

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys; negligence of, as a bar to injunction against judgment. 36

ATTORNEYS' FEES. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

AUTOPSY. See CORONER, NOTES AND BRIEFS; CORPSE.

BANKS. See also CORPORATIONS, 13; OFFICERS, 2, 3, 5; WILLS, 2.

1. The refusal to honor a check when there are funds in a bank against which it is drawn gives the drawer a right of action against the bank, if he is a trader or merchant. Sjendsen v. State Bank (Minn.) 552

2. The holder of an unaccepted check cannot maintain an action against the bank for refusal to pay it, although there stands to the credit of the drawer on the bank books a sum more than sufficient to meet it. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank (Ohio) 653

3. A banker who receives money, knowing that he is insolvent, but puts it into a special envelope with intent to return it to the depositor, which is afterwards done, without making the money at any time part of the funds of the bank, is not guilty of receiving money from a depositor with knowledge that the bank is insolvent, which under Pa. Laws 1889, § 1, is declared to be embezzlement. Com. v. Junkin (Pa.) 124

4. A transfer of a savings bank account to a new account in the names of the former depositor and his wife, making it subject to the order of either and to survivorship on the death of either, partakes somewhat of the nature of an equitable assignment, and entitles the wife to the fund after the husband's death. Metro-politan Sav. Bank v. Murphy (Md.) 454

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BONDS.

Banks; liability for refusing check. 552

Right of holder of check against. 654

Criminal liability for receiving deposit in bank knowing of its insolvency:—In general; constitutionality of statutes; effect of adopting existing nomenclature in defining the offense; liability in the absence of statute; who liable; liability of partnership; sufficiency of proof; other rulings. 124

Joint account in savings banks. 454

BARBERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6, 22.

BETTING. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

On horse race in other state. 823

BILLS AND NOTES. See also CON-TRACTS, 9; CORPORATIONS, 8, 9; GUAR-ANTY.

An option indorsed upon the back of a nego-tiable note for its extension for a definite time, by giving a new note at the option of the mak-ers and indorsers similar to the original, does not destroy its negotiability. Annis-ton Loan & T. Co. v. Stickney (Ala.) 234

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; provision for renewal as af-fecting negotiability. 234

BONDS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 5-7; ATTACHMENT, 3.

1. Bonds given by the board of education of a school district to obtain money which was not borrowed or used for any purpose for which the board was authorized by its charter to issue bonds are void. Normal School Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Blodgett (Ill.) 70

2. An officer is not an insurer of the safety of public funds in his hands, on a bond faith-fully to perform his duties and to collect and pay over moneys, but is responsible only for the exercise of good faith, diligence, prudence, caution, and a disinterested effort to keep and preserve the fund for those entitled. State, Overton County, v. Copeland (Tenn.) 844

3. The loss of public money by a bank fail-ure will not prevent liability of the county treasurer upon his bond to pay the money as the commissioners shall direct, although he was not negligent in selecting the bank and the county has not provided a suitable and safe place in which to deposit the money. Fairchild v. Hedges (Wash.) 851

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bonds; of officers, liability for loss of public money by bank failure. 851

31 L. R. A.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIA-TIONS. See COMMERCE, 1; CONSTITU-TIONAL LAW, 7; CONTRACTS, 14; TAXES, 1.

BURDEN OF PROOF. See EVIDENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

BUST. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 18; IN-JUNCTION, 11, 12; PRIVACY, 3.

CANAL. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 23.

CAPITAL. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3-5; CONTRACTS, 1.

1. There can be no irrepealable law to pre-vent the removal of the seat of state govern-ment, as this involves a governmental subject. Edwards v. Leueur (Mo.) 815

2. The power to select and afterwards to change its own seat of government if deemed expedient is necessarily implied in a state Con-stitution providing for a republican form of government not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and making no limitation upon its political or governmental power or the power to manage its own internal affairs. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Capital, of state, constitutional amendment changing; implied contract as to. 817

CARRIERS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 16; COURTS, 7; EVIDENCE, 8.

1. One who purchases a ticket for a regular passenger train has a right to be conveyed in a passenger coach instead of a baggage car, unless the latter is as safe a vehicle as can be procured by the utmost care and diligence. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Swann (Md.) 313

2. A woman who takes passage in a baggage car, when no passenger cars are provided for a passenger train, and pressing domestic duties call for her immediate transportation, does not thereby renounce her right as a passenger to safety and protection. Id.

3. Reasonable effort at least to make a bag-gage car safe and convenient for a passenger is necessary when this is the only vehicle that can be furnished for passengers in a regular passenger train. Id.

4. A passenger who becomes sick on a rail-road train is entitled to such care from the car-rier as is fairly practicable for it to give with the facilities at hand, without thereby unduly delaying the train or unreasonably interfering with the safety and comfort of other passen-gers. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Salzman (Ohio) 261

5. A passenger who aids in carrying another who has become sick on the train, into another car on the conductor's request in order that he may be treated by a physician, can re-cover against the carrier for injuries sustained by falling between the car platforms, which was caused by the negligence of the carrier's servants. Id.

6. A civil engineer of a railroad company traveling on duty for the company, upon a pass exempting the company from liability for injuries to person or property, occupies the position of an employee, and not that of a passenger upon the train upon which he is carried. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.) 321

7. Insult to and abuse of a passenger by a drunken and disorderly fellow passenger, which the conductor permits to continue in his presence without interference, renders the carrier liable to damages. Lucy v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (Minn.) 551

8. The intoxication and misbehavior of a passenger which will authorize his expulsion from a train will not justify his expulsion without exercising due care for his safety, having reference to time, place, and surroundings. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson (Ala.) 372

9. The ejection from a train at night, of a passenger known to be drunk and irresponsible, at a place from which he can escape only by following the roughly ballasted railroad track and crossing cattle guards on one side and a bridge over a creek on the other, renders the railroad company liable where he is killed by another train soon after. Id.

10. The cursing, abuse, and maltreatment of a person by an agent of an express company, immediately after refunding to such person overcharges which he had come to the office to obtain, and the delivery of a receipt therefor, are part of the res geste and makes the company liable for the tort. Richberger v. American Express Co. (Miss.) 390

11. To board or depart from an electric car while in motion is not negligence per se. Cicero & P. R. Co. v. Meizner (Ill.) 331

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; duty as to passenger taken ill during journey. 261

Duty as to furnishing proper cars for passengers:—In general; adoption of improvements; character of train. 313

Railroad employees or officers as passengers:—Riding in course of or as part of employment; transportation to or from work; person riding for purposes of his own. 321

Compelling to furnish facilities for business of other roads. 48

Liability for abuse of customer by servant. 390

Duty to protect passenger. 551

CASE.

One who sells a folding bed, representing it to be safe for use when he knows it to be dangerous, is liable for injuries caused by defects in the bed to any person who uses it, although there may be no privity of contract between them. Lewis v. Terry (Cal.) 220

CASES CERTIFIED.

The "very question to be decided," which is required to be certified by the court of civil appeals, under the Texas statutes, is not presented by a certificate of the question whether or not a demurrer should be sustained to plaintiff's petition. Waco Water & L. Co. v. Waco (Tex.) 392

31 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Cases certified: definiteness of question to be certified:—Whole case must not be sent up; whole case cannot be split up into distinct points; importance of questions; point of difference; question not general; question not abstract; question to be perfectly stated; question of fact not to be involved; necessary facts to be stated; as to sufficiency of evidence or indictment; as to demurrer; what will be considered; questions held proper; Illinois decisions; Iowa decisions; New Jersey decisions; Ohio decisions; Texas decisions; Wyoming decisions; criminal cases; tax cases. 392

CATTLE. See ANIMALS.

CENSUS. See EVIDENCE, 2.

CHARITIES.

1. A charitable corporation maintaining a hospital is not liable for injuries caused by personal wrongful neglect of servants who have been selected with due care. Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital (Conn.) 224

2. A fund contributed for the relief of sufferers from a fire, by persons whose identity is lost so that a surplus cannot be returned to them, must be expended for the benefit of such sufferers, and cannot be capitalized for the support of the town poor generally. Doyle v. Whalen (Me.) 118

3. Sufferers from a fire for whose benefit a fund has been donated by individuals unknown may maintain a bill to compel the trustees to expend the fund for their benefit, if the trustees have undertaken to capitalize the fund for the general benefit of the poor of the town. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Charities; liability for negligence of servants. 224

CHECKS. See also BANKS, 2; DAMAGES, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Right of holder against bank. 654

CIVIL ENGINEER. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 3.

CIVIL SERVICE. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1; STATUTES, 3.

The constitutional provisions respecting the powers and duties of the superintendent of public works, which the New York Constitution of 1894 adopted from the former Constitution, must be read and understood in connection with the new section of the Constitution requiring civil service appointments to be made according to merit, ascertained so far as practicable by competitive examinations. People, McClelland, v. Roberts (N. Y.) 399

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Civil service; constitutional provisions as to; department of public works. 399

CLERK. See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

The power given by statute to a clerk of court to issue injunction orders cannot be exercised by his deputy under a statute providing that any duty enjoined upon a ministerial officer and any act permitted to be done by him may be performed by his lawful deputy. Payton v. McQuown (Ky.) 83

CLUB. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.COLLISION. See ADMIRALTY.COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. See COUNTRIES.COMITY. See COURTS, 3.COMMERCE.

1. Freedom of commerce between the states is not interfered with by Ky. Stat. § 4228, requiring every building and loan association to pay into the treasury annually 2 per cent of its annual gross receipts. Southern Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Norman (Ky.) 41

2. A statute making it unlawful to make or record a bet upon any race of animals in another state is a proper exercise of the police power of the state, and not an unlawful interference with interstate commerce. Ex parte Lacy (Va.) 822

3. An exemption of manufacturers who have paid taxes on capital employed, from the provisions of a statute imposing a license tax upon peddlers, renders the statute unconstitutional as a regulation of commerce when applied to a nonresident acting as an agent or employed in the sale of goods owned and manufactured by a nonresident corporation. Com. v. Myers (Va.) 379

4. An ordinance prohibiting the business of itinerant merchants to be carried on without a license is not invalid as a regulation of interstate commerce, as applied to one who purchases bankrupt stocks wherever he can obtain them to the best advantage and sometimes buys them in other states, when it makes no discrimination between merchants whose goods are imported into the state and those whose goods are manufactured or purchased in the state, and does not impose any burden on sales in original packages brought into the state. Carrollton v. Bazzette (Ill.) 522

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; interstate, as affected by license tax. 379

Interstate; statute as to bets on horse race in other state. 828

COMMON LAW. See also DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 1.

1. The repeal of a statute which abrogated a common-law rule revives that rule. Beavan v. Went (Ill.) 85

2. A statutory adoption of the common law of England, so far as applicable and of a 31 L. R. A.

general nature and not in conflict with special enactments, does not preclude the consideration of the expositions of the common law by judicial authorities of our own country in determining what the common law is. Leyson v. Davis (Mont.) 429

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. The status as a legitimate heir of an alien born before the marriage of his parents is to be determined by the law of their domicile. De-Wolf v. Middleton (R. I.) 146

2. The law of Mexico must be applied to the rights of the parties in an action against a railroad company by an employee for a personal injury sustained in that country, in which the contract of service was made. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex.) 276

3. Attaching the lines and property of a telegraph company in other states, after a receiver has been appointed in the state of which the attachment creditor is a citizen and the creditor served with a copy of an injunction against interfering with the receivership, is a violation of the injunction, and can give the creditor no lien which can be asserted in an equitable administration of the assets in the state where the receiver was appointed. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Bankers' & N. Teleg. Co. (N. Y.) 403

4. Forwarding money by telegraph to another state to be wagered on a horse race to take place in a third state may be made a criminal offense in the state from which the money is sent, although it is lawful to make such wagers in the state in which the wager is made. Ex parte Lacy (Va.) 822

CONSTABLE. See LEVY AND SEIZURE, 2.CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also CAPITAL; EVIDENCE, 7, 9; SEARCH AND SEIZURE; STATUTES, 3.

1. The self-executing mandate of N. Y. Const. 1894, art. 5, § 9, declaring that civil service appointments "shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained so far as practicable by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive," requires the courts in a proper case to pronounce appointments made without compliance with its requirements illegal. People, McClelland, v. Roberts (N. Y.) 399

2. A statute providing that the insurance commissioner shall prepare, approve, and adopt a printed form of a policy of fire insurance, to conform as near as can be made applicable to that used in a certain other state, is an unconstitutional attempt to delegate to him legislative power. Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (Wis.) 112

Constitutional amendments.

3. The establishment of the seat of government of a state is a proper subject of constitutional control, and therefore of constitutional amendment. Edwards v. Lesueur (Mo.) 815

4. Conditions imposed and powers delegated by a proposed constitutional amendment to change the location of the seat of state government, whereby, in addition to the vote of the people which the existing Constitution requires for an amendment, donations of property and the erection of state buildings, to be approved and accepted by a commission, are made a condition of the change of location, will not make the proposed amendment inoperative, since upon the vote of the people adopting the amendment the conditions will be imposed and the powers delegated by the Constitution itself.

Id.

5. A vote in favor of a proposed constitutional amendment, taken by yeas and nays and entered in full on the legislative journals in full compliance with the constitutional provisions on this subject, is sufficient without having the resolution read on different days or in other respects taking the course required for ordinary legislation.

Id.

Equal protection of laws.

6. A statute permitting barbers in two localities of the state only, to pursue their business during certain hours on Sunday, does not deny to barbers in other places the equal protection of the laws, since it affects all within the same localities alike. People v. Hannon (N. Y.) 689

7. The equal protection of the laws is not denied to foreign building and loan associations doing business within the state, by Ky. Stat. § 4228, requiring such associations to pay into the treasury annually 2 per cent of their annual gross receipts. Southern Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Norman (Ky.) 41

Equal rights; discrimination.

8. A statute authorizing the mayor and certain other officers to issue a license "to such persons as they find proper persons to engage in a temporary or transient business," for a fee not less than $1 nor more than $100 as the authority issuing such license may direct, and making such business a misdemeanor except in the sale of products of a farm or the sea,—is, so far as it applies to ordinary and lawful business, a violation of the Connecticut Bill of Rights, declaring that all men "are equal in rights, and that no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community." State v. Conlon (Conn.) 55

9. A statute allowing reasonable attorneys' fees in an action to recover possession of land taken by a railroad company, without compensation, for its right of way, is not unconstitutional on the ground of class discrimination. Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 553

Due process of law.

10. Deprivation of a remedy is equivalent to the deprivation of the right which it is intended to vindicate, unless another remedy exists or is substituted for that which is taken away. Normal School Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Blodgett (Ill.) 70

11. A right of defense is a remedy of the defendant within the constitutional protection of rights. Id.

12. A complete defense under the statute of limitations is property within the protection of a constitutional guaranty of due process of law. Id.

13. A school district or municipal corporation has the same constitutional protection that 31 L. R. A.

an individual would have against the abrogation by statute of its already complete defense under the statute of limitations. Id.

14. Failure to provide for a notice to the person whose property may be affected by a local assessment, and to give opportunity to appear and contest the legality, justice, and correctness of the assessment, at some stage in the proceedings before it becomes final, renders the statute authorizing such assessments void for want of due process of law. Violett v. Alexandria (Va.) 882

15. A statute making the issue of improvement bonds conclusive of the validity of an assessment, and permitting the issue of the bonds without actual notice to the owners of the property assessed or on published notice only, within forty days after the assessment is finally determined, is unconstitutional as providing for deprivation of property without due process of law. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 213

16. A statute absolutely requiring a railroad company to carry freight for the same rates that any other company may accept for hauling the same freight between the same points, although by a shorter line, without giving the right of judicial investigation by due process of law, and no matter how great disparity in the length of such hauls may be,—is unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process of law. State, Board of Transp. v. Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co. (Neb.) 47

17. The owner of hogs is not deprived of his property without due process of law by making it unlawful to permit them to run at large. Haigh v. Bell (W. Va.) 131

18. Due process of law is not furnished by a judgment pronounced without opportunity to be heard by a court of competent jurisdiction, in accordance with the provisions of a statute, unless that statute accords with the provisions of the fundamental law. People v. Hannon (N. Y.) 689

Police power.

19. Every man's liberty and property are to some extent subject to the general welfare, as each person's interest is presumed to be promoted by that which promotes the interest of all. Id.

20. The physical welfare of the citizen is a subject of such primary importance to the state, and has such a direct relation to the general good, as to make laws tending to promote that object proper under the police power. Id.

21. The limitation on the legislative exercise of the police power is that such a statute must have a reasonable connection with the welfare of the public. Id.

22. A statute prohibiting barbers from carrying on their trade on Sunday is a constitutional exercise of the police power to promote the public health. Id.

23. A canal used for the carriage of water for hire is affected by a public interest and subject to legislative regulation in respect to the distribution of the water. White v. Farmers' Highline C. & R. Co. (Colo.) 828

24. An act making it unlawful for the owner of hogs to permit them to run at large is an exercise of the police power. Haigh v. Bell (W. Va.) 131

25. A county court in West Virginia, which has superintendence and administration of the internal and fiscal affairs of the county, though shorn of general judicial power, may be given by the legislature authority, upon petition of a certain number of voters, to adopt a certain statute respecting the running at large of hogs. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Constitutional law; police power as to license of occupation. 55

Delegation of power to insurance commissioners. 113

Due process in assessment. 382

As to attorneys' fees in a particular class of cases. 553

Police power as to Sunday law; class legislation. 689

Amendment changing seat of government. 817

CONTEMPT.

Appearing and answering as to the merits on a charge of contempt will prevent any attack for lack of jurisdiction of the person, on a decision that the party is in contempt. Ex parte Keeler (S. C.) 678

CONTINUANCE. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 16.

CONTRACTS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; CORPORATIONS, 11, 12; LOTTERY; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2-6.

1. An implied contract against the removal of the seat of state government from its original location is not made with property owners at that place by its location there. Edwards v. Lesueur (Mo.) 815

2. A contract for its "requirements" of coal for a certain season, made by a lumber company, is not void for uncertainty and for want of mutuality, when it was evidently meant to call for the amount of coal which the corporation should need in its business for such season, and not merely what it might choose to require of the other party. Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co. (Ill.) 529

3. An oral contract to manufacture and furnish ironwork for a brick building according to special designs and measurements, suitable only for use in that particular building, is not within the statute of frauds as a sale of personal property. Heintz v. Burkhard (Or.) 508

4. An oral contract for the adoption of a child as an heir may be recognized and enforced after performance of the consideration. Nowack v. Berger (Mo.) 810

5. Marriage constitutes such part performance by a woman of a contract in consideration of marriage as to prevent the operation of the statute of frauds in respect to the contract. Id.

6. The surrender of a child by his mother to the custody and control of a man whom she marries, in pursuance of an oral contract by which, in consideration of the marriage and of the services of the child, the husband agrees to give the child a share of his estate equal to that which an heir would inherit, constitutes an independent, additional, and valuable consideration which will amount to part performance of the contract, and take the case out of the operation of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5186, prohibiting an action on a contract in consideration of marriage unless it is in writing. Id.

Illegality.

7. A contract to allow another to control the voting of stock, based upon a promise of the latter to secure an office in the corporation for the owner of the stock, is illegal; and such illegal promise, although only a part of the consideration of the contract, renders the whole contract void. Gage v. Fisher (N. D.) 557

8. A contract for the privilege of ordering any quantity of coal not exceeding 12,000 tons is not an option contract in violation of Ill. Crim. Code, § 130, where it is made as a modification of a prior disputed contract, with the intention of limiting the quantity to be ordered, without relieving the purchaser from an obligation under the prior agreement to purchase the amount required in a certain business. Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co. (Ill.) 529

9. A note given in consideration of concealing from the maker's wife and from the public his criminal intimacy with another woman cannot be enforced. Case v. Smith (Mich.) 282

10. Affirmative relief in equity against an illegal contract by a corporation to transfer its entire plant and business to another company, and a conveyance in pursuance thereof, may be given to the extent of an injunction against interference with the title or possession of the original corporation, where before actually surrendering the possession of its property, or receiving all the consideration, it repudiated the whole scheme and tendered back all that it had ever received, and has kept the tender. McCutcheon v. Merz Capsule Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 415

Effect; rescission; action.

11. The share which a person is entitled to from an estate of a person who had agreed to give the former a specified share thereof cannot be diminished because of a gift by will of a portion of the estate to the children of the distributee. Nowack v. Berger (Mo.) 810

12. A purchase of stock at an exorbitant price, to secure control of the corporation, will not be rescinded on the ground that the seller had threatened to break his contract to give the purchaser control of the stock for voting purposes, and sell it to the opposing faction. Gage v. Fisher (N. D.) 557

13. The employment of an attorney by a mother to draw her will, in which a provision was made for one of her sons, is not a contract made for the benefit of the latter, within Cal. Civ. Code, § 1559, providing that a third person may enforce a contract entered into between others for his benefit, so as to entitle such son to recover from the attorney for his gross mistake in so writing the will as to deprive the son of the provision designed by the testatrix for his benefit. Buckley v. Gray (Cal.) 862

Impairing obligation.

14. The obligation of previous contracts of subscription to a foreign building and loan association doing business within the state is not impaired by Ky. Stat. § 4228, imposing an annual tax of 2 per cent on the annual gross receipts of all such associations. Southern Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Norman (Ky.) 41

15. A contract giving a consumer of water the right to draw and take from a canal all he may be entitled to on tender or payment of the amount due therefor, if the owner of the canal fail or refuse to comply with the contract, is not protected against legislative interference by a subsequent statute prohibiting such acts and regulating the distribution of water from such canals, but giving a remedy for the enforcement of the right to receive all the water to which the contract entitles him. White v. Farmers' Highline C. & R. Co. (Colo.) 828

16. General remedies afforded by state jurisprudence and practice, entirely aside from anything contained in a contract, never constitute any part of its obligation, and may be changed from time to time. Beverly v. Barnitz (Kan.) 74, Rev'd in Barnitz v. Beverly, 168 U.S. 118, 41 L. ed. —.

17. A remedy agreed upon in a contract itself, with the sanction of the state law, is indistinguishable from the obligation, and constitutes a part of it. Id.

18. A change in the remedy on foreclosure of a mortgage by Kan. act 1893, making it unnecessary to having an appraisal fixing the amount to be obtained on the sale, and hastening the time for sale in certain cases, but, on the other hand, extending for a year, at most, the time when the purchaser can get a deed, during which the mortgagor is entitled to possession, but for which he must pay interest on the sale price in case of redemption,—does not impair the obligation of a contract, as it merely changes the general remedy, and the mortgage in that state is a mere security, vesting no title and giving no right of possession either before or after breach. Id.

19. A statute extending the time for redemption upon the sale of mortgaged premises does not impair the obligation of the contract made by a pre-existing mortgage. State, Thomas Cruse Sav. Bank v. Gilliam (Mont.) 721

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CORPORATIONS.

Contracts; impairment of obligation by change of remedy. 74

Illegality of consideration. 282

Unlawful combinations in restraint of trade. 418

Statute of frauds as to contract for labor and materials. 508

Definiteness of provisions; validity of option. 530

Prohibited by statute. 743

Illegality of. 798

Statute of frauds; part performance; in case of adoption of child. 810

31 L. R. A.

Impairment of obligation of, by police power as to electric wires. 798

Statute extending mortgagor's right of possession on foreclosure of, pre-existing mortgages. 721

CONVICTS. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 8, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CORONER. See also CORPSE, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Power of, to order post mortem examination. 540

CORPORATIONS. See also CONTRACTS, 7, 12; EVIDENCE, 14; GIFT, 2-4; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 8; RECEIVERS, 2; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; WRIT AND PROCESS.

1. A corporation receiving its charter from one state cannot hold corporate meetings in another for the purpose of organizing, electing officers, or performing any strictly corporate functions in its organization. Duke v. Taylor (Fla.) 484

2. An attempted organization of a corporation in one state, under a charter granted in another state, does not constitute it a de facto corporation so as to relieve the members from liability as partners, as to give an association such a status the attempted organization must be under semblance of authority, which does not exist in the case supposed. Id.

3. Corporations are not bound by false and simulated entries upon their records unless they have estopped themselves to deny their truth. City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Exch. Bank (Ark.) 535

4. A sole stockholder of a corporation has no title, legal or equitable, to its property, which he can convey by a deed in his own name. Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.) 706

Name.

5. The right of a corporation to the exclusive use of a name as against another organization using the same name does not follow from the fact that the latter is doing an unlawful business. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Graham (Iowa) 133

6. The certificate of the auditor as to the right of a corporation to a name is not binding upon another body claiming the right to the name. Id.

7. The right to use the name "Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa" cannot be claimed by a seceding body merely because it has become incorporated, to the exclusion of the body from which it seceded, which previously had used the name and continued to do so without incorporation. Id.

Contracts.

8. The president and secretary of a corporation have no inherent power to execute negotiable notes in its name. City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Exch. Bank (Ark.) 535

9. The exercise of the power to make negotiable notes by officers of a corporation does not raise a presumption of their authority to do so, in the absence of a usage or custom from which such authority can be implied. Id.

10. A corporation as such has no power to create a debt by borrowing money with which to purchase its own stock,—especially when it is in failing circumstances. Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette (S. D.) 497

11. A sale of the entire manufacturing plant, including patents, processes, and goodwill, of a corporation, with an agreement that it would never again engage in the same business, made in consideration of stock in a new corporation, without intending to wind up the affairs of the former, but with the object of continuing its corporate life and activity, to be exercised through the other corporation, is ultra vires and void. McCutcheon v. Merz Capsule Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 415

12. The consent of stockholders cannot legalize or vitalize a void illegal contract by which a corporation attempts to transfer all its property to another company in consideration of shares in the latter. Id.

Stock.

13. A transfer on the books of a national bank is not necessary to give to a donee or purchaser an equitable title to the shares. Leyron v. Davis (Mont.) 429

14. An entry on the books of a corporation is not necessary to vest a vendee of shares of stock with all the title which the vendor had, notwithstanding a provision in the charter or by-laws that no transfer shall be complete or effectual without registration. Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.) 706

15. Information that a certificate of stock is in a condition for transfer, given by a person in charge of the office of a corporation in response to an inquiry, on the faith of which a broker guaranteed its genuineness, estops the corporation from denying its liability to indemnify him or his assignee against loss on account of the fact that the certificate was spurious and worthless. Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. (N. Y.) 776

16. The title of the true owner of a lost or stolen certificate of stock in a corporation may be asserted against any one subsequently obtaining its possession, even if the holder is a bona fide purchaser. Knox v. Eden Musee American Co. (N. Y.) 779

17. Directing an employee to cancel surrendered certificates of stock does not give him any authority, expressed or implied, to act as agent in issuing them, so as to bind the corporation by his wrongful use of them to secure a personal loan. Id.

18. Permitting surrendered certificates of stock to remain uncanceled in the safe of the corporation to which an employee has access, and relying upon him to cancel the certificates as he was directed to do, is not such negligence as will make the corporation liable for his fraudulent use of them to secure a personal loan about three weeks later, if the company did not know or have reason to suspect that he was dishonest, although a by-law requiring the cancellation of the surrendered certificates was not complied with. Id.

Liability of directors.

19. Dividends paid by the directors of a corporation when it is realizing a net profit on its business, and when the assets as honestly estimated by them exceed its liabilities, will not render them individually liable under a charter imposing such liability for dividends paid when the company is insolvent, although the assets prove to have been largely overestimated and the company in fact insolvent. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. (Tenn.) 593

20. Consent to the creation of indebtedness of a corporation in excess of its assets, which will make directors individually liable therefor under a statute imposing such liability, must be given in their capacity as directors. Id.

21. The term "indebtedness," in the charter of a corporation making directors liable personally for indebtedness in excess of capital stock paid in, includes bonded indebtedness. Id.

22. The term "capital stock paid in," in the charter of a corporation making directors liable for debts in excess of such stock, means the amount subscribed by the stockholders, and not the total value of the assets. Id.

23. Although the directors' liability for indebtedness of a corporation in excess of the capital stock is available only in favor of creditors whose debts were illegally contracted, yet it cannot be enforced by each creditor individually, but must be enforced by a bill filed for the benefit of all creditors similarly situated. Id.

Dissolution; winding up.

24. Nonuser of the franchise of a corporation, and the sole proprietorship of all its capital stock, will not constitute a dissolution of the corporation without a judicial adjudication thereof. Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.) 706

25. The existence of a corporation or its title to property cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground of its dissolution or forfeiture of franchise, until dissolution has been judicially pronounced. Id.

26. A creditor of a corporation may, without obtaining judgment against it, maintain a bill under the Tennessee statutes to wind up its affairs, if, after sustaining large losses, it has suspended business with no preparation for resumption, and has executed trust deeds in favor of certain creditors covering practically all its assets, while its claim to solvency is based upon extravagant valuations of its assets. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. (Tenn.) 593

27. A sale of property in a suit to wind up an insolvent corporation is not made subject to the provisions as to redemption, in a statute governing sales in foreclosure proceedings or under decrees for the payment of money, by the fact that in the suit are filed cross bills seeking preferences in the assets, if the decree refuses to recognize such claims, but leaves the assets unencumbered thereby. Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) 269

Preference of creditors.

28. Trust deeds in favor of certain creditors, executed by a corporation after sustaining heavy losses and suspending business and when it cannot meet its accruing liabilities, will be set aside. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. (Tenn.) 593

29. An insolvent corporation has no authority to prefer creditors. Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette (S. D.) 497

But see cases following.

30. Directors and officers of an insolvent corporation can dispose of its property in good faith to pay or secure corporate debts, even though the result is to give some creditors a preference over others. Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell (Ill.) 265

31. Relationship of a creditor of an insolvent corporation to one or more of its directors or officers will not prevent the giving of a valid security as a preference to such creditor. Id.

32. A preference given by an insolvent corporation to a creditor, having no indorsement or guaranty from its directors, is not unlawful though she is an aunt of three of the directors. Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) 269

33. Valid securities may be given to its directors by a corporation, although it is in fact insolvent, where it is a going concern doing a large business, and the securities are given for money loaned at the same time in good faith to enable the company to carry on the purposes of its incorporation. Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell (Ill.) 265

34. Subsequent insolvency of a corporation which has borrowed money when solvent from officers or directors will not affect their rights of action to recover such loans and enforce their securities. Id.

35. Judgment notes of a corporation, renewed after its insolvency, are in the same position with respect to the right of the corporation to make preferences as prior judgment notes for which the renewals were given. Id.

36. A preference by an insolvent corporation, of creditors whose debts have been guaranteed by directors of the corporation, is not invalid although made without the requirement or knowledge of the creditors, unless it otherwise appears that it was made for the benefit of the directors or guarantors, and not for that of the creditors themselves. Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) 269

37. The filing in a suit to dissolve a corporation and close up its business, of cross-bills in the nature of creditors' bills, and of prayers to set aside a deed of trust on the property, will not operate to give the creditors praying such relief preference over the other creditors of the corporation. Id.

38. A party loaning money to an embarrassed corporation subsequently adjudged insolvent, and taking security therefor, cannot in equity claim a lien on its mortgaged property or the proceeds thereof, in preference to a pre existing mortgage, no matter for what purpose the loan was made or how the money loaned was applied, providing the mortgage bondholders were not parties to the transaction. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Bankers' & N. Teleg. Co. (N. Y.) 403

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; validity of agreement to control stock. 558

31 L. R. A.

Liability of directors for excessive indebtedness; preference of creditors. 594

Liability for acts of agent. 702

Dissolution of. 706

Liability for information as to certificate of stock. 776

Liability for fraudulent transfer or issue of stock. 779

Conflicting rights as to name. 184

Preference among creditors of. 265, 271

Gift of stock causa mortis. 436

Foreign organization or meetings outside of state. 485

Dealing with director; preference of creditors. 497

Power of officers as to negotiable paper. 535

CORPSE. See also CORONER, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A coroner may lawfully order a post mortem examination without the consent of the family of the deceased, where death has resulted from an injury which seems to him insufficient alone to produce death. Young v. College of Physicians & S. (Md.) 540

2. A post mortem examination made by a medical examiner in the exercise of his duty, when required by a coroner, does not render him liable for mutilating the body without the consent of the family of the deceased, if the work was done with ordinary decency and without wantonly disfiguring the body. Id.

COSTS.

1. A limitation of the amount of costs to $30 when the law determines their amount, under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2918, subs. 7, § 2921, is erroneous. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 218

2. A city is not liable for costs in a suit to enforce an ordinance. Carrollton v. Bazzette (Ill.) 522

COTENANCY.

One of two tenants in common of a quantity of manure may rightfully take away his share without the intervention of a court to make the division. Pickering v. Moore (N. H.) 698

COUNTIES. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 25.

The expense of placing blocks of stone from a county in a state building at the Columbian World's Fair cannot be made a county tax. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 218

COURTS. See also DEBT.

1. An unconstitutional apportionment law may be declared void by the courts, notwithstanding the fact that such statute is an exercise of political power. Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 726

2. A court of equity will not assume to determine the constitutionality of a legislative act unless the case comes within some recognized ground of equity jurisdiction, and presents some actual or threatened infringement of the rights of property on account of such unconstitutional legislation. State, Taylor, v. Lord (Or.) 473

3. No principle of comity requires state courts to refuse to take cognizance of an action on an undertaking to secure a stay of proceedings on appeal in an admiralty case. Braithwaite v. Jordan (N. D.) 238

4. A stipulation for value in a possessory action, unlike stipulations for value in other cases, can be enforced in any court having jurisdiction of an action of debt for the amount due on the stipulation. Id.

5. An action on an undertaking to secure a stay of proceedings on appeal in an admiralty case is not an integral part of the original case, or a proceeding to enforce the judgment therein, or within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty, but is within the jurisdiction of a state court. Id.

6. The appointment of a receiver by a Federal court after a judgment in a state court establishing a mechanic's lien against specific property and directing a sale of it to satisfy the demand will not defeat the right of the lien claimants to have the property sold on execution under the judgment. Rogers & B. Hardware Co. v. Cleveland Bldg. Co. (Mo.) 335

7. Courts have no power to make an arrangement of the business intercourse of common carriers such as they think ought to be made, because such function is legislative rather than judicial. State, Board of Transportation, v. Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co. (Neb.) 47

Causes of action arising in other country.

8. A court will not undertake to adjudicate rights which originated in any other state or country under statutes materially different from the law of the forum in relation to the same subject. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex.) 276

9. It is for the court whose jurisdiction is invoked to determine whether or not the law of a foreign country by which the right claimed must be determined is such that it can properly and intelligently be administered by that court, with due regard to the rights of the parties. Id.

10. Jurisdiction of an action for personal injuries sustained in any other country by a railroad employee will not be entertained by a Texas court, where the foreign law which governs the case permits what is termed "extraordinary indemnity" in a sum which the judge might deem proper considering the plaintiff's social position, and also provides for subsequent judgments for additional damages afterwards arising out of the same injury, as well as for a reduction of the judgment in case of an increased earning capacity of the injured person. Id.

Rules of decision.

11. Courts will not assume to pass upon constitutional questions unless properly before them. State, Taylor, v. Lord (Or.) 473

12. The constitutionality of a statute giving women the right to hold office will not be passed upon in a collateral proceeding. Stevens v. Carter (Or.) 342

13. The rule of stare decisis does not bind the court in deciding the constitutionality of a statute, where no property right or contract between the parties is involved. Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 726

14. The construction of provisions of the Federal Constitution by the Supreme Court of the United States must be followed by the state courts in all matters to which such provisions are applicable. State, Board of Transp. v. Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co. (Neb.) 47

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; of state, jurisdiction on undertaking in admiralty. 239

Jurisdiction of cause of action arising in foreign state. 276

Exclusiveness of jurisdiction on appointment of receiver. 335

CREDITORS' BILL.

1. Creditors whose executions cannot be levied upon their debtor's property because it is in the hands of a receiver are not, because of failure to levy executions, precluded from attacking the validity of a deed of trust which has been given by the debtor as being in fraud of their rights. Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) 269

2. Jurisdiction to set aside a trust deed is acquired, although complainants in the original bill in which such relief was sought were not judgment creditors of the grantor, where a cross bill to foreclose the deed is filed in the suit, making numerous parties defendants with a requirement to answer, which they do by attacking the deed, and upon issues so formed the question of the validity of the deed is submitted by the parties for decision. Id.

CRIMINAL LAW. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 4.

A fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and imprisonment for not less than ninety days nor more than one year, for violation of a restraining order under the South Carolina dispensary act of 1894, § 22, are not within the constitutional provision against excessive fines or cruel and unusual punishments. Ex parte Keeler (S. C.) 678

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BETTING.

Criminal law; effect of conviction of crime upon marriage relation. 515

CROSS-BILL. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 1.

CUSTOM.

A usage to be good and one of which the courts will take judicial notice must be general and of such long standing as to have become a part of the law itself. City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Ech. Bank (Ark.) 535

DAMAGES.

1. General compensatory damages, and not merely nominal damages, may be recovered by a merchant or trader for the dishonor of his check when he had funds to meet it. Scendesen v. State Bank (Minn.) 552

2. The measure of damages for partial destruction of a building is the reasonable cost of restoring it so that it will be as valuable as it was before, considering its age and depreciation; and it is not the cost of a new building the same as that destroyed. Anderson v. Miller (Tenn.) 604

3. A verdict of $15,000 is not excessive for injury to a boy who was run over by a car and one of his legs crushed so that amputation was necessary. Roth v. Union Depot Co. (Wash.) 855

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; offset of benefits in eminent domain case. 408

DANGEROUS AGENCY. See NEGLIGENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DEATH. See ADMIRALTY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DEBT.

A common-law action of debt will not be denied on the ground that the plaintiff has in another tribunal a more speedy and simple remedy which is equally efficacious,—especially where this would deprive him of the right to a trial by jury. Braithwaite v. Jordan (N. D.) 288

DEDICATION.

The express refusal of a city to accept a plat with a certain strip designated thereon as a street, and the inclosure and use of one end of the strip as private property, on which the owners are compelled to pay assessments for improvements on another street, preclude a finding that this portion was a public road or street. Mahler v. Brumder (Wis.) 695

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dedication; of highway; acceptance of. 695

DEFENSE. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11, 12.

DEFINITION. See LICENSE, 2.

DEPUTY. See CLERK.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.
See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; WILLS, 3.

1. The common-law rule that one citizen cannot inherit from another where kinship must be traced through a nonresident alien cannot be rejected as repugnant or inapplicable to our institutions or the condition of things in this country, under a statutory adoption of the general principles of the common law so far as applicable. Beavan v. Went (Ill.) 85

2. A statutory provision that an estate shall descend in equal parts to next of kin does not 31 L. R. A.

make the descent to collateral kindred immediate so as to avoid the effect of alienage of ancestors through whom kinship is traced. Id.

3. It seems that one who becomes a domiciled resident of a foreign country becomes an alien within the operation of the law which excludes aliens from inheritance. De Wolf v. Middleton (R. I.) 146

4. The alienage of a son, which would prevent his inheritance at the time of the death of the testator, who made an executory devise to his heirs at law according to the statute of descents, will not exclude a descendant of the son from this class, where a statute passed before the time of determining the heirs has removed the disability of alienage. Id.

5. Nonresident aliens may inherit from an alien resident land situated in a state whose statutes prohibit nonresident aliens from acquiring title to land in the state, except that the widow and heirs of aliens who have acquired lands in the state may hold such lands by devise or descent for a period of ten years. Easton v. Huott (Iowa) 177

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Descent and distribution; effect of state Constitutions and statutes upon the question of inheritance by or from an alien:—(I.) United States statutes; (II.) state Constitutions and statutes and their construction; (III.) decisions under English statutes. 85

Effect of statutes and Constitutions upon inheritance through an alien:—(I.) The English doctrine; (II.) the effect of state legislation. 146

Alien's right to inherit:—(I.) The common-law doctrine; (II.) upon what the right depends; (III.) power of the states to regulate; (IV.) in lands granted for military services and colonization; (V.) inheritance of patent lands; (VI.) effect of annexation of territory or division of an empire; (VII.) the effect of naturalization; (VIII.) effect of marriage with an alien and residing abroad. 177

DISCOVERY.

An order of court that a veterinary surgeon may be sent on the premises of a party against his will to examine a horse whose condition is in dispute, provided the owner or any person he may select shall accompany such surgeon, is in excess of the power of the court. Martin v. Elliott (Mich.) 169

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Discovery; by entry on premises for examination. 169

Order to enter premises for examination. 169

DISEASE. See ANIMALS, 4-6.

DIVORCE. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 1; JUDGMENT, 4; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4, 5, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DOWER. See WILLS, 4.

DRUNKENNESS. See CARRIERS, 8, 9.

ELECTION DISTRICTS. See also Estoppel, 8.

1. The injustice of allowing but one representative to a county, while other counties having a similar population are given a voice in the election of more than one representative, must be avoided wherever possible. Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 726

2. Double districts in which two or more counties are grouped and given a voice in the election of more than one senator or representative, when neither of them has a voting population equal to the ratio for one senator or representative, cannot be created under Ind. Const. art. 4, § 5, requiring apportionment among counties according to the male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age, and § 6, providing that where more than one county shall constitute a district they must be contiguous. Id.

3. The approximation to the dual constitutional requirements of county representation and proportionate popular representation, in the enactment of an apportionment law by the legislature, is not reviewable by the courts except for gross abuse of discretion and providing both objects contemplated in the Constitution are kept in view. Id.

4. The obligation of observing a constitutional requirement as nearly as possible in an apportionment act becomes of binding force under the Constitution, when the exact requirement cannot be observed. Id.

5. The requirement that legislative apportionment shall be according to the number of inhabitants, in Ind. Const. art. 4, § 5, is no less binding than the provision that counties united in a district must be contiguous, or that no county for senatorial apportionment shall be divided. Id.

6. A valid apportionment law can be passed only once for each enumeration period, under Ind. Const. art. 4, § 4, providing for an enumeration every six years, and § 5, requiring an apportionment at the session next following the enumeration. Id.

7. An unconstitutional apportionment law, even if it has been declared constitutional by one of the lower state courts, will not preclude the enactment by the legislature of a valid apportionment law. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Election districts; power of courts as to apportionment law. 727

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES. See also EVIDENCE, 5, 11, 12, 21-24; HIGHWAYS, 1; TRIAL, 14-16.

1. An electric-light company may be guilty of actionable negligence in failing to take proper steps to receive information concerning the condition of its wires, as well as in not repairing them within a reasonable time after receiving notice of their bad condition. Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (S. C.) 577

2. The care exercised to prevent the escape of a dangerous current of electricity from wires suspended over streets in populous cities or towns must be commensurate with the great danger that exists, although the owners of such wires are not insurers against accidents. City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery (Ark.) 570
31 L. R. A.

3. The escape of electricity from wires suspended over streets, through any other wires that may come in contact with them, must be prevented so far as it can be done by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. Id.

4. A grant of the privilege to encumber the public highway with poles and electric wires which, though insulated, carry a deadly current, imposes upon those having such privilege the duty of so managing affairs as not to injure persons lawfully on the streets, and of making the street substantially as safe for them as it was before. Western U. Tele. Co. v. State, Nelson (Md.) 572

5. Reasonable care and caution in the use of an electric current by a street-railway company is required for the safety of the employees of an electric-light company which is engaged by the railway company to move electric lamps during the operation of the railway. Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. (Wis.) 583

6. The coiling of a trolley wire over a span wire pending continuation of the line, thereby charging the span wire with electricity, is not negligence which will render the street-railway company liable to an experienced workman familiar with such wires and their insulation, who is injured by contact with the span wire while standing on a wooden pole moving electric lamps, where the span wire had circuit breaks to prevent its charging the iron posts which sustained it, and injury from it could be sustained only by one who completed the circuit between it and the iron posts by touching them both at the same time. Id.

7. A telephone company and an electric-railway company are jointly liable for negligence when both maintain their wires with knowledge of the danger caused by the want of guard wires between the trolley wire and a telephone wire insecurely suspended over it, and especially when they permit a broken telephone wire to remain suspended across the trolley wire. McKay v. Southern Bell Tele. & Tele. Co. (Ala.) 589

8. A telephone company is not excused for negligence in the maintenance of a wire insecurely fastened above a dangerous trolley wire, because the railroad company was chargeable with the duty of maintaining guard wires between the electric wires, and failed to do so. Id.

9. An electric-railway company maintaining a trolley wire charged with a dangerous current without guard wires between it and an insecure telephone wire over it, and negligently permitting the telephone wire to remain suspended over the trolley wire after it has fallen upon it, cannot escape liability by showing how other trolley wires are erected and maintained by prudent and well-managed electric-railway companies. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Electrical uses; liability for injuries by electric wires in highways:—(I.) General rules; (II.) danger of current; (III.) degree of care; (IV.) liability for broken, fallen, or sagging wires: (a) liability of owner; (b) presumption of negligence as to broken or fallen wires; (c) liability of party breaking them; (d) negligent delay in removing or repairing them; (e) municipal liability; (V.) failure to guard wires from falling wires of other owners; (VI.) concurrent liability; (VII.) wires charged by lighting; (VIII.) contributory negligence. 568

Police regulation of electric companies:—(I.) In general; (II.) as to the occupation of highways or waters; (III.) as to guard wires; (IV.) as to the operation of electric lines; (V.) limitation of the police power: (a) limitations in state Constitutions: (1) impairment of obligation of contracts; (2) deprivation of property without due process of law; (3) class legislation; (b) limitations in Federal Constitution: (1) statutes requiring electric wires to be put underground; (2) statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies for not transmitting and delivering message properly; (3) statutes regulating telephone prices and requiring service on equal terms to all; (4) statutes imposing license fees on telegraph companies. 798

ELECTRIC LIGHTS. See ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES, 1; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7-11.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS. See CARRIERS, 11.

ELEVATED RAILWAYS. See INJUNCTION, 2.

EMBEZZLEMENT. See BANKS, 8.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

1. The connection of mines and ore houses with a market is a public use in Montana, which will authorize a railroad company to acquire a right of way for that purpose by right of eminent domain. Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana U. R. Co. (Mont.) 298

2. The magnitude of the interests involved may properly become a determining factor in sustaining the right of a railroad in Montana to construct branches to mines and mining works as public uses, by virtue of the law of eminent domain. Id.

3. The exercise of the right of eminent domain to acquire land for a railroad is not precluded by the facts that the road is owned by a private corporation and is built for the benefit of private mines and ore houses, where the state laws make all railroads public highways, open to use by all who wish to do so. Id.

4. The use for which property already held for public use may be condemned need not be a different one, under a statute permitting such condemnation for a more necessary public use. Id.

5. Land belonging to a railroad company by way of easement, and not actually in use by it or not actually necessary for the enjoyment of its franchise, is, with respect to the power of eminent domain, upon the same footing as the land of an individual citizen, if there is a necessity that it should be taken for another use. Id.

6. Absolute necessity is not necessary to enable one railroad to condemn a portion of another's right of way for its tracks, under a statute forbidding such appropriation unless the use to which it is to be applied is a "more necessary public use." Id.

7. A case of necessity is presented, within Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 601, permitting one railroad company to condemn a portion of the right of way of another, when the latter, traversing a mountain side in a mining section, has within its right of way tracks unused and in all reasonable probability not necessary for future use, and another road seeking the same objective point is obliged to take a part of such right of way to avoid circuitry, a different grade, much greater cost, and serious damage to mining properties, and would be obliged in any event to parallel the adversary road a part of the way. Id.

8. A railroad to be constructed along the side of a mountain may be permitted to condemn for its right of way a portion of the right of way of a former road, where such portion is occupied by unexcavated rock and dirt, and there is no immediate prospect of the other road needing it, and its tracks are to be placed far enough away from the other's so as not to interfere with its operations; while that location is by far the most practicable that can be found, any other route would impinge as much upon the other road as this does, would affect many mining operations, would be enormously expensive, less convenient, and the one chosen manifestly best serves the interests of the public. Id.

9. A street may be opened across depot grounds of a railroad company, under general authority conferred on cities and towns for opening streets and condemning lands for such purposes without any express provision as to crossing railroads, where the inconvenience to the company will be inconsiderable as compared with the benefit to the public. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Starkweather (Iowa) 188

10. The question of damages to be awarded upon the crossing of one railroad by another may be referred to commissioners, under a statute providing that courts may regulate and determine the place and manner of making crossings. Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana U. R. Co. (Mont.) 298

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; by railroad; taking land of other company. 302

EQUITY. See also COURTS, 2.

Equity cannot be successfully invoked to inflict injury or damage to the defendant, without securing any substantial right or benefit to the plaintiff. Mahler v. Brumder (Wis.) 695

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Equity; remedy in, barred by usury. 706

ESTOPPEL. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 4.

1. After an insurance organization has been allowed to proceed in its business, with full knowledge and acquiescence of the insurance authorities of the state, for a series of years, during which many of its members have by age and disability become unable to procure any other insurance, a rival organization which has all the time had knowledge of the facts and failed to take action is estopped from contesting the legality of such business. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Graham (Iowa) 133

2. Affidavits stating that at the time of marriage the affiant was the wife of another man do not estop her from subsequently denying that fact and explaining that the affidavits were made upon the strength of a rumor. Hunter v. Hunter (Cal.) 411

3. The people of the state cannot be estopped from asking for a determination of the validity of an apportionment law, by failing to bring the matter to a decision until after a legislature has been chosen in pursuance of the act. Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 726

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Estoppel; by decree of divorce. 412

EVIDENCE.

Judicial notice.

1. Courts will not take judicial knowledge of the laws of another state under which a corporation is claimed to have been created, but proof of such laws must be made. Duke v. Taylor (Fla.) 484

2. Judicial notice will be taken of a census or other enumeration made under the authority of the state or of the United States, and also of the location, boundaries, and juxtaposition of the several counties of the state. Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 726

3. The court can take notice of its own records in another case, either on suggestion of counsel or upon its own motion. Id.

4. It is matter of common knowledge that property lying in the vicinity of a street improvement often derives important benefits therefrom, although not fronting upon or directly contiguous thereto. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 213

5. It is a matter of common knowledge that electricity is used for the purpose of transmitting sound by telephone and messages by telegraph, and also for generating light and producing power. State, Laclede Gaslight Co. v. Murphy (Mo.) 798

6. Jurors cannot act upon their personal knowledge of the mental condition of one accused of perjury, in arriving at a verdict. State v. Gaymon (S. C.) 489

Presumptions and burden of proof.

7. A statute prescribing the circumstances that shall constitute prima facie evidence of a fact in issue on trial in the courts of the state is within the authority of the legislature, and may be made applicable to a cause of action which arose outside of the state. Pennsylvania Co. v. McCann (Ohio) 651

8. Injury to a passenger on a train is prima facie evidence of the carrier's negligence. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Swann (Md.) 313

9. The rule that defects in railroad apparatus shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the corporation in an action for injuries received by an employee, which is prescribed by the Ohio act of April 2, 31 L. R. A.

1890, regulating railroads in the state, applies to all railroad companies any part of whose line of railway extends into the state, whether the injury complained of was received within or without the state. Pennsylvania Co. v. McCann (Ohio) 651

10. The burden of showing that plaintiff's fence was defective when entered by defendant's cattle cannot be cast upon the defendant in an action of trespass. Clarendon Land, I. & A. Co. v. McClelland (Tex.) 669

11. An injury from contact with a broken telephone wire hanging over and in contact with the feed wire of an electric railway affords a prima facie presumption of negligence on the part of the owners of the wires. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, Nelson (Md.) 572

12. That an electric wire had become disconnected or detached from its fastening, and hung down in a public alley so as to endanger public travel, is of itself prima facie evidence of negligence upon the part of the company maintaining it. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 566

13. The presumption in favor of the legality of a marriage regularly solemnized will prevail over the presumption of the continuance of the life of a former husband who has been absent and unheard of for less than seven years. Hunter v. Hunter (Cal.) 411

14. That a note is executed by persons as president and secretary of a company which is the purported maker does not create a presumption that it is a corporation rather than a partnership. Duke v. Taylor (Fla.) 484

Best; documentary.

15. The commission of the governor of Florida is the best evidence in mandamus proceedings, of the person entitled to the office, until it is annulled by a judicial determination in proceedings in the nature of quo warranto. State, Lamar, v. Johnson (Fla.) 357

16. Upon the trial of one charged as being accessory to a crime, the record of the conviction of the alleged principal is admissible as prima facie evidence that the latter committed the crime as charged. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

17. A copy of proofs of loss mailed to an insurance company, and a postal card acknowledging their receipt, are admissible in evidence to show that the proofs were seasonably furnished, although the proofs will not be competent evidence of the facts therein contained. Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (Wis.) 112

Relevancy and weight.

18. Testimony of a funeral director that he never received a body after post mortem examination that was in condition for the family to see, without being prepared, is admissible in an action for unlawfully cutting and mutilating a body by post mortem examination. Young v. College of Physicians & S. (Md.) 540

19. Evidence that defendant, charged with murder, had filed a motion for continuance for the absence of an alleged material witness, and that his attorneys, when notified that they might take the testimony of such witness to be used on an application for bail, took no steps to procure it,—is inadmissible. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 265

20. Testimony that a person controlled and directed the voting of stock standing in the name of another is admissible in support of a claim by the former that it was given to him. Leyson v. Davis (Mont.) 429

21. Evidence that notice was given to an electric company prior to an accident from a fallen wire, that the wire was down, is admissible upon the issue of negligence in omitting to exercise due care in building the line and in failing to maintain it in good repair. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 566

22. Direct proof that defendants, charged with negligence in respect to electric wires, were the parties who maintained them, is not necessary when the defendants, although pleading the general issue, impliedly admit that fact by the conduct of the trial, including cross-examination of witnesses, and fail to suggest that the wires were maintained by any other parties. McKay v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (Ala.) 589

23. That a broken telephone wire from which a person received a deadly charge of electricity obtained the electric charge from its contact with the feed wire of an electric railway may be inferred by the jury without violence, on evidence that it had been hanging over the feed wire for two weeks and rubbing against it when swayed by the wind, although the insulation of the feed wire is not proved to be imperfect, where there is nothing to show any other source of the electric charge. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, Nelson (Md.) 572

24. Evidence that electricity was communicated from a trolley wire to a telephone wire may be sufficient without any positive testimony as to their contact, when it is shown that the telephone wire hung over the other and became broken so that one end rested on the ground, where there is no other reasonable theory to explain how the telephone wire became charged with electricity. City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery (Ark.) 570

25. To produce moral certainty the evidence must be such that the juror would venture to act upon the conviction produced by it, in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interests. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also WITNESSES.

Evidence; the right of jurors to act on their own knowledge of the facts in or relevant to the issue:—(I.) The general rule; (II.) modification thereof: (a) in general; (b) as to intoxicating liquors; (c) as to witnesses. 489

Of conviction of principal defendant on trial of accessory. 295

Burden of proof as to. 332

Burden of proof as to marriage. 412

EXECUTION. See JUDICIAL SALE, 2; LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

All wages due a clerk for services rendered before as well as during the last illness of a deceased. 31 L. R. A.

ceased employer fall within the second class of claims against his estate, and are included in the term "wages of servants," as used in § 80 of the "Kansas Act Respecting Executors and Administrators and the Settlement of the Estates of Deceased Persons." Cawood v. Wolfley (Kan.) 538

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executors and administrators; classification of claims for wages. 538

EXPLOSION. See also GAS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Of gas, liability for. 785

EXPRESS COMPANY. See CARRIERS, 10.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability for abuse of customer by agent. 390

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 1, 2.

FENCES. See ANIMALS, 3; EVIDENCE, 10; NUISANCES, 2.

FINE. See CRIMINAL LAW.

FIRE. See ACTION OR SUIT, 3; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 2.

FOLDING BED. See CASE.

FORFEITURE. See MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS; SUNDAY.

FORGERY.

Signing another's name as his agent, and adding one's own initials to show agency, in the presence of the person who pays over money on the faith of such signature, is not forgery, although the claim of authority is false and may constitute some other crime. People v. Bendit (Cal.) 831

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Forgery; by false assumption of authority in signing another's name as agent for him. 831

FRAUD.

1. It is not fraud for one creditor to try to keep another ignorant of a trade he is seeking to make with the debtor for no other purpose than his own protection. Rice v. Wood (Ark.) 609

2. Fraud cannot be imputed to an honest creditor because in taking his debtor's stock of goods to settle his claim he advised him to keep the money he had in bank and his accounts. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; liability for false representations. 220
As ground of injunction against judgment when it was a defense to the original action. 747

Participation by creditor in fraudulent intent of debtor which will make a transfer to pay or secure his debt invalid as to other creditors:—(I.) Necessity of participation; general doctrine; (II.) who are bona fide purchasers within the statute; (III.) what constitutes participation: (a) generally; (b) securing a preference; (c) knowledge of fraud, insolvency, etc.; (d) assumption of other debts as part of purchase price; (e) amount of property taken; (f) allowance of fair price; (g) security greater in value than debt; (h) security for overstated debt; (i) security for present and future advances; (j) inclusion of simulated debts; (k) reservation of benefits; (l) taking conveyance fraudulent on its face; (m) retention of possession; (n) failure to record; (o) other circumstances and conditions tending to show participation; (IV.) participation by agent; (V.) participation as between trustees and beneficiaries; (VI.) participation by one of several beneficiaries; (VII.) effect of other accompanying purposes besides that to defraud; (VIII.) effect of relationship or intimacy of the parties; (IX.) conveyances taken from a fraudulent grantee; (X.) presumption and burden of proof; (XI.) participation under bankruptcy and insolvency laws. 609

GAS. See also LIFE TENANTS; MINES.

A gas company is guilty of negligence rendering it liable for injuries from an explosion of gas which has escaped from its pipes under a sidewalk into a cellar, in the absence of contributory negligence, where the fact that the gas was escaping was called to the attention of two of its employees who, without making any investigation, assumed that it was due to a defective meter and merely furnished a new meter. Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker (Md.) 785

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MINES.

Gas; negligence in respect to. 785

GIFT. See also CHARITIES, 2, 3.

1. A gift causa mortis is not limited to the event of the donor's failure to return from a trip on which he is about to start, by his statement that he wants the donee to have it if he does not come back or if anything happens, where this remark is made after an actual delivery without qualification of the gift, and in response to encouraging words respecting his prospects of life. Leyson v. Davis (Mont.) 429

2. A gift of shares of stock in a national bank may be made causa mortis by actual delivery as a gift, without indorsement on the certificates or any assignment in writing or transfer on the books of the company,—at least where there is no assignment or power of attorney on the back of the certificates, and the by laws require no blank for such purpose, or nothing except a transfer on the books of the bank. Id.

3. Certificates of stock in a bank are sufficiently delivered to sustain a gift causa mortis when handed to the donee by the donor, with words indicating a gift in case of the donor's death, spoken on the eve of the latter's departure. 81 L. R. A.

ure on a trip which was but a desperate fight for life, or to prolong the life which he felt that he must soon lose. Id.

4. A gift of shares of stock causa mortis is not defeated by the subsequent use, without the donor's knowledge or consent, of a proxy executed by him before the gift was made, when it is filled out by the donee and the voting upon it is done under his directions. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gift; causa mortis, of bank stock. 436

GOVERNOR.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction against. 474

GUARANTY.

A guaranty of the payment of interest on a note runs only until the maturity of the note. Reclor v. McCarthy (Ark.) 121

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Guaranty; of interest, construction of. 131

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

No notice to an infant under fourteen years of age is necessary in a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of the person of such child. Board of Children's Guardians v. Shutter (Ind.) 740

HABEAS CORPUS.

1. Release from imprisonment for contempt of court cannot be obtained by habeas corpus, unless the proceedings in which the person was adjudged guilty of contempt are null and void, in whole or in part. Ex parte Keeler (S. C.) 678

2. A prisoner committed by a justice of the peace for trial by the county court on the charge of a misdemeanor which is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the justice is entitled to release by habeas corpus. Ex parte Lacy (Va.) 822

HEALTH. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 20 22; CORPSE.

HIGHWAYS. See also DEDICATION; EMINENT DOMAIN, 9; NUISANCES, 2.

1. The right to lay electric-light wires in the streets of a city by virtue of a franchise to lay pipes, fixtures, or other things for the purpose of lighting the city, is subject to the municipal control of the streets and the general police power to regulate and restrict the manner in which such wires, tubes, and cables may be secured or supported and insulated,—especially when the franchise was given before the use of electricity for such purposes was known. State, Laclede Gaslight Co. v. Murphy (Mo.) 798

2. Road commissioners, who under the Massachusetts statute have in respect to roads the powers formerly possessed by selectmen and surveyors of highways, are, while acting within the scope of their powers and duties, public officers, and not servants of the town.

for whose acts the town is liable. McManus v. Weston (Mass.) 174

3. Acts in the nature of repairs to or improvements of an existing way are within the terms "making and repairing," in a statute conferring power on road commissioners, so that in performing them they will act as public officers, although the work is ordered by the county commissioners, is unusual and extensive in character, and provided for by a special appropriation by the town, and a statute requires towns to complete roads according to the lay-out or order of the county commissioners. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As to injuries from electric wires in, see ELECTRICAL USERS.

See also RAILROADS.

Highways; liability for acts of commissioners. 174

Private action for obstruction of. 695

Police regulation as to use of, by electric wires. 798

HOGS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 17, 24, 25.

HOMESTEAD.

The owner of a part of an undivided block in a city where other blocks are subdivided into lots is entitled to hold as a homestead only a tract equal in area to the average size of platted lots in that part of the city. Heidel v. Benedict (Minn.) 422

HOMICIDE.

One who fires a shot necessarily fatal, in self-defense, is not guilty of homicide in firing another shot which also would be fatal, after the other party has abandoned the conflict, where the last shot did not contribute to or hasten death. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 465

HORSE RACE. See COMMERCE, 2; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 4.

HOSPITAL. See CHARITIES, 1.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. See WATERS, 3.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also CONTRACTS, 5, 6; ESTOPPEL, 2; EVIDENCE, 13; JUDGMENT, 4.

1. The power of the legislature over the subject of marriage as a civil status is unlimited and supreme, except as restricted by the Constitution. State v. Duket (Wis.) 515

2. A statute providing that a sentence to imprisonment for life shall operate as an absolute dissolution of the marriage of the party does not violate the provision of Wis. Const. art. 4, § 24, that the legislature shall never grant any divorce. Id.

3. The reversal of a sentence to imprisonment for life on account of error, but not for want of jurisdiction, does not operate to restore the marriage relation of the convict, which 31 L. R. A.

had been dissolved by the sentence under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2355. Id.

4. A divorce from a wife for "utter desertion continued for three consecutive years" may be granted under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 60, § 2, where she deserts her husband and remains away from him for the full period continuously, and unreasonably refuses to return, although once during that time he visits her and for two or three nights occupies the same bed with her. Danforth v. Danforth (Me.) 608

5. A nonresident defendant in a divorce suit brought by a resident of the state may be granted a divorce on a cross-bill, although the marriage and cause of divorce took place out of the state and the general provisions in How. (Mich.) Ann. Stat. § 6231, say that in such case a divorce shall not be granted unless the party exhibiting the petition or bill therefor has resided in the state one year. Clutton v. Clutton (Mich.) 160

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; jurisdiction for divorce where one party is a nonresident. 160

Validity of marriage; effect of divorce as an estoppel. 413

Divorce for desertion. 608

The effect of a conviction and sentence of either husband or wife upon the marriage relation:—(I.) In general; (II.) necessity of a conviction; (III.) effect of an appeal from a conviction; (IV.) effect of commutation of the sentence or of a pardon; (V.) conviction in another state; (VI.) retroactive effect of statute; (VII.) allegation of infamous crime; (VIII.) where crime is prior to marriage; (IX.) conviction as desertion; (X.) classed with cruelty; (XI.) conviction as a bar to divorce by the party convicted. 515.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS. See INSURANCE, 2.

INDICTMENT.

The statutory abolition of the distinction between accessories before the fact and principals will not render a subsequent indictment charging a person as being an accessory in common-law form insufficient. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indictment; against accessory. 294

INFANTS. See also GUARDIAN AND WARD; NEGLIGENCE, 1; RAILROADS, 4.

The guardianship, custody, and control of minors being within the jurisdiction of the circuit court in Indiana, its judgment committing an infant to the custody of a board of children's guardians is not void on collateral attack, although it assumes to act under an unconstitutional statute. Board of Children's Guardians v. Shutter (Ind.) 740

INFORMATION. See ATTORNEY GENERAL.

INJUNCTION. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 18; CLERK; TRIAL, 1.

1. An injunction against a wrongful or fraudulent imitation of a distinctive label used by a manufacturer or trader can be granted, although the label is not a trademark and contains no word, sign, or symbol which can be protected as such. Scott v. Standard Oil Co. (Ala.) 374

2. An injunction will not be granted in favor of an abutting owner against the maintenance of an elevated railroad in a street in front of his property, interfering with easements in the street appurtenant to his property without making compensation therefor, where he is unable to show any actual damage to his property, or loss suffered by reason of the presence and operation of the railroad, because on account of it the value of his property has increased greatly and in proportion to the general increase of values of property in the vicinity. O'Reilly v. New York Elev. R. Co. (N. Y.) 407

3. The connection of a sewer underdraining a cemetery with a spring brook, water from which is used for domestic purposes, watering animals, and making ice for domestic use, may be enjoined at the instance of riparian owners who will be injured by it. Barrett v. Mt. Greenwood Cemetery Assn. (Ill.) 109

4. An injunction to prevent the connection of a sewer with a spring brook the water of which is used for domestic purposes will not be refused because the water is already polluted to some extent from other sources. Id.

To protect personal rights; privacy.

5. The jurisdiction of equity to grant injunctions is founded on rights of property, and does not extend to a matter affecting an exclusively personal right. Cortiss v. E. W. Walker Co. (C. C. D. Mass.) 283

6. There is no such real mental distress or injury as will justify equity in enjoining a violation of the right of privacy by making a statue of one of plaintiff's relatives, if the facts fail to furnish any clear or sure foundation for a reasonable man to claim that any injury to his feelings has been or would be caused by the action taken or to be taken by defendant. Schuyler v. Curtis (N. Y.) 286

7. The use of plates made from a picture or photograph, for insertion in a publication, will be enjoined where the pictures were obtained on conditions which have not been complied with, as the publication would be a violation of confidence, or breach of contract. Cortiss v. E. W. Walker Co. (C. C. D. Mass.) 283

8. Erroneous claims respecting the services of a deceased person in whose honor persons are seeking to erect a memorial, which cause adverse newspaper comment, furnish no ground for injunction against the memorial in favor of her relatives, who have made no attempt to rectify the error. Schuyler v. Curtis (N. Y.) 286

9. Relatives of a deceased person cannot enjoin the erection of a memorial to her because the work is undertaken without their consent by strangers, if there is an honest purpose to do honor to her, which is carried out in an appropriate and orderly manner by reputable individuals. Id.

10. That the erection of a statue in his honor would have been disagreeable to a person's ancestor in his lifetime is not a sufficient cause for real mental injury or distress to such person because of the erection of such statue after such ancestor's death, to entitle such person to enjoin such erection. Id.

11. The making of a bust of a deceased person will not be enjoined on the ground of fraud upon the public because no likeness of her is accessible for a model, if the idea of actual likeness has been abandoned and the bust is to be made an ideal one,—at least where no fraudulent intent is shown. Id.

12. No ground for enjoining the making by a woman's society of a bust of a deceased woman, in favor of her descendants, is shown by the fact that the same society contemplates the exhibition of the bust in the same room of a public fair building in which they are to exhibit one of another woman with whose objects and work the ancestor had no sympathy, if the two busts are designed to represent totally distinct classes of persons. Id.

Against officers.

13. The state suing in its corporate capacity for the protection of its property rights stands in no different or better position than an individual in respect to an injunction against public officers. State, Taylor, v. Lord (Or.) 473

14. A private individual cannot have public officers enjoined from using public funds, unless some civil or property rights are being invaded, or, in other words, he is going to get hurt by the transaction. Id.

15. A commission named by the legislature, of which the governor is a constituent part, and which is empowered to perform service which it would otherwise be the duty of the governor to perform, and which is governmental in its nature, pertaining to publici juris, and affecting the welfare of the people at large,—is not subject to an injunction from the courts. Id.

16. The location of a site for a public institution, the purchase of a tract of land therefor at that place, the employment of an architect to draw plans, etc., for the building, and the letting of contracts therefor by a commission of which the governor is a member,—are matters governmental and executive in their nature, with which the courts cannot interfere by injunction. Id.

17. An injunction against the enforcement of a tax levy because of an irregularity, even if it renders the levy void, will not be granted unless the tax is excessive or unequal and unjust. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 213

Against judgments.

18. Although a judgment of a justice of the peace is void because he has no jurisdiction of defendant, yet its execution will not be enjoined if defendant has a right to a writ of certiorari to set the judgment aside. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Wright (Tex.) 200

19. A judgment at law will not be enjoined on the ground of fraud where it does not appear that such judgment is inequitable, or it is disclosed that plaintiff had failed to exercise due diligence in asserting his rights. Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bollman (Neb.) 747

20. A judgment regularly rendered, even though by default and on a note given for a gambling consideration, is binding as against the parties and their privies, and its enforcement will not be restrained by a court of equity. Owens v. Van Winkle Gin & M. Co (Ga.) 767

21. No injunction against a default judgment is justified by the facts that defendant submitted the facts constituting his defense to an attorney, with the request to prepare an answer, and then went to his home in another county relying on the attorney's promise to do so, but that for some reason unknown to defendant the answer was not filed. Payton v. McQuown (Ky.) 33

22. A suit to enjoin a judgment against a surety will not lie on the ground that the principal's liability has been subsequently discharged, where a statute permits the surety under such circumstances to file a bill to review the judgment against him for newly discovered matter, without affecting that in favor of his principal. Michener v. Springfield Engine & T. Co. (Ind.) 59

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; negligence as a cause and as a bar to injunction against judgments:—(I.) As a cause for injunction against judgments; (II.) as a bar to injunctions against judgments: (a) in attending court; (b) in employing an attorney; (c) of attorney; (d) in ascertaining a defense; (e) in regard to evidence; (f) in asserting a defense; (g) delay in seeking. 33

Enjoining judgments against or in favor of sureties:—(I.) Against sureties: (a) remedy at law as a bar to injunction; (b) valid defense must be shown; (c) in matters of negligence or for failure to make a legal defense; (d) in summary proceedings; (e) for newly discovered evidence; (f) where defense was prevented; (g) for equitable defenses; (h) on account of statutes; (i) pleading and parties; (j) injunction bonds; (II.) in favor of sureties. 59

Against judgments for want of jurisdiction, or which are void:—(I.) In general; (II.) as to party; (III.) as to time; (IV.) as to venue; (V.) as to amount; (VI.) matter of process and service: (a) form; (b) time and manner; (c) fraud as to service; (d) acceptance of service; (e) party served; (f) service on corporation; (g) service on partners; (h) service at residence; (i) where there was no service as required by law; (j) where there was no notice; (VIII.) on account of appearance; (IX.) pleading and practice; (X.) where there was no judgment or it was set aside. 200

Against judgments for defenses existing prior to their rendition:—(I.) Failure of consideration: (a) generally; (b) in judgments for purchase money: (1) insolvency; (2) nonresidence; (3) rescission; (4) mistake; (5) title bonds; (6) defective title generally; (7) deficiency in amount of land; (8) fraud; (9) res judicata; (10) no cause of action for injunction; (11) sales by executors and administrators; (12) summary judgments; (13) court sales; (c) judgments in 31 L. R. A.

favor of purchasers; (II.) fraud: (a) where the defense is forgery or non est factum; (b) in obtaining a contract; (c) generally; (III.) public policy: (a) generally; (b) debt for Confederate money; (c) gambling debts; (d) usury; (IV.) set-off: (a) failure to assert at law; (b) parties; (c) unliquidated damages; (d) trial at law; (e) no set-off; (f) insolvency and nonresidence; (g) accounting; (h) equitable set-off; (i) in matters of an estate; (j) mutual agreements; (V.) payment: (a) failure to defend; (b) defense made: (c) equitable defenses; (d) summary proceedings; (e) pleading bill of discovery; (VI.) conditions; (VII.) partition and dower; (VIII.) as to party; (IX.) title to property; (X.) nonliability in general. 747

Against elevated railroad; to prevent multiplicity of actions. 407

To restrain executive action. 474

INSANITY. See INSURANCE, 2.

INSOLVENCY.

A bill of sale in satisfaction of debts cannot be turned into an assignment by the fact that the creditor agrees to pay other claims against the debtor, if the inability is absolute and not dependent on the disposition made of the property. Rice v. Wood (Ark.) 609

INSURANCE. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 3; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2; ESTOPPEL, 1.

1. Issuing an insurance policy when the insurance agent has full knowledge of the existence of encumbrances is a waiver of conditions in the policy against such encumbrances. Douling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (Wis.) 112

2. The right of recovery of an insane beneficiary under a policy of life insurance is not forfeited by his killing the insured under such circumstances as would cause the killing to be murder if he were sane. Holdom v. Ancient Order United Workmen (Ill.) 67

3. A provision that death "from accidents that shall bear no external and visible marks" is not insured against by a life insurance policy means that there must be external and visible evidence that death was accidental, and does not exclude liability for death caused by accidentally and involuntarily breathing illuminating gas while asleep. Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. (N. Y.) 686

4. A provision that death "from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled" is not insured against, applies only where something has been voluntarily and intentionally although mistakenly taken, administered, or inhaled. Id.

5. The words "inhaling gas," in a provision describing causes of death against which a policy does not insure, apply only to cases where gas is inhaled intentionally, voluntarily, and consciously. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Insurance; forfeiture by act of insane beneficiary. 68

Subrogation of insurer to action against party causing loss. 604

Accident; inhaling gas. 686

INTEREST.

Unearned interest must be subtracted from the amount of recovery, in entering judgment before maturity by the voluntary act of the payee of notes on which interest has been paid in advance. Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell (Ill.) 265

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The distribution of intoxicating liquors to members of a social club upon the written order of a member at a price fixed by the officers of the club, designed to cover the purchase price and disbursements in serving, where the club was incorporated for a legitimate purpose to which the furnishing of liquors to its members is merely incidental, does not constitute a sale within the meaning of N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 401, prohibiting sales of such liquors without a license, but making no provision whereby such a club can obtain a license. People v. Adelphi Club (N. Y.) 510

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Intoxicating liquors; rights of jurors to act on their own knowledge of. 489

Validity of sale by club. 510

ISLANDS. See WATERS, 1.

ITINERANT MERCHANTS. See COMMERCE, 4; LICENSE, 2, 3.

JUDGE. See WITNESSES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

JUDGMENT. See also INFANTS; INJUNCTION, 18-22; INTEREST.

1. A judgment in an action brought by an individual is not conclusive in a subsequent action to which he is not a party or even a relator, although both cases turn on the constitutionality of a statute. Denny v. State, Basler (Ind.) 726

2. A judgment is not necessarily void because the court bases it on a void statute, if the court has jurisdiction of the subject derived from other sources. Board of Children's Guardians v. Shutter (Ind.) 740

3. The determination of a motion is not res judicata so as to prevent the parties from drawing the same matters in question again in the action. Heidel v. Benedict (Minn.) 422

4. A decree of divorce in favor of a wife, rendered without service on the husband and when his whereabouts were unknown, does not estop her from alleging subsequently that he was dead before the divorce was granted. Hunter v. Hunter (Cal.) 411

5. A surety against whom a default judgment is taken, after which the principal's liability is discharged for failure of consideration, may file a bill under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 627, to review the judgment against him for newly discovered matter, without disturbing that in 81 L. R. A.

favor of his principal. Michener v. Springfield Engine & T. Co. (Ind.) 59

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; injunction against, see INJUNCTION.

Of divorce; effect as estoppel. 412

JUDICIAL SALE.

1. A purchaser at chancery sale of the unexpired term of a leasehold is not chargeable with the contract rental of the original lease for the balance of the term. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. (Tenn.) 593

2. A sheriff's sale for $250, of property worth from $40,000 to $50,000, under a description so misleading that the sheriff did not know what property he was selling, on account of which he failed to give notice according to his custom to mortgagees, who had paid off or compromised other liens on the property and supposed that all were thus satisfied,—may be set aside on the application of such mortgagees although the owner of the fee of the property, who is insolvent, does not complain. Rogers & B. Hardware Co. v. Cleveland Bldg. Co. (Mo.) 335

JURORS. See EVIDENCE, 6, NOTES AND BRIEFS; TRIAL, 1, 2.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also WITNESSES.

Power of, to order post mortem examination. 543

LABEL. See INJUNCTION, 1.

LACHES. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See also ACCESSION; JUDICIAL SALE, 1; MINES; RECEIVERS, 2.

1. The unauthorized storage of cotton by a tenant in a building hired for the storage of vehicles makes him liable for injury resulting to the building by fire which is due to the more dangerous nature of the cotton. Anderson v. Miller (Tenn.) 604

2. A tenant has a right to manure produced on the leased premises by stock in excess of that maintainable by the products of the premises, from fodder produced elsewhere. Pickering v. Moore (N. H.) 698

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MINES.

Landlord and tenant; rights of landlord and tenant in respect to manure on leased premises; English cases; American authorities; exceptions to the rule. 606

LEVY AND SEIZURE. See also ATTACHMENT, 3.

1. Depot grounds are subject to execution sale under a constitutional provision that "real and personal property" of a railroad corporation, or "any part thereof, shall be liable to execution and sale in the same manner as the property of individuals." Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Wright (Tex.) 200

2. A constable is not precluded from levying on the real estate of a railroad corporation by the fact that a car is pointed out as subject to levy, if the car is not delivered into his possession as required by Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 2287. Id.

LIBEL. See also BANKS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

By defamatory picture or statue. 288

LICENSE. See also COMMERCE, 3, 4; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8.

1. An ordinance providing that persons who "temporarily reside in" a municipality must obtain a license before they can sell goods in a certain manner is invalid by reason of its discrimination against nonresidents. Carrollton v. Bazzette (Ill.) 522

2. An ordinance requiring itinerant merchants to pay a license fee is not limited to peddlers, but applies to a merchant who takes his stock of goods from city to city doing business for a few weeks only in each place. Id.

3. A license fee of $10 for each day's business carried on by an itinerant merchant, without any discrimination on account of the extent of business or the length of time it may be carried on, is invalid because unnecessarily burdensome and in general restraint of trade and prohibitory of the business. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

License; discrimination as to nonresidents. 379

Amount of fee; when excessive. 523

LIFE TENANTS. See also ADVERSE POSSESSION; MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A reservation of a life use of land conveyed includes the right to a royalty on an oil and gas lease as an incident of the life estate, notwithstanding an express exception that the grantee takes subject to any lease for oil or gas or any sale of royalty for oil or gas made by the grantor, while he had previously sold a portion of his royalty. Koen v. Bartlett (W. Va.) 128

2. A life tenant is entitled to the profits of mines of oil or gas which are open when his life estate begins, or are lawfully opened and worked during the existence of his estate, unless he is restrained by covenant or agreement. Id.

LIGHTNING. See ELECTRICAL USES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See also ADVERSE POSSESSION; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 12, 13, 15.

1. The defense of laches does not generally apply where the situation of the parties has not been altered, and one has not been put in a 31 L. R. A.

worse condition by the delay of the other. Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.) 708

2. Litigation as to the right to offices in an association will not suspend the running of the statute against an action by one rival body against the other to establish the exclusive use to a name. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Graham (Iowa) 133

3. Delay in procuring a certificate of the right to a corporate name will not enlarge the time for bringing an action to establish an exclusive right to it, which accrued at the time of incorporation, when the certificate was not required. Id.

4. An amendment adding the words "of Baltimore city" to the name of the defendant, sued as the "Western Union Telegraph Company," and which was the party intended to be sued, although the person served was general manager in the state of a foreign corporation bearing that name as well as president and manager of the Baltimore company, does not add a new party or operate as the equivalent of bringing a new suit, with respect to a plea of the statute of limitations. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, Nelson (Md.) 572

LOTTERY.

1. An agreement by one person to take all the chances on a proposed scheme to raffle off property, thereby eliminating all the elements of chance and fixing a definite price for the property, is not unlawful. Thornhill v. O'Rear (Ala.) 792

2. A sale of lots to be drawn by the purchasers, and the advantages of location, character, size, or condition as between lots of the same class to be determined wholly by lot, while one prize lot is to be given to some one of the purchasers as the result of chance, is contrary to public policy and void. Lynch v. Rosenthal (Ind.) 835

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lottery; invalidity of lottery contract. 835

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus will lie to compel the delivery of the insignia of an office to one having a certificate of election thereto, and who has qualified thereunder, irrespective of his eligibility. Stevens v. Carter (Or.) 342

2. The courts in mandamus proceedings will compel delivery of the insignia and property of a public office for the time being, to one having a prima facie title to such office, without adjudicating the actual title. State, Lamar, v. Johnson (Fla.) 357

3. Mandamus to put into possession of the property and insignia of a public office one having the certificate of election and the commission to hold the office cannot be defeated by a claim that the election was illegal, and that the prior incumbent is entitled to hold as an officer de facto until proper election and qualification of his successor. Id.

4. To defeat a mandamus proceeding to compel the incumbent of an office whose term has expired to turn over the insignia of the office to an alleged successor, it must appear that he has a colorable title to the office and is in possession of it and discharging the duties thereof under a claim of right. Stevens v. Carter (Or.) 342

5. An alternative writ of mandamus to compel the surrender by a prior incumbent of a public office, of the office room and documents, need not allege the eligibility of the person elected. State, Lamar, v. Johnson (Fla.) 357

6. An alternative writ of mandamus to compel the surrender by a prior incumbent of a public office, of the office room and documents, need not allege in specific words that his term has expired or that a successor has been elected, but it is sufficient if such election and expiration follow as a necessary consequence from the words used. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mandamus; to compel surrender of office:—(I.) General doctrine governing; (II.) necessity of a demand and refusal; (III.) effect of such surrender; (IV.) sufficiency of title to support; (V.) special provisions relating to; (VI.) in the case of a private corporation; (VII.) when writ refused: (a) insufficiency of facts; (b) in case of a private party; (c) when there is another remedy; (d) in the absence of ouster; (e) prima facie title; (f) possession by an officer de facto; (g) when the title is in issue; (h) question of election; (i) other relief sought; (j) relator's own act; (VIII.) English cases. 342

MANURE. See ACCESSION; COTENANCY; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CARRIERS, 10; CHARITIES, 1.

1. An express order for an unlawful arrest by an agent of a railroad company is not necessary to render the company liable if the arrest was procured by the agent acting within the scope of his employment. Eichengreen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Tenn.) 702

2. False imprisonment of an innocent person on a charge of attempting to pass counterfeit money, which is procured by a railroad detective while acting within the scope of his authority, renders the railroad company liable, although in this particular matter he exceeded his authority and acted contrary to his instructions respecting the caution to be exercised. Id.

3. A civil engineer whose duties are to look after the building and maintenance of railroad bridges and trestles assumes the risk of injury from the failure of the company to provide a watchman at a bridge which gives way under the train upon which he is traveling in discharge of his duties, as he must be presumed to know that no watch is kept upon such bridge. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.) 821

4. A railroad official particularly charged with the care and maintenance of the bridges upon the line of the railroad is at fault for failure to maintain a sufficient watch upon a bridge, which will prevent recovery for his death from the fall of such bridge under the 81 L. R. A.

train upon which he is traveling in the discharge of his duties. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CARRIERS; CHARITIES; EXPRESS COMPANY.

Master and servant; liability for wrongful acts of servant. 702

MAXIMS.

1. A man must use his own so as not to injure another. Giffillan v. Schmidt (Minn.) 547

2. No one shall be both judge and witness in the same cause. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 465

3. Res ipsa loquitur. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, Nelson (Md.) 572

4. Stare decisis. Denny v. State, Busler (Ind.) 728

MAYOR. See PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

MEMORIAL. See INJUNCTION, 8, 9.

MINES. See also LIFE TENANTS.

1. An agreement to furnish pipes, fixtures, and plumbing for supplying the lessor's house, included in a lease for oil and gas purposes, and to leave the pipes and fixtures if the well ceases to be a paying one, must be construed to apply only if gas is obtained by the lessee. Evans v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. (Ind.) 673

2. A provision in an oil and gas lease, that it shall be null and void on failure of the lessee to perform his agreement, is no defense to him for breach of his agreement, but merely gives the lessor an option to declare it void for that reason. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mines; right of life tenant as to oil and gas. 128

Forfeiture of oil and gas lease; manner of enforcing forfeiture clause; waiver; estoppel; how forfeiture clause regarded; absence of obligation clause; effect of alternative provision for rent; who may set up forfeiture. 673

MORTGAGE. See also CONTRACTS, 18, 19, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; necessity of registry. 405

MOTION. See JUDGMENT, 3.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13; COSTS, 2; HIGHWAYS, 1; LICENSE; PARLIAMENTARY LAW; QUO WARRANTO; STATUTES, 4, 5; WATERS, 3.

1. The equitable claim of a city to jurisdiction over territory which a void statute has declared to be annexed to it will not be disturbed at the instance of the state, without any suggestion of anticipated benefits by so doing, where for more than four years the city has exercised authority over such territory to the exclusion of prior incorporations which the void statute purported to abolish. State, West, v. Des Moines (Iowa) 186

2. A city may contract for the disposal of sewage from the outfall of sewers, although this is outside the corporate limits. McBean v. Fresno (Cal.) 794

3. A contract by a municipal board, extending for more than one year or beyond the term of office of the board which makes it, if it is fair, just, and reasonable, prompted by the necessities of the situation, or in its nature advantageous to the municipality, is not invalid as a surrender or suspension of the legislative power of the municipal authorities. Id.

4. Subsequent appropriations for installments coming due on a contract made by city authorities in violation of statute prohibiting contracts for which appropriations had not already been made cannot operate as a ratification of the contract so as to make it binding. Indianapolis v. Wann (Ind.) 743

5. The liability incurred by a city contract to pay an annual sum during a period of years for the disposal of sewage is, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that any liability "exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year" shall be void, to be deemed the amount annually payable, and not the aggregate for the whole time of the contract. McBean v. Fresno (Cal.) 794

6. A contract for street lights for five years at a certain price per light per year, payable monthly, made by the executive department of public works, when no appropriation for the purpose had been made except for a month or two in advance, is void, where the statute provides that no executive department shall bind the city by a contract, agreement, or in any way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose, and that all contracts and agreements, expressed or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations, are absolutely void. Indianapolis v. Wenn (Ind.) 743

7. No vote is required to render a town subject to the obligations of the Massachusetts act of 1891, chap. 370, as to the purchase of property for the establishment of a light plant, in addition to the two votes provided by § 3 of the act, that it is expedient for the town to exercise the authority conferred by the act. Citizens' Gaslight Co. v. Wakefield (Mass.) 457

8. A petition to compel a town which has elected to establish a light plant to purchase a plant already in operation, as required by Mass. act 1891, chap. 370, is not wholly defeated by the fact that the poles carrying the light wires in the highways were not legally located. Id.

9. The schedule of property which the owner of a light plant wishes to sell to a town which has elected to establish one under the Massachusetts act of 1891, chap. 370, need not be sufficiently particular to sustain a decree for specific performance, or such as would be required in a formal conveyance of property. It is sufficient if it would enable the commissioners to identify the property and intelligently make an adjudication as to what shall be sold and purchased. Id.

10. Ratification by a gas and electric-light corporation of the action of its board of directors in electing in due time to sell its property to a town which has decided to establish a light plant, under the Massachusetts act of 1891, chap. 370, before the town has changed its position, will make the act binding, although it was not within the thirty days given the corporation in which to act. Id.

11. A town which elects to avail itself of the provisions of a statute enabling it to establish a light plant cannot attack the act as unconstitutional because it gives the owner of an existing plant the option to compel it to purchase that, and makes no provision for a jury trial as to value. Id.

12. A specification of the items in detail which make up a general fund for which a city tax levy is made is not necessary under a charter which requires the statement to specify only the amount required, and directs the levy of such sums as may be sufficient for lawful purposes. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 213

13. Estimates by the board of public works and the comptroller, required by the charter of the city of Superior under Wis. Laws 1891, chap. 124, do not limit the power of the common council in fixing the amount for which a tax levy may be ordered, as they are required to "levy such sums of money as may be sufficient." Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Municipal corporations; liability for negligence as to electric wires.	581
Validity of annexation; contest of annexation.	187
Compelling purchase of light plant by.	458
Ultra vires contract of.	743
Validity of contract of; amount of indebtedness.	795

NAME. See CORPORATIONS, 5-7; PARTNERSHIP, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NATURALIZATION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Effect of, on inheritance.	181
----------------------------	-----

NEGLIGENCE. See also CASE; RAILROADS, 4; TRIAL, 4, 5, 14-16.

1. Negligence of a parent cannot be imputed to a child in an action brought for the benefit of the child, injured by the negligence of another. Roth v. Union Depot Co. (Wash.) 855

2. The doctrine of comparative negligence is no longer the law in Illinois. Cicero & P. R. Co. v. Meirner (Ill.) 331

3. The concurring negligence of two parties makes both liable to a third party injured thereby, if the injury would not have occurred from the negligence of one of them only. City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery (Ark.) 570

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also ELECTRICAL USES; GAS.

Negligence; in sale of dangerous article. 220

NEW TRIAL.

1. A new trial will not be granted where it is apparent that the result of another would probably be the same. Leyson v. Davis (Mont.) 429

2. A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is not warranted in an action for injuries caused by a defective electric wire, by the fact that the record at police headquarters does not show that notice of the defect was sent in as stated by a patrolman who testified that he reported the defect before the accident happened. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 566

NOTICE. See GUARDIAN AND WARD.

NUISANCES.

1. Special or peculiar damages differing, not merely in degree, but in kind, from those which are deemed common to all, must be suffered in order to give a private party a right of action to abate a public nuisance. Mahler v. Brumder (Wis.) 695

2. A private party cannot maintain an action to enjoin the obstruction of a public road or street which is a cul de sac, by a fence between his property and the end of the road, merely because he purchased his premises with reference to a plat which indicated the existence of such road. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nuisance; prevention of. 109

OFFICERS. See also BONDS, 2, 3; CIVIL SERVICE; MANDAMUS.

1. The incumbent of an office cannot, because of the ineligibility of his successor, hold over after his official term has expired and his successor has been elected and qualified, unless such ineligibility has been established in the manner prescribed by law. Stevens v. Carter (Or.) 342

2. The official acts of public officers in an office created by an unconstitutional statute, performed before it has been declared unconstitutional by an authoritative decision by the courts of the state, cannot be collaterally attacked. State v. Gardner (Ohio) 660

3. The liability of a county trustee who gives a bond faithfully to perform the duties of his office and collect and pay over school taxes is fixed, not merely by the terms of his bond, but by the laws relating to his office. State, Overton County, v. Copeland (Tenn.) 844

4. An officer is not to be considered as a debtor for public funds in his hands which he has no right to use in any way except for the purposes of his trust: and he holds them, not strictly as a special bailee, but as a trustee clothed with legal duties and liabilities. Id.

5. A deposit of public funds in a bank of undoubted standing and reputation is not negligence or want of proper business prudence and caution on the part of an officer. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BONDS; MANDAMUS.

31 L. R. A.

Officers; de facto under unconstitutional statute. 660

OIL. See LIFE TENANTS; MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

OPTION. See CONTRACTS, 8.

PARENT AND CHILD. See also CONTRACTS, 4.

The duty of the children of poor persons to maintain them to the extent of their ability, under Dak. Comp. Laws, § 2612, although no mode of procedure for enforcing it is prescribed, makes such children liable to the county when it has furnished necessary support to an indigent and helpless parent. McCook County v. Kammos (S. D.) 461

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parent and child; oral contract for adoption. 810

PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

1. A mayor can vote only to break a tie, and not to make one, in the election of a city officer "by joint convention of the city council," under a charter which provides "that the mayor shall preside in the board of aldermen and joint meetings of the two boards, but shall have only a casting vote," although another provision declares that "the mayor, board of aldermen, and common council shall constitute the city council." Brown v. Foster (Me.) 116

PARTNERSHIP.

Insolvent members of an insolvent firm cannot use the partnership property to pay their individual debts, leaving the partnership debts unpaid. Jackson Bank v. Durfey (Miss.) 470

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partnership; criminal liability for receiving deposit in insolvent bank. 125

Right to use of name on dissolution. 657

PEDDLERS. See also COMMERCE, 3, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Invalidity of license tax on. 379

PHOTOGRAPHS. See also INJUNCTION, 7; PRIVACY, 2.

For a photographer to make additional copies from a negative of a picture from which a customer has procured a certain number of copies to be made is breach of contract as well as a violation of confidence. Cortiss v. E. W. Walker Co. (C. C. D. Mass.) 283

PICTURE. See INJUNCTION, 7; PRIVACY, 2, 3.

PLEADING. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 1; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 4.

1. Under the reformed procedure a court having both law and equity jurisdiction cannot dismiss a bill to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment merely because the facts stated do not entitle complainant to such relief, if it can be so amended as to entitle him to some relief. Michener v. Springfield Engine & T. Co. (Ind.) 59

2. A defendant who is brought into a suit by cross-bill may himself file a cross-bill where it is necessary to do complete justice and terminate the litigation, under a statute providing that any defendant may, after filing his answer, exhibit and file his cross-bill. Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) 269

POOL SELLING. See STATUTES, 6.

POOR AND POOR LAWS. See PARENT AND CHILD.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Compelling relatives to support or reimburse town for support. 462

POST MORTEM. See CORONER, NOTES AND BRIEFS; CORPSE; EVIDENCE, 18.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY. See also ATTACHMENT, 8; INJUNCTION, 22; JUDGMENT, 5.

A surety will be discharged, even after judgment against him, by the discharge of the principal because of matters inherent in the transaction. Michener v. Springfield Engine & T. Co. (Ind.) 59

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Principal and surety; enjoining judgment against or in favor of sureties. 59

PRIVACY. See also INJUNCTION, 6, 7.

1. The publication of the life of an inventor, whether he is regarded as a public or a private character, cannot be enjoined as an invasion of the right of privacy, since the freedom of the press is a constitutional right. Cortiss v. E. W. Walker Co. (C. C. D. Mass.) 283

2. The picture or photograph of a public person—such as a great inventor—may lawfully be published in a newspaper, magazine, or book, if a copy can be obtained without breach of contract or violation of confidence. Id.

3. A woman's right of privacy, in so far as it includes the right to prevent the public from making pictures, busts, or statues of her to commemorate her worth or services, does not survive her so that it can be enforced by her relatives. Schuyler v. Curtis (N. Y.) 286

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Privacy; law of. 283

Injunction to protect. 288

PRIVATE ACTION. See ACTION OR SUIT, 1; INJUNCTION, 14; NUISANCES.

PROCESS. See WRIT AND PROCESS.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. Negligence is the proximate cause of an accident only when under all the circumstances the accident might have been reasonably foreseen by a man of ordinary intelligence and 31 L. R. A.

prudence. It is not enough that the accident is the natural consequence of the negligence. Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. (Wis.) 588

2. The proximate cause of damages to a building by fire when cotton is stored therein without right is the storage of the cotton therein, if except for that the fire could have been extinguished with little or no damage. Anderson v. Miller (Tenn.) 604

PUBLICATION. See PRIVACY, 1.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14, 15.

1. An assessment upon abutting property for street improvements, levied according to benefits, is not a violation of Va. Const. art. 10, § 1, requiring taxation to be equal and uniform upon all property according to value. Violet v. Alexandria (Va.) 382

2. An ordinance for a local assessment by the front foot is not authorized by a statute providing for assessments according to benefits. Id.

3. An assessment for a street improvement, levied only upon property fronting thereon and made by the frontage rule, is invalid when the law requires it to be made according to benefits. Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.) 213

4. Assessments upon property according to the frontage of each lot, made without actual view of the property or considering the actual benefits accruing to each parcel, are invalid where the law requires the lots to be assessed "in proportion to the benefits secured thereto," even if the property abutting or fronting on the improvement is made an assessment district. Id.

5. The failure of an assessment made by the frontage rule to show upon its face that it was made according to the benefits accruing to each parcel, when the statute requires such benefits to be taken as the measure of the assessment renders it void. Id.

6. An appeal from an assessment, which permits a review only of the amount assessed, is not such a remedy as will preclude a suit to set aside the assessment when it is unequal and void. Id.

7. Payment by a property owner of his proportion of an assessment is not a condition precedent to relief against the assessment, when that is made in entire disregard of the statute so that it is presumed to be unequal. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; validity of assessments. 215

Validity of assessments for; uniformity; theory as to benefits. 382

PUBLIC MONEY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Action by taxpayer to prevent misuse of. 475

QUO WARRANTO.

Leave to a taxpayer to prosecute an action of quo warranto to contest annexation to a city, given under Iowa Code, § 3848, is conclusive against an attack made in the quo warranto proceedings on the ground that his interest was trivial. State, West, v. Des Moines (Iowa) 186

RAFFLE. See LOTTERY.

RAILROADS. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 1-3, 5-9; EVIDENCE, 9; LEVY AND SEIZURE.

1. A railroad seeking to cross another should be permitted to employ, and required to pay, the necessary watchman at such crossing. Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana U. R. Co. (Mont.) 298

2. The liability of a railroad company for failure to keep a sidewalk across its track in fit and safe condition, as required by law, is not affected by the fact that a right of action might possibly exist for the same defect against a municipality. Jeffrey v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (Mich.) 170

3. A man injured while driving a span of horses with a snow plow across a railroad track in cleaning a sidewalk is not precluded by his unusual use of the walk from maintaining an action against the railroad company for a defect in the walk caused by missing planks, if the accident was due to failure to keep the crossing in a reasonably safe and suitable condition for ordinary use. Id.

4. A child should not be held to the same degree of care in avoiding danger while walking on a railroad track as a person of mature years and accumulated experience. Roth v. Union Depot Co. (Wash.) 855

5. Kicking cars out of sight around a curve on a down grade, without any person on them, in a thickly settled community, where it is the custom to use the track as a footpath without objection from the railroad company, and it is known that from fifty to one hundred people a day walk upon the track, and the cars are not usually sent this way, is such gross and wilful negligence that the railroad company will be liable for a child killed by a car thus kicked, —especially where two of them were kicked on parallel tracks at the same time, —although the child had no right to use the track. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Railroads; duty as to sidewalk at crossing. 170
Right to open highway across. 183
Duty as to licensees on track. 855

RATIFICATION. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4.

RECEIPT. See also ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conclusiveness of. 171

RECEIVERS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 8; CORPORATIONS, 88; COURTS, 6.

1. A loan by a bank to an embarrassed telegraph company which is in pressing need of $1 L. R. A.

money to meet its current expenses, and which uses the money in paying debts of a character for which receivers' certificates were authorized to be issued, will not give the bank a lien on the assets superior to a first mortgage on the property, if neither the bank nor the persons who were paid out of the loan obtained receivers' certificates. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Bankers' & N. Teleg. Co. (N. Y.) 403

2. A claim for rent for property leased to a corporation which has been placed in the hands of a receiver, in a suit in which the lessor joins, which accrues subsequently to his appointment, cannot be made a preferred claim against the funds in his hands, unless he in fact adopts the lease. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knorrville Car Wheel Co. (Tenn.) 593

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also COURTS.

Receivers; effect of order appointing; attachment of assets. 405

REFERENCE. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 10.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

The majority of the members of a Free Will Baptist society cannot against the will of the minority transfer property obtained for the use and benefit of that denomination, which holds the doctrines of Arminius, to the Baptist denomination, which is Calvinistic, notwithstanding a provision in the manual of church government of the Free Baptist denomination to the effect that a church in good standing may have a letter of dismission and recommendation to another evangelical denomination, as this appears to refer to the church as an ecclesiastical, rather than as a purely legal, body. Park v. Champlin (Iowa) 141

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Religious societies; rights of factions as to property. 141

REMAINDER. See ADVERSE POSSESSION; WILLS, 5.

REMEDY. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

REPLEVIN. See ACTION OR SUIT, 4.

RESUME.

For résumé of contents of book, see 865

REVIEW. See JUDGMENT, 5.

SAVINGS BANKS. See BANKS, 4; WILLS, 2.

SCHOOLS. See BONDS, 1; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13; TAXES, 2-4, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

The constitutional protection against unreasonable seizures is violated by entering a private inclosure and taking away from the possession of the owner under order of court a wrecked boiler, engine, and other materials for use as exhibits on a prosecution of another person for criminal negligence in causing the explosion of the boiler. Newberry v. Carpenter (Mich.) 163

SEAT OF GOVERNMENT. See CAPITAL, NOTES AND BRIEFS; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3-5; CONTRACTS, 1.

SEDUCTION.

A betrothed person has no right of action for the seduction or alienation of the affections of his affianced. Case v. Smith (Mich.) 282

SEIZURE. See SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

SERVICE. See WRIT AND PROCESS.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.
See also PLEADING, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As ground of injunction against judgment when it existed before its rendition. 747

SHIPPING. See ADMIRALTY.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

A contract to give a minority stockholder the right to control the stock of another and vote it at a stockholders' meeting, for the sole purpose of securing control of the corporation by the use of such stock, will not be specifically enforced in equity. Gage v. Fisher (N. D.) 557

STATE. See ACTION OR SUIT, 1; ATTORNEY GENERAL; COURTS, 2; INJUNCTION, 13.

STATE CAPITAL. See CAPITAL; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8-5; CONTRACTS, 1.

STATUTE. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 18; INJUNCTION, 10-12; PRIVACY, 3.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See CONTRACTS, 3-6.

STATUTES. See also COMMON LAW, 1.

1. The construction placed upon a statute penal in character by public officers charged with the duty of executing its provisions for many years may properly be considered in determining the legislative intention. People v. Adelphi Club (N. Y.) 510

2. A practical interpretation of a statute, accepted as correct for nearly three quarters of a century, is entitled to respectful consideration by the courts. Brown v. Foster (Me.) 116

3. The re-enactment of the New York civil service law after the adoption of the Constitution of 1894 is not necessary in order to make it applicable to the department of public works, to which it could not apply under the Constitution in force when the act was passed, as the new Constitution not only adopts the principle of the law, but declares "such acts of the legislature . . . as are now in force shall be and continue the law of this state subject to such alterations as the legislature shall make." People, McClelland, v. Roberts (N. Y.) 399

4. A statute for the annexation of territory to all cities having more than a specified population is within a constitutional provision against local legislation, when there is but one city in the state to which it can apply. State, West, v. Des Moines (Iowa) 186

31 L. R. A.

5. An act providing for annexation to a city is one for the incorporation of a city within the meaning of a constitutional provision against local or special laws for this purpose. Id.

6. Pool selling is the only form of betting or wager that is punishable by a statute which prohibits bets and wagers of all kinds, but the title of which is "An Act to Prevent Pool Selling, etc." Ex parte Lacy (Va.) 822

7. The words "and so forth" in the title of a statute cannot supply an omission when the title is less comprehensive than the body of the statute. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; sufficiency of title; embracing more than one object. 823

STIPULATION. See COURTS, 4.

STOCK. See CORPORATIONS; GIFT, 2-4; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

STOLEN PROPERTY. See CORPORATIONS, 16.

STREET RAILWAYS. See also CARRIERS, 11; ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLICATIONS, 5-7, 9.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability for negligence as to dangerous electric currents on wires, see ELECTRICAL USES.

SUBROGATION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INSURANCE.

To party who has paid debts. 405

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS. See also TRIAL, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction as to judgment by or against surety in. 63

SUNDAY. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6, 22.

The fact that forfeits were deposited on Sunday to bind the parties to an agreement which was invalid because made on that day does not give one of them any right to recover his deposit after the holder has executed the transaction on a subsequent day by delivering the forfeit to the other party before he was notified not to do so. Thornhill v. O'Rear (Ala.) 792

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sunday; validity of Sunday law; class legislation. 689

TAXES. See also CONTRACTS, 14; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 12, 13; COUNTIES; INJUNCTION, 17.

1. The requirement of Ky. Stat. § 4228, that every foreign building and loan association doing business within the state shall pay into the treasury annually 2 per cent of its annual gross receipts, does not violate Ky. Const. § 174, requiring all nonexempt property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations, to be uniformly taxed in proportion to its value, but providing that nothing shall prevent a taxation based on "franchises." Southern Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Norman (Ky.) 41

2. A school district cannot, if it can recover at all, recover from another district which has collected taxes upon lands within the former, through a mistake of the clerk as to the location of the lands, a greater sum than it would have collected had there been no mistake. Walser v. Board of Education (Ill.) 329

3. A school district cannot recover from another district which has collected taxes upon lands within the former, through a mistake of the clerk as to the location of the lands, any of the taxes so collected, although the rate per cent of the tax as extended in the former was thereby made greater than it otherwise would have been, where the full amount of the levy made by its board of education was collected, as the district does not become a trustee for one taxpayer of an excessive amount collected from another. Id.

4. Taxpayers in one school district who voluntarily pay a tax for another district levied by mistake upon their lands cannot recover back the amount paid, where the books were kept open for inspection by them, and the means of knowledge existed to learn and know all the facts, although they supposed that they were paying the tax of the district in which their lands were situated. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; for what purpose authorized. 215

Right to recover on payment to wrong school district. 329

TELEGRAPHS. See ELECTRICAL USES, NOTES AND BRIEFS; RECEIVERS.

TELEPHONES. See also ELECTRICAL USES, 7.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability for negligence as to dangerous electric currents on wires, see ELECTRICAL USES.

TERRITORIAL COURTS. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 2.

TRADEMARK.

1. Prior use of a name by other persons is sufficient to defeat a trademark, although it was not a commercial use and was only for a short period, if it was such that the name had already become extensively recognized and well known before it was claimed as a trademark. Hoyt v. J. T. Lovett Co. (C. C. App. 3d C.) 44

2. The words "Green Mountain" cannot be appropriated by an individual as a trademark for grape vines and grapes which are the natural product of the Green Mountains, to the exclusion of others who deal in similar articles originating in the same locality. Id.

3. An organic article which by the law of its nature is reproductive, and derives its chief value from its innate vital powers independently of the care, management, or ingenuity of man,—such as seeds, plants, or vines,—cannot be the subject of a trademark so as to prevent the use of the name of the parent stock by any person cultivating and selling its products. Id.
81 L. R. A.

4. The words "fireproof oil" cannot be claimed as a trademark for an illuminating oil, since the words are descriptive of oil which is not inflammable although it is not literally proof against fire. Scott v. Standard Oil Co. (Ala.) 374

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trademark; validity of. 374

TRADENAME. See also CORPORATIONS, 7.

A purchaser of the assets and goodwill of a trading partnership upon a sale either by the partners directly or through a receiver or a corporation organized by him to carry on the business, and to which he transfers the property, is entitled to make use of the firm name for the purpose of continuing the business as its successor. Snyder Mfg. Co. v. Snyder (Ohio) 657

TREES. See TRESPASS.

TRESPASS. See also ANIMALS, 1.

The unreasonable cutting or trimming of trees on a sidewalk by employees who have authority to cut or trim trees so far as is necessary in removing telephone wires which they have been lawfully ordered to remove will not sustain an action of trespass by the abutting lot owners against the employer. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Francis (Ala.) 193

TRIAL. See also EVIDENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A summary proceeding for a restraining order against carrying on a business declared by the legislature to be a common nuisance is not a case within the scope of the constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury. Ex parte Keeler (S. C.) 678

2. A person who has a fixed opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a person charged as principal in a crime is not a competent juror upon the trial of one charged as accessory. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

Questions for jury.

3. The extent of the intoxication of a passenger, the conductor's knowledge of his condition, and the safety of the place at which he was ejected, are questions for the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson (Ala.) 372

4. The exercise of due care or caution in boarding an electric street car while in motion is a question for the jury. Cicero & P. R. Co. v. Meizner (Ill.) 331

5. Carrying a lighted coal-oil lamp into a cellar, with knowledge that a large amount of illuminating gas has escaped therein, and the lighting of matches therein, do not, as a matter of law, preclude recovery for injuries from explosion of such gas, where it is not certain that the explosion was the result thereof, but the lapse of time and other circumstances admit of a finding that it might have been due to other causes, and the question is for the jury. Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker (Md.) 785

6. The liability of cattle to communicate a disease cannot be assumed as matter of law, on account of the fact that they came from a particular locality. Clarendon Land I. & A. Co. v. McClelland (Tex.) 669

Instructions.

7. An instruction, the substance of which is contained in an instruction given, is properly refused. Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (S. C.) 577

8. The trial judge is not required to strike out from a request to charge a part which renders it defective, and charge the remainder. Id.

9. A general request to put an instruction in writing does not cover a remark of the court in response to a remark of counsel in his argument. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 465

10. The court cannot instruct the jury as to what weight should be given to testimony, even if it relates to admissions of the accused. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

11. An instruction in a criminal case depending upon circumstantial evidence, that the jury must not be "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each link in the chain of circumstances" relied upon to establish guilt, but that it is sufficient if they are "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty,"—is erroneous. Id.

12. A statement by the court that great "bodily injury" is a "felony committed on the person" is erroneous. The question must to a great extent be left to the judgment of the jury. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 465

13. An instruction requested by a carrier, comparing the injuries received by a passenger on a baggage car and those to which a passenger would have been liable in a regular passenger coach, is properly refused. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Swann (Md.) 313

14. An instruction that no blame would attach to defendant from the falling of a wire charged with electricity and its remaining on the ground in a public thoroughfare, unless it was allowed for an unreasonable time to remain there "after notice," is properly refused. Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (S. C.) 577

15. An instruction that if a "cyclone that could not be anticipated or reasonably foreseen" was the cause of the fall of a wire charged with electricity, and defendant company was not negligent in allowing it to remain for an unreasonable time, it would not be liable,—is not misleading where the judge also instructs that, if the accident was due to the wires being improperly erected or maintained or to their being allowed to remain on the streets an unusually long time, the company would be liable. Id.

16. An instruction that a company maintaining an electric wire carrying a dangerous current, over a public street or alley, is not an insurer of the safety of passersby, but in constructing its line and maintaining the same is bound to the utmost degree of care and diligence,—that is to the highest degree of care, skill, and diligence,—so as to make the same safe against accidents so far as such safety can be by the use of such care and diligence be secured,—is not erroneous, although it is better to instruct the jury that the company is bound 31 L. R. A.

to exercise that reasonable care and caution which would be exercised by a reasonably cautious and prudent person under the same circumstances. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 566

Submission of questions.

17. There is no abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a submission which is claimed to have been made under the mistaken belief that no answer had been filed, where, although the answer was not filed on the day it was due, it had been on file for several months, which fact by the exercise of ordinary diligence could have been discovered by counsel before entering the order of submission. Payton v. McQuown (Ky.) 33

18. Giving or withholding from the jury questions for special findings of fact is within the discretion of the trial court, under Colo. Code 1887, § 199, providing that in any case in which the jury render a general verdict they may be required by the court to find specially upon any particular questions of facts, to be stated to them in writing. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 566

USAGE. See CUSTOM.

USURY.

The defense of usury cannot be set up by an assignee for certain creditors among whom is not included the one claiming the usurious debt, where the assignee has no property chargeable with the payment of that debt in common with others, and the assets coming to him will not be affected by the fact that such usury does or does not exist. Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.) 706

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Usury; to bar remedy in equity. 706

VETERINARY SURGEON. See DISCOVERY.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

1. The official announcement of the result of an election by the proper canvassing board is of binding force as to the fact of an actual election, until reversed or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. State, Lamar, v. Johnson (Fla.) 357

2. A statute making it an indictable offense to vote without presenting to the judges of election an original poll-tax receipt, or a certified duplicate copy thereof, or a certificate of a constable or deputy collector or else an affidavit of the voter that he has paid his poll tax and that his receipt is lost or misplaced, is within the power of the legislature, even as applied to a voter who has actually paid his poll tax, where the Constitution requires "satisfactory evidence" of such payment, and also gives the legislature power to enact laws "to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box." State v. Old (Tenn.) 837

WAGES. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

WATERS—WRIT AND PROCESS.

WATERS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 28; CONTRACTS, 15; INJUNCTION, 3, 4.

1. An island formed in a navigable river where land has been washed away years before does not belong to the owner of the remainder of the tract, unless the formation of the island is made by accretions beginning at the water line of his remaining land. Wallace v. Driver (Ark.) 317

2. Deepening the natural line of drainage at the outlet of a pond or marsh fed entirely by surface water, without doing anything more than is necessary in the interests of good husbandry, does not constitute a cause of action in favor of the owner of lower lands on which the water will be more liable to overflow or will overflow in greater quantities in case of unusually heavy rains, where it does not appear that he cannot protect himself at small expense compared with the benefits resulting to the upper proprietor from the improved drainage of his lands. Gilfillan v. Schmidt (Minn.) 547

3. Water need not be furnished without pay by an incorporated board of water commissioners having no source of revenue for the running expenses of the waterworks except the water rates, to a house of correction which is under the control, for the most part, of a board of inspectors, and not of the city council, although the city is obliged to pay the expenses so far as they exceed the earnings of the institution, since any such burden should be laid upon the whole body of taxpayers of the city, and not upon those only who are private consumers of water. Detroit v. Board of Water Comrs. (Mich.) 463

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; right to land made by accretion. 317
Rights as to surface waters. 547

WILLS. See also DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 4.

1. Children cannot be deprived of their rights in property given them by will, by the fact that a contract by the testator to give property to their father, which was not carried out, is enforced against the estate. Nowack v. Berger (Mo.) 810

2. An entry of an account in a savings bank, in the names of husband and wife, subject to the order of either and to survivorship on the death of either, made by a transfer of funds from a former account in the name of the husband alone, but designating his wife as the person to whom payment should be made in the event of his absence or death, makes the new account entirely separate and distinct, so that the testamentary character of the old account will not inhere in the new one and make it admissible to probate. Metropolitan Sav. Bank v. Murphy (Md.) 454

3. Testator's intent that the heirs are to be ascertained by the statute in force when the executory devise take effect appears where a devise giving the fee to daughters provides that if they leave no surviving issue the estate "on their decease" shall be divided among his 31 L. R. A.

heirs at law according to the statute of descents, their heirs and assigns forever,—especially where there would be at his death but one heir recognized by law besides the daughters, because of the alienage of a son who was nevertheless recognized by the will as a beneficiary. De Wolf v. Middleton (R. I.) 146

4. Other devisees must contribute to make up a deficit in a devise caused by a widow's election to take dower instead of a gift under the will, where the refused share of the widow given to the disappointed devisee is not sufficient to supply the loss to such devisee. Latta v. Brown (Tenn.) 840

5. The right of remaindermen to be accelerated and immediately to enter upon and enjoy the use of land devised subject to a widow's life estate, which arises when she refuses to take under the will, is subject to the superior right of a disappointed devisee whose share is diminished by the widow's election to have compensation for such loss by taking the life interest which the widow refused. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; deficit caused by widow's election; accelerating remaindermen. 840

WITNESSES.

1. A judge cannot testify as a witness in a criminal trial over which he is presiding, under Sand. & H. (Ark.) Dig. § 2965, providing that the judge may be called as a witness by either party, but that in such case it is in the discretion of the court to order the trial to take place before another judge or jury. Rogers v. State (Ark.) 465

2. A party to a contract with a deceased person, as well as to a cause of action against his estate, is incompetent to testify in the case. Nowack v. Berger (Mo.) 810

3. The credibility of a witness cannot be impeached by showing that she was addicted to the morphine habit, unless it is shown that she was under the influence of the drug when the incident occurred of which she has testified at the trial, or unless her memory is impaired. State v. Gleim (Mont.) 294

4. A defendant in a criminal case cannot be questioned as to matters wholly remote from the question of guilt or innocence of the crime charged, so as to amount to a general assault upon his character. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Witnesses; competency of judge as witness in a cause on trial before him:—(I.) Rule as to judges; (II.) justices of peace. 465

WORLD'S FAIR. See COUNTIES.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Service of process on the persons who were last elected president and secretary of a corporation which has been defunct for several years, and one of whom has claimed to be the sole stockholder and owner of the assets, where they appear and answer in a suit to wind up its affairs, must be regarded as having been made on them officially as well as individually. Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.) 706

W
f
H
t
t e r

